The judgment under the first two counts of the information and the order denying the motion for new trial under those two counts are affirmed. The judgment under the third count whereby appellant was adjudged guilty of offering the forged will in evidence in the probate proceeding is reversed, with directions to the trial court to proceed with a new trial on this count if the district attorney of San Bernardino county be so advised.

BLACK v. BRUNDIGE et al.

Civ. 8285.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 2, 1932.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing Oct. 1, 1932. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 31, 1932.

1. Partnership ⇐29.

Contract provision that contract shall not constitute partnership is not conclusive as to partnership's existence (Civ. Code, § 2395 [repealed, St. 1929, p. 1896]).

2. Partnership ⇐30.

Provision for sharing certain profits as compensation for one party's use of another's money does not of itself determine that "partnership" exists (Civ. Code, § 2395 [repealed, St. 1929, p. 1896]).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Partnership," see Words and Phrases.]

3. Partnership ⇐218(3).

Whether partnership existed held question of fact for trial court (Civ. Code, § 2395 [repealed, St. 1929, p. 1896]).

4. Partnership ⇐55.

Evidence held to sustain finding that no partnership existed between builder and lender of money for purchasing lots (Civ. Code, § 2395 [repealed, St. 1929, p. 1896]).

While certain conduct of builder and lender, subsequent to execution of agreement, was in harmony with alleged partnership relation, by far the more substantial portion was inconsistent therewith. Under agreement, lender agreed to acquire lots in builder's name and did acquire them for $19,500, and builder agreed to finance building of houses by means of first mortgages upon lots and improvements and to pay to lender $5,000 from proceeds of sale of each of five lots, such indebtedness to be evidenced by deeds of trust. About four months after money had been provided for purchase of property and deeds had been executed in favor of builder, the builder and wife executed instrument declaring that spouses relinquished any community rights in the property, and that builder held property in trust for lender.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James W. Bartlett, Judge.

Consolidated actions by E. E. Black (doing business as the Black Lumber Company) and others, against Roy S. Brundige and Ludwig G. B. Erb. Judgment was had in favor of plaintiffs against defendant Brundige alone, and was refused against defendant Erb, and plaintiffs appeal.

BEAUMONT, Justice pro tem.

In 1925 Roy S. Brundige was a builder of houses in the vicinity of Los Angeles. There were five lots in Beverly Hills he believed desirable for his business. The value of these lots was $25,000, but they could be purchased for $19,750 cash. He interviewed Ludwig G. B. Erb, respondent herein, for the purpose of obtaining funds with which to buy the lots. A contract was entered into on September 16, 1925, between respondent and Brundige. This agreement stated that Brundige had applied to respondent for money with which to purchase certain lots, describing them. Respondent agreed to acquire the lots (five) in Brundige's name, for the erection of houses thereon. Brundige agreed to finance the building of the houses by means of "first" mortgages upon the lots and improvements, and further agreed to pay or cause to be paid to respondent $5,000 from the proceeds of the sale of each lot. Five promissory notes, bearing interest at 7 per cent. per annum, each secured by a trust deed, were to evidence this indebtedness. Each trust deed was to be subject to a first mortgage not to exceed $6,500. The mortgage note in each instance was to mature thirty days after the date of maturity of the note secured by the deed of trust on the same lot. The agreement contained a provision as follows: "And in further consideration, and as a further and additional compensation for the use of said money to be furnished by the said Ludwig G. B. Erb to the said Roy S. Brundige as aforesaid, it is agreed, by and between the parties hereto as follows: After the deduction of all proper charges connected with the purchase and sale of any of said lots, the first one thousand ($1,000) dollars derived from the sale of any of said residences and lots shall be paid to the said Ludwig G. B. Erb, and the next one thousand ($1,000) dollars so derived shall be paid to the said Roy S. Brundige, and thereafter out of all sums so received there shall be paid fifty (50) per cent thereof to each of the parties hereto." It was further agreed that the contract should be placed in escrow, and that the parties should execute the necessary escrow instructions to carry out the agreement. The contract also provided: "It is especially understood and agreed, by and between the parties hereto that nothing contained in this agreement shall for any purpose whatsoever be construed or interpreted to constitute a partnership between the parties." Respondent thereafter supplied the money and had five deeds covering the lots executed in favor of Brundige. Brundige then procured loans on four of the lots in the amount of $10,500 on each lot, said indebtedness being evidenced in each instance by a note secured by a deed of trust. The money was so obtained from Syndicate Company, a corporation. Four trust deeds, subject to the prior incumbrances in favor of the Syndicate Company, each securing a note payable in installments, with a fixed maturity date for the final payment, were executed by Brundige and wife in favor of respondent. Three of these trust deeds, each covering a separate lot, were dated January 14, 1926, and recorded January 16, 1926. Each was for $5,000. The fourth described the two lots remaining, secured a note for $10,000 payable to respondent, and was recorded November 28, 1925.

On October 24, 1925, Roy S. Brundige and Claudia A. Brundige, his wife, executed an instrument designated "Affidavit and Relinquishment." This stated that the lots above mentioned had been conveyed "to facilitate and make possible a profit to be derived by the said Roy S. Brundige from the construction of residences thereon and subsequent sale thereof," and that they had been purchased from funds of respondent. It further declared that "Whereas, the said Roy S. Brundige and Claudia A. Brundige are husband and wife; and whereas, we jointly and severally desire to relinquish any and all community or other rights in and to said lots or improvements erected or to be erected. * * *" Then follows the statement that the property was acquired and was being held as Roy S. Brundige's separate property in trust for respondent, and that the Brundiges had no interest in the funds with which it was acquired; that the lots were acquired for the sole purpose of carrying out the terms of the agreement, and that they had no interest in or claim to the said property.

After the arrangements provided for in the escrow instructions were completed, the deeds were delivered to Brundige and subsequently recorded. The proceeds from the deeds of trust were paid to Brundige. He had the sole control thereof and made all disbursements. The cost of the construction of each house was about $20,000. The original plan had called for the expenditure of only $7,500. This appears to have been the basis for procuring larger sums under the first trust deeds than originally agreed upon. Respondent gave no instructions concerning operations. Brundige had sole charge of the construction of the buildings. Certain materials were purchased on credit. The credit arrangements were made solely by Brundige. No credit was sought or given because of respondent's connection with the situation. All labor was hired by Brundige and all materials were purchased in his name. Respondent's name did not appear in any of the transactions, nor does it appear that he had been consulted about any of these. Each lot on which a house was erected had a sign on it with the following: "Open for inspection. Built by Roy S. Brundige." Brundige apparently encountered financial difficulties in this building operation and it became necessary for him to refinance it. He arranged to do this. Respondent released his trust deeds in order that Brundige might obtain additional money for his construction work. The sum of $25,000 was so obtained from Standard Mortgage Corporation. Brundige then paid respondent $9,750, and he and his wife executed two notes, one for $6,000 and another for $4,000, secured by trust deeds on the property, in favor of respondent. The two trust deeds were recorded. The cash thus received and the two notes represented the amount respondent had actually advanced in Brundige's behalf. Respondent wrote a letter from New York, about May 13, 1926, addressed to Brundige, in which he referred to the houses in question as "our houses." Appellant Black testified that Brundige introduced respondent to him, calling respondent his partner. Brundige testified, in substance, that he did not remember whether or not he had done this and explained by saying that he had referred to respondent as an "associate, or partner or a man interested with me"; and that he had never considered him such. He also testified there was no understanding between him and respondent that respondent should pay any part of the losses that might result from these building operations.

This action, though originally one for foreclosure of materialmen's liens and for the recovery of the value of materials furnished Brundige and respondent as partners, was tried solely on the latter basis, the lien claims having been eliminated by stipulation. Judgment was had against defendant Brundige alone. The court found there was no partnership existing between Brundige and respondent. This appeal is taken solely on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to sustain this finding.

[1, 2] We have before us a contract that clearly provided there was to be no partnership. This provision, however, is not conclusive that there was no partnership. "Mere words will not blind us to realities." Martin v. Peyton, 246 N. Y. 213, 158 N. E. 77, 78. There is a provision for sharing certain profits as compensation for the use of respondent's money. This of itself does not determine that a partnership existed. In O. Krenz C. & B. Wks., Inc., v. England, 109 Cal. App. 747, the court at page 752, 293 P. 689, 692 said: "Moreover, it has been held that it is the sharing of profits as such [italics ours] which constitutes prima facie evidence of a partnership, and that the relation is not established by a mere promise to pay a share of the profits as compensation for services (Coward v. Clanton, supra [122 Cal. 451, 55 P. 147]), or for the use of property (Nofsinger v. Goldman, 122 Cal. 609, 55 P. 425; Vanderhurst v. De Witt, 95 Cal. 57, 20 L. R. A. 595, 30 P. 94). * * *" "Passing on the contract as a whole, an arrangement for sharing profits is to be considered. It is to be given its due weight. But it is to be weighed in connection with all the rest. It is not decisive. It may be merely the method adopted to pay a debt or wages, as interest on a loan or for other reasons." Martin v. Peyton, supra.

Referring to the Code section under consideration herein (repealed, St. 1929, p. 1896), the court in Martin v. Sharp & Fellows C. Co., 34 Cal. App. 584, 588, 168 P. 373, said: "By section 2395 of the Civil Code, a partnership is defined to be 'the association of two or more persons, for the purpose of carrying on business together, and dividing its profits between them.' Under this definition, a mere participation in profit and loss does not necessarily constitute a partnership, for, as said in Dwinel v. Stone, 30 Me. 384, 'there must be such a community of interest as empowers each party to make contracts, incur liabilities, manage the whole business, * * * a right which, upon the dissolution of the partnership by death of one, passes to the survivor, and not to the representatives of the deceased.' To like effect are Coward v. Clanton, 122 Cal. 451, 55 P. 147, Vanderhurst v. De Witt, 95 Cal. 57, 20 L. R. A. 595, 30 P. 94, and Nofsinger v. Goldman, 122 Cal. 609, 55 P. 425, in the former of which it is said that profit sharing is not the true test of partnership. The association must be for the purpose of jointly carrying on the business." To the same effect are O. Krenz C. & B. Wks., Inc., v. England, supra, and the cases therein cited.

Appellant contends that the instrument designated "Affidavit and Relinquishment" showed that the intention of the parties from the first was to establish a partnership, and that a partnership was in fact created; that if this is not true, the latter instrument created a partnership relation. We believe this contention is not successfully maintained. At the time of the execution of this instrument, the carrying out of the terms of the contract was in abeyance. Respondent had provided the money for the purchase of the property, $19,750, and the deeds had been executed in favor of Brundige. This status prevailed for about four months. Respondent had Brundige and wife execute the instrument as a matter of precaution until the arrangements were completed. This may not have been necessary, as appellant argues, but respondent deemed it a proper precautionary measure. Brundige's testimony was that respondent's attorney "mentioned the fact that I held title to the property, to those lots, in myself and my wife's name, but that it may be possible for my wife to claim a community ownership, in case anything happens to me she may claim owning the property." When said arrangements were completed and the deeds to Brundige were recorded, then respondent had his trust deeds recorded, thus securing the payment of the amounts provided for in the original agreement.

[3, 4] Certain conduct of Brundige and respondent subsequent to the execution of the agreement is in harmony with the alleged partnership relation, but by far the more substantial portion is inconsistent therewith. Whether or not a partnership existed was a question of fact for the trial court. Stenian v. Tashjian, 178 Cal. 623, 174 P. 883; Dennis

v. Kolm, 131 Cal. 91, 63 P. 141; O. Krenz C. & B. Wks., Inc., v. England, supra. Viewing the evidence as a whole, we cannot say it is insufficient to sustain the finding attacked.

Civ. 8328.

Aug. 23, 1932.

1. Gifts ⇐28(3).

Life insurance policy may be made subject of gift, and donee may acquire vested interest therein.

2. Gifts ⇐28(3).

Gift of life insurance policy must meet all requirements of law in regard to making of gift (Civ. Code, § 1147).

3. Gifts ⇐45.

One seeking to establish validity of parol gift must allege facts which, if proved, would tend to establish all elements of completed gift (Civ. Code, § 1147).

4. Gifts ⇐49(1).

Claim to gift asserted for first time after alleged donor's death is received with caution.

5. Gifts ⇐49(1), 82(1).

Donee must establish completed gift by clear and convincing evidence, whether it be gift inter vivos or causa mortis.

6. Gifts ⇐15, 18(1).

There can be no gift without intention to give, and delivery, either actual or constructive, of thing given.

7. Appeal and error ⇐900.

On appeal, every presumption is in favor of regularity of judgment.

8. Appeal and error ⇐909(5).

Where judgment was for subsequent beneficiary of life policy, appellate court held required, in absence of showing to contrary, to assume that insured reserved right to change beneficiary.

9. Insurance ⇐586.

Where life policy reserves right to insured to change beneficiary, interest of designated beneficiary prior to insured's death is mere expectancy of incompleted gift, subject to revocation at insured's will.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; C. J. Goodell, Judge.

Action by Louis Lo Presti against Catherine C. Manning and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

J. Maxwell Peyser, of San Francisco, for appellant.

H. A. Van Der Zee, of San Francisco, for respondents.

LAMBERSON, Justice pro tem.

The action is one to recover proceeds of life insurance policies in the sum of $5,000.

The second amended complaint sets forth two causes of action. In the first it is alleged that the plaintiff was the father of Marion Thomas Lo Presti, who died on May 22, 1930, leaving a widow, the defendant Margaret M. Lo Presti; that the defendant, Catherine C. Manning, is the mother of said Margaret M. Lo Presti; that on the 26th day of May, 1930, said defendants received the sum of $5,000 from the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, for the use and benefit of plaintiff, who has made demand for the payment of the same to himself, such demand being refused.

The second cause of action repeats the allegations of the first, and then alleges in substance that the deceased entered the employ of the Howard Automobile Company, a corporation, in November, 1923, and thereupon became insured as an employee of said corporation under a form of group insurance; that appellant was named as the beneficiary in the policies or certificates of assurance, and it was agreed between decedent, his employer, and the Equitable Life Assurance Society, that said beneficiary, upon the death of the insured, would receive the sum of $5,000; that thereafter said certificates remained with, and were held under the control of, the Howard Automobile Company, and were effective only so long as decedent remained in the employ of said corporation, and at no time would the decedent ever have or receive manual possession of said certificates; that at and after the time of the issuance of certificates of assurance, Marion Thomas Lo Presti, by parol gift, transferred and assigned all his right, title, and interest in the certificates to plaintiff, who has ever since been the owner thereof; that in December, 1929, the insured became seriously ill and was removed to a hospital; then to the home of defendants, with whom he lived until his death. Then follow allegations of fraud and undue influence, practiced by defendants upon the insured during his illness, by which defendants induced and procured the insured to sign an "Assignment of Beneficiary." Among other matters, the complaint alleges that the policies were at all times, prior to the transfer, in the custody and control of defendant Margaret M. Lo Presti, and on April 4, 1930, she presented the certificates so assigned to the assurance society with intent to defraud plaintiff of his rights, and thereafter, on May 26, 1930, received the sum named in the certificates from said society; that, had it not been for the false and fraudulent acts, conduct, and representations of the defendants, who unduly influenced the mind of the decedent, the beneficiary would not have been changed, and such transfer of the beneficiary was without the consent of plaintiff.

The respondents demurred to the amended complaint upon the ground that neither of the causes of action set forth therein stated a cause of action, and that the allegations of the complaint were uncertain. The court sustained the demurrer with leave to amend. Plaintiff and appellant declined to avail himself of the opportunity to amend, and from the judgment thereafter entered in favor of defendants has perfected this appeal.

[1, 2] While a life insurance policy may be made the subject of a gift, and the beneficiary to whom the gift has been made may acquire a vested interest therein, such transaction must meet all the requirements of the law in regard to the making of a gift. A verbal gift is not valid, unless the means of obtaining possession or control of the thing are given, nor, if it is capable of delivery, unless there is an actual or symbolical delivery of the thing to the donee. Civ. Code, § 1147. As heretofore indicated, the complaint alleges that the certificates were always with and under the control of the employer of the decedent, and were effective only so long as the decedent remained in such employ; at another place, the complaint alleges that the certificates were at all times prior to the change of beneficiary in the custody and control of the defendant Margaret M. Lo Presti, who presented them to the assurance society, presumably for the purpose of having the name of the beneficiary changed.

[3-6] One seeking to establish the validity of a gift by parol must allege facts which, if proved, would tend to establish all of the elements of a completed gift, as defined in our codes. It is the policy of the law to receive with caution the claim to a gift asserted for the first time after the death of the alleged donor. It is therefore incumbent upon the donee to establish a completed gift by clear and convincing evidence, whether it be a gift inter vivos or causa mortis. There can be no gift without an intention to give, and a delivery, either actual or constructive, of the thing given. "There must be both a purpose to give and the execution of this purpose. The purpose must be expressed, either orally or in writing, and it must be executed by the actual delivery to the donee of the thing given, or of the means of getting possession and enjoyment thereof. It is the fact of delivery that converts the unexecuted and revocable purpose into an executed and complete gift." Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company v. Clark, 81 Cal. App. 546, 551, 254 P. 306, 308.

The allegations of the complaint do not meet the foregoing requirements. Not only was there not a delivery of the property, actual or symbolical, but the certificates appear to have remained either in the control of the Howard Automobile Company, or in the control of the defendant Margaret M. Lo Presti, from the date of their issuance until after the death of the assured.

In Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company v. Clark, supra, the court said: "Where the policy of insurance names a third person as beneficiary, the policy is then a contract made for the benefit of a third person, and the third person is called the 'beneficiary.' The beneficiary is not a party to the contract, and is not the owner thereof, and, where a policy of insurance reserves to the insured the right to change the beneficiary, the interest of a designated beneficiary, prior to the death of the insured, is that of a mere expectancy of an incompleted gift, subject to revocation at the will of the insured. Waring v. Wilcox [8 Cal. App. 317, 96 P. 910], supra; Hoeft v. Supreme Lodge, etc., 113 Cal. 91, 33 L. R. A. 174, 45 P. 185; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Daley, 25 Cal. App. 376, 143 P. 1033; Supreme Council, etc., v. Gehrenbeck, 124 Cal. 43, 56 P. 640; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Dunn, 46 Cal. App. 203, 188 P. 1028; McEwen v. New York Life Ins. Co., 23 Cal. App. 694, 139 P. 242; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Bank of Italy, 60 Cal. App. 602, 214 P. 61; Hopkins v. Northwestern Life Assur. Co. (C. C. A.) 99 F. 199."

[7-9] In the absence of a showing to the contrary, we must, under the rule that every presumption is in favor of the regularity of the judgment, assume that the insured reserved the right of revocation and change as to the beneficiary named. "Where a policy of life insurance reserves to the insured the right to change the beneficiary, upon written request therefor, the interest of a designated beneficiary prior to the death of the insured is that of a mere expectancy of an incompleted gift, subject to revocation at the will of the insured." McEwen v. New York Life Ins. Co., 23 Cal. App. 694, 699, 139 P. 242, 244; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Daley, 25 Cal. App. 376, 143 P. 1033; Blethen v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 198 Cal. 91, 243 P. 431.

Probably the most frequently cited case upon this subject in this state is that of Hoeft v. Supreme Lodge, K. of H., etc., supra, in which the court said: "The beneficiary's interest is the mere expectancy of an incompleted gift, which is revocable at the will of the insured, and which does not and cannot become vested as a right until fixed by his death. If it is said that a devisee under a will has, during the life of the testator, a like naked expectancy, it may be freely conceded that it is so; but to the heirs and devisees is confirmed a right of action for fraud, etc., by the provisions of the Code. Otherwise they, too, would come within the scope of the general principle that a right of action for fraud is personal and untransferable. One cannot be defrauded of that in which he has no vested right. A vested right is property, which the law protects, while a mere expectancy is not property, and therefore is not protected."

See, also, Shoudy v. Shoudy, 55 Cal. App. 447, 203 P. 437, in which the policy of insurance was actually delivered to the beneficiary.

The policy provided that the assured had the right to change the beneficiary by indorsement. The court held that the testimony fell far short of establishing in the plaintiff such a vested interest as would prevent the exercise by the assured of the right reserved to him in the policy of insurance to change the beneficiary.

We are of the opinion that the foregoing authorities support the judgment of the lower court, and that it should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

BROWN v. BROWN et al.

Civ. 932.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 22, 1932.

1. Pleading ⇐8(11).

In wife's suit to cancel husband's deed to son, allegations that property conveyed was community property held not demurrable as stating legal conclusion (Civ. Code, § 164).

2. Pleading ⇐18.

In wife's suit to cancel husband's deed to son, allegation that property was community property held not subject to special demurrer for uncertainty as to title ownership (Civ. Code, § 172a).

Such allegation was not subject to attack for uncertainty as to whether title was in husband or in husband and wife, because such objection goes to the failure to allege facts rather than to uncertainty, and because the failure of the wife to disclose in whom the record title to the property stood was not a defect fatal to her cause of action, since she is entitled to the aid of equity to protect her inchoate expectancy in community real property, irrespective of whether record title was in her husband alone or in both her husband and herself.

3. Pleading ⇐192(2).

Failure of complaint in wife's suit to cancel deed to community property to allege facts that would enable defendant to raise statutory bar by demurrer rather than by answer held not ground of demurrer (Civ. Code, § 172a).

4. Husband and wife ⇐267(8).

For statute to bar wife's suit to avoid husband's instrument affecting community property after instrument was recorded for year, title to community property must stand in husband alone (Civ. Code, § 172a).

5. Appeal and error ⇐1040(10).

Failure to sustain objection to immaterial allegation respecting homestead declaration in wife's suit to cancel husband's deed to community property held not reversible error (Civ. Code, § 172a).

6. Appeal and error ⇐1039(15).

Defendant could not complain of court's permitting codefendant to withdraw answer, where defendant had already defaulted and asked for no relief after judgment.

7. Appeal and error ⇐879.

Errors complained of by purchaser from defendant in suit to cancel deed, having notice of action, and not having endeavored to make himself party to record, held not reviewable (Code Civ. Proc. § 409).

Action by Alta Blanche Brown against George B. Brown, A. F. Brown, and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants A. F. Brown and another appeal.

Affirmed.

A. F. Brown and J. Edgar Ross, in pro. per.

Ray D. Johnson, of El Centro, for respondents.

JENNINGS, J.

This action was instituted by plaintiff for the purpose of securing a decree canceling a certain deed executed by her husband, George B. Brown, to his son, A. F. Brown. It is alleged in the complaint that plaintiff and her husband, who was joined as a defendant in the action, have been the owners in fee simple of the real property covered by the deed at all times since January 27, 1926, the date of their marriage; that said real estate was at all times since the date of marriage the community property of plaintiff and her husband; that the husband alone executed the deed whose cancellation is sought; and that the said deed was recorded in the office of the county recorder of Imperial county, the county wherein the real estate is situated. To the complaint thus drawn defendant A. F. Brown, grantee named in the deed, interposed a demurrer, both general and special. This demurrer was overruled, and, the demurrant having failed to answer, judgment was entered decreeing the deed executed by the husband to be void, and that the property sought to be conveyed thereby is community property of plaintiff and her husband. From the judgment thus rendered, defendant A. F. Brown and J. Edgar Ross, to whom A. F. Brown had conveyed the property subsequent to the institution of this action by plaintiff, have prosecuted this appeal. The appeal is presented on the judgment roll alone.

[1] Appellant A. F. Brown complains that the court erred in overruling the demurrer interposed by him to respondent's complaint. Inasmuch as no answer was filed by this appellant, and consequently no trial on the merits resulted, this court has no guide other than the complaint itself by which to determine whether it is so radically defective that it fails to support the judgment or is so uncertain, ambiguous, and unintelligible as to render its meaning incapable of ascertainment. Hawley Bros. v. Brownstone, 123 Cal. 643, 647, 56 P. 468. As heretofore noted, the complaint alleges (1) that plaintiff and her husband, at all times since a certain date, have been wife and husband; (2) that, at all times since the date of marriage they have been the owners in fee simple of the real property to which the deed was executed; (3) "that said property has been at all times since the said 27th day of January, 1926, the community property of said plaintiff and the defendant George B. Brown." It is contended that the last-mentioned allegation is vulnerable to the attack made upon it by appellant's demurrer. This demurrer launched a special attack upon the complaint for uncertainty in failing to set out facts from which it can be ascertained whether or not the property possesses the character of community property and whether record title to the property was held by the husband alone or by husband and wife. The principal objection to the allegation that the described property is community property is that the allegation is the statement of a purely legal conclusion and not a statement of ultimate fact. Authority is not wanting to sustain the contention thus advanced. In Dye v. Dye, 11 Cal. 163, it was held that a demurrer was properly sustained to a complaint by a wife against her husband for a division of common property which contained the bare allegation that the property described in the complaint was common property. The court expressed the opinion that the allegation amounted to no more than the statement of a legal conclusion. In arriving at its decision, the court cited certain decisions of the courts of the state of New York wherein it was held that the bare allegation of ownership of property without the statement of any facts conveying information as to the manner by which the pleader became the owner amounted to the statement of a conclusion of law, and was therefore fatally defective. The correctness of the decision in Dye v. Dye, supra, was questioned in Gimmy v. Doane, 22 Cal. 635, 638, where, in an action brought by a wife to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance of property by the husband to his mother, the complaint merely stated that the property was common property without stating the particular facts showing that it was entitled to such character. In affirming a judgment in the wife's favor, the court said that: "Where a statute gives a right of action, where none existed before, the complaint in such case should show 'that the offense or act charged to have been committed or omitted by the defendant is within the provisions of the statute, and all the circumstances necessary to support the action must be alleged,'" but that the rule requiring averment of all circumstances entitling the complainant to the benefit of a statute does not apply to statutes regulating the rights of persons to property and not relating to remedies, and that the statute prescribing what shall be common property is a mere regulation of a right of property, and cannot properly be said to provide a new right of action. It must, however, be observed that in Gimmy v. Doane, supra, the court took occasion to remark that the objection to the averment respecting the character of the property should have been taken by demurrer as was done in Dye v. Dye, supra, which would have enabled the plaintiff to amend, and that, not having been so taken, it came too late on appeal from a judgment rendered upon a trial of the case on the merits. Section 164, Civil Code, provides that all real property in California acquired by either spouse or by both after marriage other than real estate acquired by either spouse by gift, devise, or descent is community property. This statute is purely declaratory of property rights, and does not attempt to provide a right of action. The reasoning of the court in Gimmy v. Doane, supra, is therefore well in point upon the objection of appellant A. F. Brown that the court erred in overruling his demurrer. Furthermore, we are of the opinion that, in an equitable action brought by a wife for the purpose of protecting her expectancy in community property, the question of the character of the property which she seeks to have restored to the community is one of ultimate fact, depending for its solution upon the existence of purely probative facts respecting the time and manner of its acquisition. In Payne & Dewey v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 220, 242, in an action of ejectment, an allegation in the complaint that plaintiffs are the owners in fee as tenants in common, and have the lawful right and are entitled to possession of the premises, was upheld over an objection raised by demurrer that such allegation was one not of fact but of a legal conclusion. The court pointed out that seizin in the plaintiff of some estate in the premises is a necessary issuable fact that must be proved to entitle plaintiff to the relief sought. The fact of seizin is said to be the ultimate fact which must be shown to warrant recovery. This ultimate fact is to be established by proof of conveyances from a paramount source of title or by evidence of prior possession, but proof of such conveyances or of prior possession merely establishes facts contributing to the final necessary fact that the plaintiff is the owner of some estate in the premises. The rule thus established has received consistent approval by the Supreme Court of California in a long line of decisions, among which may be noted the following: Gartlan v. C. A. Hooper & Co., 177 Cal. 414, 423, 170 P. 1115; Robinson v. City of Glendale, 182 Cal. 211, 213, 187 P. 741; Cuneo v. Lawson, 203 Cal. 190, 193, 263 P. 530. It is further to be observed that the complaint in the present action contains no allegations of facts from which it is alleged that it follows that the property is community property. There is no attempt made to deraign title in respondent. The allegations are simply that respondent and her husband have owned the property at all times since the date of marriage, and that it is community property. We conclude that the allegation respecting the community character of the property was not subject to attack by general demurrer.

[2-4] We are likewise of the opinion that the above-described allegations were not subject to attack by appellant's special demurrer. Particular objection is made that the complaint is uncertain, in that it cannot be discovered whether record title to the property was in the husband or in husband and wife. Strictly speaking, the objection thus made goes to the failure to allege facts rather than to uncertainty. The failure of the complaint to disclose in whom the record title to the property stood is not a defect fatal to plaintiff's cause of action, since she is entitled to the aid of equity to protect her inchoate expectancy in community real property, irrespective of whether the record title was in her husband alone or in both her husband and herself. Section 172a, Civil Code, which declares that a wife must join with her husband in executing a deed to community real property, establishes the foundation for an action by a wife to protect her expectancy in such property. This section contains two important limitations upon the right of a wife to equitable relief where the husband alone has executed an instrument affecting the title to community real property. Both of these limitations depend upon the holding of record title to community real property by the husband alone. The first of these limitations is contained in the proviso which declares that the sole lease, contract, mortgage, or deed of the husband, holding the record title to community real property, to a lessee, purchaser, or incumbrancer, in good faith without knowledge of the marriage relation, shall be presumed to be valid. The failure of the complaint herein to disclose by whom the record title to community real property was held could not affect the rights of appellant A. F. Brown, since, in order that he should come within the protecting ægis of the proviso, it would have to appear that he was a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith without knowledge of the marriage relation. The presumption of validity declared by the proviso under consideration is a rule of evidence qualifying the wife's right to equitable relief, and places upon one who claims the benefit of it the burden of establishing the facts required to be shown in order that the presumption shall be effective as to him. The second limitation is one that affects the institution of an action to avoid any instrument executed by the husband alone affecting the title to community real property standing of record in the name of the husband alone. It provides that no such action shall be commenced after the expiration of one year from the filing for record of such instrument in the office of the county recorder in the county in which the land is situate. In order that this limitation shall be effective, therefore, it must appear that the record title to the community real property stands in the name of the husband alone. This limitation is in effect a statute of limitation, and, in accordance with a well-established rule of pleading, may be raised by demurrer where the complaint shows upon its face that the action is barred. But the failure of a complaint to allege facts that would enable a defendant to raise the bar of the statute by demurrer rather than by answer is not a valid ground of demurrer. That the complaint herein shows on its face that the cause of action is barred by section 172a, Civil Code, was made a ground for the demurrer interposed by appellant A. F. Brown, but the objection thus raised was not well taken, for the reason that the complaint did not show on its face that the title to the real property involved in this action stood in the name of the husband alone.

[5] It was also made a ground of demurrer that a paragraph of the complaint which alleged that the husband, George B. Brown, had made and recorded a homestead declaration to the property is uncertain for various reasons specified. If the allegation respecting the making and recording of the homestead declaration by the husband could be regarded as an allegation material to respondent's cause of action, more careful consideration of this ground of demurrer would be warranted. However, since it clearly appears that the complaint was one by a wife for the equitable relief afforded by section 172a, Civil Code, the allegation respecting the making and recording of a homestead declaration is superfluous and immaterial. The wife's cause of action was complete, irrespective of whether the husband had or had not properly executed and recorded in the proper county a declaration of homestead covering the property involved in this action. If, therefore, it be assumed that the objection to the allegation mentioned was valid, nevertheless, so far as this particular objection is concerned, no reversible error was committed by the trial court in declining to sustain it.

[6] It is further contended as a ground for reversal of the judgment that the court permitted the answer filed by appellant's codefendant, George B. Brown, to be withdrawn. In its findings of fact the trial court found "that defendant George B. Brown has withdrawn his answer on file herein and has petitioned this court to grant the prayer of plaintiff's complaint." In the brief of appellant it is suggested that the trial court permitted the defendant George B. Brown to withdraw his verified answer and to substitute therefor another pleading denying the truth of all the allegations contained in his answer. The record herein does not contain any such pleading as counsel for appellant maintains was permitted to be filed as a substitute for the answer. In addition to the above-quoted language of the findings, the following statement appears in the record under the title "Judgment": "And said defendant George B. Brown having heretofore filed in the record of this cause a withdrawal of his answer and in open court petitioned that the prayer of plaintiff's complaint be granted."

It is pointed out by appellant A. F. Brown that the answer originally filed by his codefendant George B. Brown contained an allegation that said defendant, in return for valuable consideration, had transferred whatever interest he had in the land to appellant more than a year prior to the filing of the action. The record appears to bear out the statement, since it is alleged in the answer originally filed by defendant George B. Brown that on the date alleged in respondent's complaint he executed and delivered, for a valuable consideration, to appellant A. F. Brown a quitclaim deed to the property which conveyed no interest other than the separate interest of defendant George B. Brown. It is said that, by its action in permitting the answer to be withdrawn without notice to appellant, the trial court lent its aid to the perpetration of a fraud upon appellant A. F. Brown, since it is contended that it is a fair assumption that this appellant relied upon the allegations contained in the answer of his codefendant when he elected to stand on his demurrer and test the sufficiency of the complaint on appeal rather than to file an answer and submit the case to trial on its merits. The important element in this line of reasoning rests in the fact that the trial court permitted the answer of appellant's codefendant to be withdrawn without notice to appellant A. F. Brown. The record shows that appellant's demurrer was overruled on December 20, 1929, and that appellant was allowed 10 days within which to answer the complaint. The judgment recites that the matter came on for hearing on February 21, 1930, and the court specifically found that the default of appellant A. F. Brown had been duly and regularly entered for failure to answer the complaint. At the time the trial court permitted the answer of defendant George B. Brown to be withdrawn, appellant A. F. Brown was in default for failure to answer, and he was not entitled to have notice of the court's action in passing upon the application of his codefendant for permission to withdraw his answer. Appellant was at liberty to stand upon his demurrer to the complaint and to test its sufficiency by appeal as he has done. He might have answered the complaint and presented his defense to the action on the merits. Even after his default to answer had been entered and judgment rendered against him, he was not foreclosed from moving the court for relief. He has done neither of these things, and is therefore in no position to complain of the court's action in permitting his codefendant's answer to be withdrawn. It is apparent that no fraud was committed upon him, and therefore his objection that the court lent its aid in the perpetration of a fraud upon him is untenable.

[7] In this appeal, as heretofore noted, J. Edgar Ross has joined. Since he was not made a party to the action, and did not at any time make an appearance of any character in the suit, some explanation is necessary in order to present any justification for his attempted appeal from the judgment. In its findings the trial court found that notice of the pendency of the action was recorded in the official records of the recorder of Imperial county on December 6, 1929, and that the attempted conveyance of the property involved in this action by appellant A. F. Brown to J. Edgar Ross by a deed which was recorded in the office of the county recorder of Imperial county on December 23, 1929, was made after recordation of the lis pendens. It is then adjudged that the deed from appellant

A. F. Brown to J. Edgar Ross is null and void. It is to be observed that the court did not find on what date the deed from A. F. Brown to J. Edgar Ross was executed, but the court did find that it was made subsequent to the date on which the lis pendens in the action was recorded. The court's judgment decreeing the deed from appellant A. F. Brown to J. Edgar Ross to be void affords the justification for the latter's joinder in this appeal, since it is urged that it clearly appears from the record that he is a party aggrieved by the judgment, and therefore entitled to complain of it, although prior to the rendition of the judgment he had not appeared in the case. At first blush this position appears to possess merit. The judgment which was rendered without notice to appellant Ross purports to divest him of whatever right or interest he had acquired in the property without affording him an opportunity to present any defense thereto. However, since the court made a specific finding that notice of the pendency of this action was filed on a certain date and that the conveyance to appellant Ross was made subsequent to the recordation of the lis pendens, Ross took the deed from his grantor with constructive notice of the pendency of an action brought for the purpose of nullifying the title of his grantor (section 409, Code Civ. Proc.). Having such notice, appellant Ross might properly, prior to the rendition of judgment, have sought permission of the court wherein the action was pending to be allowed to intervene therein. In the event of a refusal by the court to grant such application, this appellant would have been entitled to prosecute an appeal from the order denying him the right to intervene. Stern & Goodman Inv. Co. v. Danziger, 206 Cal. 456, 274 P. 748. In default of such action, he might have made himself a party to the record by moving the trial court to set aside the judgment which he now complains injuriously affects his rights in the property involved, and, in the event of a denial of his motion, might, on appeal from this court's order denying his motion, have had the judgment reviewed, not only for excess of jurisdiction, but for error. Elliott v. Superior Court, 144 Cal. 501, 509, 77 P. 1109, 103 Am. St. Rep. 102. However, it appears that in no fashion did appellant Ross seek to make himself a party to the record. Furthermore, it is to be remembered that whatever interest appellant Ross has in the property involved herein was acquired from appellant A. F. Brown, an original defendant in this action, and that A. F. Brown suffered judgment to be taken by default against him, thereby admitting that he had no valid claim upon or interest in the property if the complaint was not obnoxious to the demurrer which he had interposed. Hibernia, etc., Society v. Churchill, 128 Cal. 633, 61 P. 278, 79 Am. St. Rep. 73; Martin v. Lawrence, 156 Cal. 191, 193, 103 P. 913; Stern & Goodman Inv. Co. v. Danziger, supra. We are therefore impelled to the conclusion that, appellant J. Edgar Ross not having in any manner endeavored to make himself a party to the record herein, no errors of which he complains are reviewable on this appeal. Geary v. Stafford, 98 Cal. App. 84, 275 P. 865; Smith v. Mingramm, 104 Cal. App. 95, 285 P. 354. As he was not a party to this action, and has not made himself a party to the record, he is not thereby foreclosed from seeking the aid of equity in vacating a judgment affecting his rights in the property, assuming that as to him the judgment is void by reason of lack of jurisdiction. Postal, etc., Co. v. Superior Court, 22 Cal. App. 770, 779, 136 P. 538.

For the reasons stated, the judgment is affirmed.

1. Easements ⇐36(1).

One claiming right of way under statute providing that realty transfer passes easements attached thereto must prove existence of way that was being obviously and permanently used for benefit of property conveyed at time transfer was agreed on or completed (Civ. Code, § 1104).

2. Easements ⇐36(1).

Lot owners claiming easement of roadway on ground that their predecessor had such easement had burden of proving existence of roadway meeting requirements of statute (Civ. Code, § 1104).

Lot owners had the burden in such case of meeting the requirements of Civ. Code, § 1104, and proving the existence of a roadway that was being obviously and permanently used for the benefit of their property, then owned by their predecessor, at the time their predecessor purchased the strip over which the roadway was claimed.

3. Appeal and error ⇐1011(1).

Court's finding based on conflicting evidence is conclusive.

4. Easements ⇐5.

To establish roadway by prescription, it was unnecessary to show roadway was "laid out."

5. Easements ⇐8(1).

To establish roadway by prescription, it was necessary to show there was definite way adversely used for prescriptive period.

6. Easements ⇐36(1).

Parties claiming prescriptive rights have burden of proving all elements necessary to establish such rights.

7. Easements ⇐6.

Adjacent owners' passing over another's uninclosed lot used by adjacent owners and public generally on week ends, over no well-defined roadway, held insufficient constructive notice of claim of prescriptive easement.

8. Easements ⇐5.

Claim of roadway by prescription and under statute providing that realty transfer passes easements attached thereto does not include claim of roadway by necessity (Civ. Code, § 1104).

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Action by Alfred Schudel and others against Lilly Alice Hertz. From the judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

BEAUMONT, Justice pro tem.

In 1915 Walter Rueger purchased certain lots of Muir Woods Park subdivision 6 in Marin county. These were part of what is known as the "Lapachet" property. In 1921 Joseph Mischke acquired other lots thereof, and later Alfred Schudel, Ernest Schudel, and Gustav E. Kirchner became the owners of yet others of these lots. All of said Lapachet lots are adjacent to lot 53, designated as the "O'Hair" property, on the northeast. This last-mentioned lot fronts in a southeasterly direction on Marin View avenue. Rueger acquired a strip ninety feet wide off the northeasterly portion of lot 53 and adjoining all said Lapachet lots. This strip was purchased in three separate parcels, the first thereof in August, 1919; the second in November, 1921; and the third in January, 1922. In 1922 Mischke acquired from Rueger the portion of the ninety-foot strip which adjoins his Lapachet lots, and in May, 1927, the Schudels and Kirchner jointly purchased the part adjacent to their Lapachet lots. In June, 1927, Lilly Alice Hertz, through purchase, acquired the Lapachet lots theretofore owned by Rueger as well as his remaining part of the ninety-foot strip. In March 1928, Mrs. Hertz purchased from P. E. O'Hair Realty Company the remainder of lot 53. Later Mrs. Hertz fenced her property. Action was brought by Mischke, the Schudels, and Kirchner against Mrs. Hertz to quiet title to an easement for right of way across lot 53 to Marin View avenue, a public highway. Judgment was for defendant, and from this plaintiffs appealed.

In appellants' opening brief easement is claimed on two grounds, to wit: Under the provisions of section 1104 of the Civil Code and by prescription, but that brief contains no specification of errors, and fails to point out any ground upon which the judgment should be reversed. This is referred to by respondent, and in appellants' reply brief certain alleged insufficiencies of evidence and erroneous conclusions are designated. Some of the grounds for reversal are indefinite, but we shall endeavor to consider all that are germane to the issue. Appellants contend that the evidence is overwhelmingly in favor of the allegations of the complaint. The question is, not whether the evidence would have supported a decision in favor of appellants, but whether the decision which was made finds support in the evidence.

The evidence shows that all of the Lapachet property in question is very rough; that lot 53 was owned by P. E. O'Hair until it was transferred in June, 1922, to P. E. O'Hair Realty Company; that it consists largely of a grassy knoll, and that, until fenced by respondent shortly before the commencement of this action, was uninclosed and uncultivated land of approximately three acres; that appellants and Rueger, their predecessor in interest, sometimes drove and walked upon and across lot 53 to reach their property, and at other times they arrived there by other ways. Appellants' testimony is that, though access thereto was originally had by foot along the trails, it was later reached by the use of automobiles. Walter Rueger testified that, before and at the time he completed the purchase of the parcels of lot 53 which comprise the ninety-foot strip, he drove across said lot to reach his own property over a well-defined road; that he continued to use this road until he disposed of his interest in the property; that he had claimed a right of way across said lot because Emile Lapachet had told him before he purchased the ninety feet that he (Rueger) was entitled to such right of way. Appellants testified that they used the above-mentioned road until a fence was erected by respondent. Dr. Gustav Kirchner, one of the appellants, testified regarding the roadway in question as follows:

"Q. Now at the time that you purchased

Lots 159, 160 and 161, was there a road leading from that property to Marin View Avenue? A. There was a place where driving was done. It was practically around this hill, but it was not used every day; people up there usually are there only week ends. * * *

"Q. Well, you have described the character of the road across there when you first began to own it; later on was that road more definitely marked? A. When I first began to know it, it showed traces of having been worked some time before, but in this section in one winter season the weeds grow so fast that the soil is quickly overgrown, but when I began to clear out the road there I had to make no measurement or not to make any guess at it. I simply followed what was evidently a road before, because it began to lead out in the level here and I followed that same way."

Joseph Mischke, one of the appellants, testified as to the existence of the road in 1922. He was asked, "And that road was well marked on the ground was it?" His answer was, "It was marked enough that a person could not really miss it."

In opposition to the foregoing, Emile Lapachet, who acted as agent of the grantor in the sale of the ninety-foot strip to Rueger, testified that the property in question, including the Lapachet lots, was located in what was known as a "Hiker's Paradise"; that this property was sold for hillside cabin sites; that the subdivision in question was laid out for such purpose; that access was to be had over trails, and that the purchasers acquired their property with a view of reaching it by such means; that some years after the subdivision was so laid out the public generally began to use lot 53 for parking automobiles and for picnic purposes; that there were numerous automobile tracks in various portions of the lot, but there was at no time a road across the lot; that there was no definite line of travel leading from the property of appellants or their predecessor to Marin View avenue. He denied that he had told Rueger that the latter was entitled to a right of way across lot 53, but testified that some months after Rueger had completed the purchase of the ninety-foot strip Rueger told him he would like to have a right of way across lot 53, and asked him (Lapachet) to interview O'Hair for the purpose of obtaining it. Wesley M. Nelson testified that he had a conversation with Rueger in the year 1927, while Rueger still owned part of the property, and that Rueger then told him that he had no right of way across lot 53, and that he claimed none. Respondent testified that she was first upon the property in the early part of 1927, and that there was no roadway across lot 53 at that time; that appellant Kirchner told her he had no right of way over lot 53, and that he wrote her a letter in January, 1928, to the effect that he had been informed she had purchased the remaining part of lot 53, and that he was convinced that she would grant appellants the privilege of driving over her property (lot 53). Alfred Hertz, husband of respondent, also testified he was on the property in question about the year 1927, and that there was no roadway across it. The evidence also shows that the grantor, P. E. O'Hair, and his successor, P. E. O'Hair Realty Company, did not use lot 53 in any way for travel, and had not laid out or constructed any roadway across or upon any portion of said lot.

Portions of the court's findings relative to the description and use of the property in question are as follows: "The Court finds, that Lot 53, during all of the time that the whole of, or any portion of it, was owned by P. E. O'Hair or the P. E. O'Hair Realty Company, and until on or about the 25th day of October, 1928, was open, uninclosed land; that at any place thereon for a distance of 200 feet along said Marin View Avenue one could drive with an automobile or truck onto Lot 53; that during all of said time it was a pasture ground for cows; many people used it as a picnic ground; drove out there and parked their machines, it was a natural place to park, a portion of it was level and over the steeper parts there was a cow trail which people followed, trucks delivered lumber and material, and delivery wagons drove across it; people used it as a common parking place; there were tracks across it in all directions. * * * And the Court further finds that there never was at any time or at all, or now is a right of way either marked out or constructed across any part of the premises of defendant. * * * That no roadway whatever across said Lot 53, or any part thereof, was ever laid out by said Walter Rueger, or any other person."

[1-3] It is essential that one whose claim for a right of way is based on section 1104 of the Civil Code must prove the existence of a way that was being obviously and permanently used for the benefit of the property conveyed at the time the transfer was agreed upon or completed. Grimmesey v. Kirtlan, 93 Cal. App. 658, 270 P. 243, 245; Beem v. Reichman, 36 Cal. App. 258, 171 P. 972. In Jersey Farm Co. v. Atlanta Realty Co., 164 Cal. 412, at page 415, 129 P. 593, 594 the court stated with reference to said section: "It is a direct recognition of the principle long established and fully recognized by this court (Cave v. Crafts, 53 Cal. 135; Quinlan v. Noble, 75 Cal. 250, 17 P. 69), that principle being that where the owner of two tenements sells one of them, or the owner of the entire estate sells a portion of it, the purchaser takes the tenement or portion sold with all the benefits and with all the burdens that appear at the time of the sale to belong to it as between it and the property which the vendor retains. It is this general principle which is given full recognition by section 1104. * * * If it be a burden obviously cast upon the land at the time of the segregation of the title, it remains a burden upon that land in favor of the other parcel, and it is an 'easement' within the meaning of section 1104. * * *" The burden, therefore, was upon appellants to prove the existence of a roadway that would meet the requirements of the section as to use at the time of their predecessor's purchase of at least one of the parcels which comprise the ninety-foot strip. As to whether there was such roadway rests in a conflict of evidence. The court's finding against appellants' allegations that such existed will not be disturbed.

[4-7] As to prescription: Appellants allege "that immediately upon acquiring title to the * * *" first-purchased parcel of the ninety-foot strip, "Walter Rueger laid out a road from the said property so purchased on said 30th day of August, 1919, across said Lot 53 to the said Marin View Avenue," said road being described by metes and bounds. Then follow allegations of user of this road for the necessary period. The court found specifically that no road was so laid out. Appellants attack this finding. There was no evidence to support the allegation in so far as the term "laid out" is generally used. Whether such roadway was so laid out is not essential. It is necessary to appellants' claim of easement by prescription, however, to show that there was a definite way across lot 53 (19 Cor. Jur., p. 899; Vestal v. Young, 147 Cal. 721, 82 P. 383; Matthiessen v. Grand, 92 Cal. App. 504, 268 P. 675, and that this was adversely used for the prescriptive period. The burden was upon appellants to prove the existence of all the elements necessary to establish a prescriptive right. Costello v. Sharp, 65 Cal. App. 152, 157, 223 P. 567; Matthiessen v. Grand, supra. In Tarpey v. Veith, 22 Cal. App. 289, 134 P. 367, 369, it was held that mere user was insufficient to establish such right. The court therein said: "Such user must be accompanied by a claim of right communicated to the owner of the land, or it must be shown that the user was so continuous and so openly and notoriously adverse to the owner as to create a presumptive knowledge in the owner that the person using the land was doing so under a claim of right." Appellants produced no evidence of actual notice. On the other hand, respondent's witness, Donald O'Hair, an officer of the P. E. O'Hair Realty Company, testified he had been in general charge of the business of the company since June, 1922, that no one had communicated to him any claim for a right of way over the property in question, and that he had never heard that any person claimed such right. Considering the evidence upon which it may be said the court based its findings, it is shown that lot 53 was uninclosed; that portions thereof were used by appellants and their predecessor in common with the public; that it was so used generally at "week ends" only; that travel was had thereupon in various directions, but that there was no well-defined roadway across said lot. In Clarke v. Clarke, 133 Cal. 667, 66 P. 10, 11, plaintiff brought action to quiet title to an open lot, and defendant, in his answer, claimed a right of way by prescription. The court in that case said: "The defendant and his tenants were in the habit of passing over the uninclosed strip of land when going to or from their business. The question as to whether or not the use was under a claim of right, or a mere matter of neighborly accommodation, was a question of fact to be determined by the court in the light of the relations of the parties, their conduct, the situation of the property, and all the surrounding circumstances. The court below saw the witnesses, heard them testify, and found the facts against defendant. Defendant testified that he used the way and claimed the right to use it, but it does not appear that any such claim was ever made to plaintiff or to his grantor. It is not sufficient that the claim of right exist only in the mind of the person claiming it. It must in some way be asserted in such manner that the owner may know of the claim. The fact that the owner knew of the travel and occasional use of the property does not even raise a presumption that such use was hostile or under claim of right. If any party who is allowed by silent permission to pass over the lands of another, nothing being said as to any right being claimed, after five years, without showing that he ever communicated such claim in any way to the owner, can thus gain title by prescription, it would be a blot upon the law. An owner could not allow his neighbor to pass and repass over a trail, upon his open, uninclosed land without danger of having an adverse title successfully set up against him." In Watson v. Board of County Com'rs, 38 Wash. 662, 80 P. 201, 202, the court held that, in order to establish a prescriptive right of way over unoccupied lands, the use must at least be such as to convey to the owner "reasonable notice that a claim is made in hostility to his title." The use that was made of the property in question was not such that it constituted constructive notice of a claim of right. The evidence amply sustains the finding of the court that there was no adverse user. 19 Cor. Jur. pp. 898–901, and notes.

Appellants complain of the court's finding regarding the claim for right of way for a pipe line across lot 53. They allege that such line was laid by Walter Rueger. The court's finding is to the contrary. It found that the pipe line was constructed by the Marin municipal water district, and this is supported by the testimony of the witness Rueger. The evidence shows that it was constructed and maintained by the water district.

[8] As heretofore stated, appellants in their opening brief clearly rely on a right of way by prescription and under the provisions of section 1104, Civil Code. There is no claim made therein for a right of way of strict necessity. Respondent calls this to the attention of the court, and appellants reply that this is necessarily included in the construction of the section. We do not so understand. It is true that in construing said section it has been said that, in order to bring an easement within its provisions, it must be shown that such easement was "necessary for the reasonable enjoyment of the part sold" (Grimmesey v. Kirtlan, supra; Beem v. Reichman, supra), but, where so held, it has been referred to as only one of the necessary elements of proof under the section (Jones on Easements, § 145). We have hereinbefore referred to the opinion of the court in Jersey Farm Co. v. Atlanta Realty Co., wherein Mr. Justice Henshaw stated that the section contemplates a burden obviously cast upon land at the time of the transfer. The court in Cheda v. Bodkin, 173 Cal. 7, 158 P. 1025 calls attention to the distinction between an action for right of way of necessity and an action under section 1104. In that case it was said at page 13 of 173 Cal., 158 P. 1025, 1028: "The complaint contains an allegation that the flow of water from the Molinari ranch to the Foster ranch was 'necessary for the full enjoyment, use, and benefit of said Frank Foster ranch,' and appellants cite numerous authorities to the effect that this is not a sufficient pleading of strict necessity. These citations include Kripp v. Curtis, 71 Cal. 62, 65, 11 P. 879; Correa v. Higuera, 153 Cal. 451, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1018, 95 P. 882; Cassin v. Cole, 153 Cal. 677, 96 P. 277; and Bully Hill, etc., Co. v. Bruson, 4 Cal. App. 180, 87 P. 237. The cases cited do not support the contention of appellants. The authorities refer to rights of way of necessity, but respondent was not seeking to have the court decide that a right of way of necessity existed. The plaintiff's pleading was to the effect that at the time of the severance of the ownership of the two ranches by the deed of Mrs. Laydon to her mother there was an open and notorious use of the water which was appurtenant to the Foster ranch and a burden upon the Molinari ranch." We are of the opinion that the question of whether or not appellants are entitled to a way of strict necessity is not included in the construction of section 1104 of the Civil Code, relied upon by appellants.

The court's findings are supported by the evidence, and its conclusions of law logically follow from the findings. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, Acting P. J.; CASHIN, J.

LADD v. MATHIS et al.

Civ. 8227.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 26, 1932.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 24, 1932. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 24, 1932.

1. Chattel mortgages ⇐287.

Deficiency judgment entered, without notice, over five years after foreclosure, on affidavits that mortgaged chattels were valueless, held not void for want of jurisdiction (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 685, 726).

Deficiency or personal judgment in question was not a new and independent judgment, but was an order merely to allow plaintiff in foreclosure suit to collect on her judgment therein without useless procedure of issuing order of sale and foreclosing security, which had become valueless.

2. Chattel mortgages ⇐287.

Where sale is ordered and sheriff or commissioner, after attempted sale of valueless mortgaged property, returns order unsatisfied, clerk may enter deficiency judgment for full amount.

3. Execution ⇐75.

Execution issued three days after docketing of deficiency judgment granted, without notice, over five years after foreclosure, on basis of affidavits that mortgaged chattels were valueless, held valid (Code Civ. Proc. § 685).

4. Fraudulent conveyances ⇐233.

Under findings that property was fraudulently assigned, judgment creditor held entitled to lien thereon.

Court found that assignment of note and trust deed in question by judgment debtors to their son was made without valuable consideration and with intent to defraud creditors; that subsequent assignment by son to his assignee in consideration of attorney fee claimed by assignee was made with fraudulent intent; and that assignee knew of original fraudulent transfer, and had collected on note more than amount which was due to him.

5. Appeal and error ⇐907(2).

Finding held presumably supported, where bill of exceptions omitted evidence on which finding was based.

6. Trial ⇐395(3).

Where defendants, to show inadequate consideration for property sold on execution, alleged value thereof, finding respecting value held within issues (Code Civ. Proc. § 462).

Since answer of defendants in action to have a note and trust deed applied on a deficiency judgment raised issue of value of certain property previously sold on execution, it was duty of court to make finding thereon, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 462, providing that statement of any new matter in answer in avoidance or constituting defense or counterclaim must be deemed controverted by opposite party.

7. Appeal and error ⇐1039(6).

Where allegation in cross-complaint respecting property value was based on defendant's ownership, and court found against such ownership, cross-defendant's failure to deny allegation of value held immaterial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles F. Cook, Judge.

Action by Mary A. Gansert Ladd against John Mathis, for whom Ellis F. Mathis, as administrator of his estate, was substituted, and others, wherein Ellis F. Mathis and others filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and cross-complainants appeal.

Superseding opinion in 11 P.(2d) 76.

Thomas A. Sanson and Thomas T. Robinson, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

E. R. Simon, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff, Mary A. Gansert Ladd, brought this action for the purpose of having applied on a deficiency judgment held by her, a certain trust deed note, hereinafter referred to as the "Cole trust deed note," and the trust deed securing the same, which trust deed and note plaintiff claimed had been theretofore fraudulently conveyed by the judgment debtors, John T. Mathis and Theodosia Mathis, to their son Ellis Mathis, and by him fraudulently conveyed to the defendant Thomas Tyler Robinson, the present holder. Defendants appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff.

The facts not in dispute are as follows: In December, 1918, defendant John T. Mathis, being indebted to one Charles Britten Ladd, executed a promissory note, in the amount of $480, payable September 1, 1919, to said Charles Britten Ladd. Said note was secured by a chattel mortgage on a certain band of horses, twenty head all told. Both note and mortgage were signed by John T. Mathis, Theodosia Mathis, and Ellis Mathis, said last named being the son of said John T. Mathis and Theodosia Mathis and at the time of signing said instruments a minor of the age of eighteen years; the note and mortgage were subsequently assigned by the payee to his wife, Mary A. Gansert Ladd. Default judgment in a foreclosure suit on said note and mortgage was entered and docketed September 24, 1919, for the principal sum of $505.88, attorney's fees $40, and costs $82.60, and interest and "judgment over any deficiency after said sale and return."

In December, 1924, defendants John T. Mathis and Theodosia Mathis sold and exchanged all property then held by them for three certain trust deeds and notes, which said notes and deeds were assigned to Ellis F. Mathis, their son, two of said trust deeds and notes being herein referred to as the "Yorston trust deed note" and the "Cole trust deed note." February 20, 1925, a deficiency judgment (without notice of any kind to the defendants therein named) was granted in said foreclosure suit for the full amount of the judgment, and docketed February 25, 1925. Said deficiency judgment was granted on the evidence of four affidavits to the effect that the security given by said chattel mortgage was valueless. Thereafter, on execution issued February 28, 1925, a certain note and trust deed herein referred to as the "Yorston trust note," then standing in the name of Ellis F. Mathis, and being one of the trust deeds assigned to him as aforesaid, was levied upon and on April 15, 1925, at sheriff's sale, sold to Charles Britten Ladd, plaintiff's husband, for $150, of which sum $30.50, was credited on the deficiency judgment.

Defendants were not advised of the fact of the deficiency judgment having been granted nor of the levy and sale of the Yorston trust deed note before April 17, 1925. Sometime thereafter, defendant Ellis F. Mathis, on request of his parents, assigned that certain trust deed and note herein referred to as the "Cole trust deed note" to defendant Thomas Tyler Robinson. At some time in the early part of the year 1925 and before the last-named assignment was made, Mrs. Emma C. Relf had purchased the property described in the Cole trust deed and assumed the debts thereon, being about $2,300.

On August 12, 1925, the sheriff of Los Angeles county returned an alias writ of execution, setting forth thereon that he had served the same upon Emma C. Relf and Thomas Tyler Robinson, that the same was wholly unsatisfied, with added costs of $30.25.

On August 25, 1925, defendant Ellis F. Mathis, in said action of foreclosure above mentioned, after due notice, came into court and moved to vacate, annul, and set aside the judgment of foreclosure, deficiency judgment, and execution sale. The motion was duly presented, argued, and denied and no appeal was taken therefrom.

It was stipulated in open court by counsel for the respective parties that the said instrument designated deficiency judgment and docketed in book 575 at page 371 of judgment records of said court had been obtained ex parte and without notice of any kind being given to the defendants therein named, and that no steps of any kind had been taken by or on behalf of plaintiff in said action of foreclosure from the date of filing of the foreclosure decree in September, 1919, until the filing of the affidavits and securing of the purported deficiency judgment on February 20, 1925.

In September, 1925, the complaint in the case at bar was filed. The defendants, Mathis, by their answer and cross-complaint, deny and allege as follows: Allege fraud in the procurement of the note and mortgage on which foreclosure was had; that the defendants Ellis Mathis and Theodosia Mathis were not served with summons and copy of the complaint in said foreclosure action; that cross-defendants (plaintiffs) maliciously conspired and caused the sheriff's sale to be held in such a manner that none of the defendants Mathis had notice thereof; deny having made any assignments with intent to defraud creditors; allege a consideration from Robinson for the transfer of the Cole trust deed note, in that John Mathis was indebted to said Robinson for attorney services; allege the value of the Yorston trust deed note to have been at the time of the sale $2,918.27 (the amount remaining unpaid thereon), and that defendant Ellis Mathis was the sole owner thereof. They ask the court to vacate and set aside the decree of foreclosure, deficiency judgment, and execution sale, and for damages in the amount of $10,000.

An amendment to the complaint was filed by which defendant Emma C. Relf was brought in and said defendant, answering, made application to be allowed to pay into court the regular monthly payments due from her on the Cole trust deed note, and thereafter payments to the amount of $1,000 were made to the clerk of the court before judgment was rendered herein.

Plaintiff, in answer to the cross-complaint, sets out the facts on the motion made in said foreclosure action on August 25, 1925, supra, and alleges that the order and decision of the court denying said motion is a final determination of the issues raised under the cross-complaint and is a bar to the prosecution of the alleged cause of action therein set forth. During the pendency of the action, defendant John Mathis died and Ellis F. Mathis, as administrator of his estate, was substituted. The appeal is before us on a bill of exceptions.

[1, 2] Appellant claims that the so-called deficiency or personal judgment which was entered February 25, 1925, is void because entered without jurisdiction. However, such order was not a new and independent judgment but was an order merely to allow the plaintiffs to collect on their judgment without the useless procedure of issuing an order of sale and foreclosing the security, which had become valueless. While a case directly in point has not been called to our attention, in the case of Toby v. Oregon Pac. R. R. Co., 98 Cal. 490, 33 P. 550, where a receiver was appointed pendente lite, upon a showing after trial and before entry of decree that the mortgaged property was deteriorating in value, the court ordered a sale and after confirmation of sale entered a decree reciting facts awarding judgment for the amount of the debt and interest, requiring the receiver to pay the amount in his hands upon such judgment to the plaintiff, and awarding execution for the balance. The opinion of the court is summarized in the syllabus as follows: "The object of section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in regard to the foreclosure of mortgages upon real or personal property, is to inhibit a personal action to recover a debt secured by mortgage; to confine a recovery in such cases to one action; to make the mortgaged property the primary fund out of which satisfaction is to be had, and to give the plaintiff a personal judgment for such balance as may be found due after the exhaustion of the mortgaged property; but it is not necessary to give effect to the evident intent of the law-makers, that there can be no deficiency judgment without a sale under a decree of foreclosure and a formal return by the sheriff, but whenever an application of the primary fund and a deficit remaining exist, and can only be reasonably ascertained by other means, these facts are not to be ignored because made apparent in a different way." At page 495 of said opinion in 98 Cal., 33 P. 550, 552, it is said: "The contention of appellant that there can be no deficiency judgment without a sale, and formal return by the sheriff, seems to me too technical to give effect to the evident intent of the lawmakers in many cases." And further: "Suppose, in the present case, the steamship mortgaged had been lost by perils of the sea, pendente lite. Would the plaintiff have been without remedy? Or can it be claimed that the court would have been forced to the useless expedient of foreclosing the mortgage, ordering a sale, and awaiting the return of the sheriff, before a deficiency judgment could be docketed? Would it not rather be said that the court, having obtained jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter, would, under the rules of equity, proceed, under the altered circumstances, and in view of the fact that the security was exhausted, to do justice by the entry of judgment for what would then become the deficiency, viz. the full amount due?"

In Parker v. Parker, 203 Cal. 787, 793, 266

P. 283, 285, the court says: "It is further urged that the original order for the issuance of the execution is void as having been made without notice to the defendant. It has been the law of this state since 1861 that the court, under section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure (which was a continuance of section 214 of the Practice Act), has power ex parte to order the issuance of an execution on a judgment which has become final more than five years before the application. * * *" It was further said: "But the failure of the plaintiff to disclose the true situation did not go to the jurisdiction of the court to act on the ex parte motion. If the defendant, as judgment debtor, had good cause to show against the issuance and enforcement of process, he had his remedy by a motion to vacate the order and to recall the execution."

In Redlands Hotel Association v. Richards, 125 Cal. 569, 58 P. 152, 153, after referring to Toby v. Oregon Pac. R. R. Co., supra, the court said: "Under the equitable construction thus given to the statute, it may be that the court, upon proper proof that plaintiff's mortgage was valueless because the property was insufficient to pay and discharge the prior mortgage, could have found that fact, and directed a deficiency or personal judgment against the defendants, without selling the mortgaged property. * * *"

In the case of Rein v. Callaway, 7 Idaho, 634, 65 P. 63, 64, it is said: "In this state, as in the state of California, the mortgaged property becomes the primary security, and the personal obligation of the mortgagor a secondary one. The mortgagor, under our statutes, is personally liable only after foreclosure, and then only for the balance shown to be due by the return of the sheriff, unless it is made to appear that the property has been destroyed or otherwise become valueless without the fault of the mortgagee."

Under these authorities we are of the opinion that the court did acquire jurisdiction to enter the judgment. It could not be successfully claimed that had an order of sale been made and the sheriff or commissioner, after an attempted sale of the valueless property, returned the order unsatisfied, that the clerk could not have entered a deficiency judgment for the full amount. Such a proceeding is of constant occurrence. We therefore hold that the court did acquire jurisdiction to make the order.

[3] It is also claimed that the execution issued was void because issued more than five years after the entry of the original judgment of foreclosure. However, the execution was issued three days after the deficiency judgment was entered and we believe it would be a strained construction of the law to say that such issuance must be subject to a formal order of the court, except the one contained by implication in the entry of the deficiency judgment, which was entered three days previously. It is also a part of the record that succeeding the entry of the deficiency judgment and the issuance of the execution herein, the appellants made a motion to vacate and set aside said deficiency judgment and recall the execution and after a hearing thereon the motion was denied. No appeal was taken therefrom and the same is now final. In California Jurisprudence, vol. 11, at page 50 it is said: "The proceeding to have execution issued after five years is usually by motion supported by affidavit. The affidavit, however, does not have to stand the test applicable to a complaint. While the court may in a proper case direct that notice of motion be given, notice is not required in the absence of such direction, and is not necessary to constitute that due process of law which is guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. If the debtor has a good defense or any cause to show against the enforcement of process, he has a plain and speedy remedy in a motion to vacate the order and recall the execution." In Doehla v. Phillips, 151 Cal. 488, 91 P. 330, it is held that the proceeding provided for in section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure is not a new action but is a subsequent proceeding in the original action. We think the same rule applies to the foregoing proceedings to obtain a deficiency judgment where the security has become valueless. We find nothing in the record to indicate that the court was without jurisdiction; besides, the defendant has already had his day in court.

[4] Appellants urge that the transfer of the Cole trust deed and note to the defendant Thomas Tyler Robinson, at the most, only constituted a preference and cannot be attacked except through bankruptcy proceedings, or under the State Insolvency Law (St. 1895, p. 131).

The Cole trust deed note was one of the three trust deeds and notes which the court found had been fraudulently transferred to Ellis F. Mathis. The court further found that the Cole trust deed and note had been fraudulently transferred by Ellis F. Mathis to Thomas Tyler Robinson.

The court found that the assignment to Ellis F. Mathis was made without valuable consideration of any kind; that said assignment was made with the purpose, design, and intent of John T. Mathis, Theodosia Mathis, and Ellis F. Mathis to cheat, hinder, delay, and defraud creditors, and the plaintiff in particular; that the later assignment by Ellis F. Mathis, under direction of his father, John T. Mathis, and in consideration of $1,000 attorney fee claimed by Thomas Tyler Robinson, was made by John T. Mathis, Ellis F. Mathis, and Thomas Tyler Robinson with the purpose and intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors; and that Thomas Tyler Robinson also knew of the fraudulent transfer of said note to Ellis F. Mathis. The court further found that the appellant Thomas Tyler Robinson had collected $1,050 on said trust deed note, which was more than was due to him. The court found as a fact that the said Robinson took and held title to said trust deed and note as a trustee for John T. Mathis and Theodosia Mathis, who were the beneficial owners thereof.

The findings of the court specifically sustain every allegation of fraud as made by plaintiff against the defendants, and find the allegations of fraud made by defendants against plaintiffs and cross-defendants to be untrue. In 12 California Jurisprudence, at page 1013: "A creditor receiving a preference may take only enough money or property to satisfy his debt. If the value of the property transferred exceeds the amount of the debt it is, therefore, evidence of a fraudulent intent, and the transaction should be subjected to the closest scrutiny. If there is an actual fraudulent intent in giving and taking the property, the transfer is void as against the other creditors of the debtor." We think the trial court correctly gave to plaintiff a lien on the Cole trust deed and note and on the payments thereon which had been made into court.

[5] It is contended by the appellants that the execution sale of the Yorston trust deed note should have been set aside because of a grossly inadequate consideration. Appellants claim that the admitted value of said trust deed note is the sum of about $2,918.27, the sale price being $150.

In the joint answer of the defendants Mathis to the amended complaint it is alleged as affirmative matter that the amount due and unpaid on said trust deed note was the sum of $2,918.27, or thereabouts, and that the actual market value thereof was, at the time of the sale, and at the time of the filing of the answer, the unpaid balance as above set forth. In the cross-complaint of the defendants Mathis there appears in substance the same allegation of value and this allegation is not denied in the answer of the plaintiffs to the cross-complaint.

The court, in response to the affirmative defense, specifically found that the actual value of said trust deed and note at the time of the sale or thereafter was not the unpaid balance due thereon, but was the sum of $150. The evidence upon which this finding is based is not contained in the bill of exceptions and therefore we must accept the findings as sustained by the evidence.

[6] It is claimed by appellant that this finding is clearly outside of the issues raised by the pleadings and therefore a nullity. In presenting this question the appellants rely upon the rule stated in Welch v. Alcott, 185 Cal. 731, 198 P. 626, that a material allegation of a complaint which is not denied by the answer requires no finding thereon and a finding contrary to such undenied allegation should be disregarded. The facts in the cases cited by appellant differ from the facts in the case at bar. In this case the answer to the amended complaint made by all of the defendants Mathis alleges the value of said note and trust deed as a part of their second or affirmative defense and for the purpose of the action such allegation is deemed denied by the plaintiff. Section 462 of the Code of Civil Procedure says: "The statement of any new matter in the answer in avoidance or constituting a defense or counterclaim, must, on the trial, be deemed controverted by the opposite party." This statutory provision is cited in 21 California Jurisprudence, at page 163, § 113, where it is said: "The law thus raises an implied replication, which takes the place of a reply, and relieves the plaintiff of any further pleading." This text is supported by many California cases cited thereunder. In 24 California Jurisprudence, at page 938, § 183, it is said: "Under the same system of express findings now provided for, full findings, unless waived, are required on all material issues. * * * The requirement applies not only to issues raised by denials of the allegations of a complaint, but to issues raised upon affirmative defenses in the answer or upon a cross-complaint." Taylor v. Taylor, 192 Cal. 71, 81, 218 P. 756, 51 A. L. R. 1074. It is therefore clear that the answer of all the defendants having raised the issue of the value of the trust deed note, it was the duty of the court to make a finding thereon, and the evidence upon that issue not having been brought to this court, the presumption must prevail that the finding is sustained by the evidence. The finding is clearly within the issues.

[7] The allegation of value set out in the cross-complaint was based upon an allegation of the sole ownership of defendant Ellis F. Mathis in and to said trust deed and note. The court specifically found against the said allegation of ownership and under such finding the value of the note in so far as the cross-complaint is concerned became an immaterial issue, and the failure of plaintiffs and cross-defendants to deny this allegation of value, as therein set out, in their answer to the cross-complaint was not material and had no bearing on the issue as formed by the amended complaint and answer thereto.

We believe the foregoing disposes of all the material points raised by appellants.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re BARREIRO'S ESTATE.

BARREIRO et al. v. BANK OF ITALY NAT. TRUST & SAVINGS ASS'N.

Civ. 885.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 29, 1932.

1. Executors and administrators ⇐15.

Office of executor held by bank held to descend by operation of law to successor banking corporation, where sale and consolidation took place (St. 1909, p. 87, § 31a, as added by St. 1913, p. 152, and amended by St. 1921, p. 181; St. 1909, p. 95, § 31, as amended by St. 1921, p. 1373, § 15).

Facts were that bank which was originally appointed executor sold its business, including its trust department, to bank having trust powers and authorized to do business as trust company in state, but that, before sale was completed, purchasing bank and another bank consolidated, and the consolidated bank had trust powers and was authorized to transact business as trust company in state. Subsequently superintendent of banks approved sale of executor bank to consolidated bank, and later the consolidated bank sold all its assets to state bank which had trust powers and which was later converted into a national bank.

2. Banks and banking ⇐237.

Where state bank reorganizes into national bank its identity is not necessarily destroyed (12 USCA §§ 35, 36).

3. Banks and banking ⇐233.

Transition of state bank into national bank carried with it office of executor of will by operation of law (12 USCA §§ 35, 36, 248).

4. Executors and administrators ⇐14.

Testator has right to nominate executor, and probate court will appoint nominee, in absence of legal disqualification (Code Civ. Proc. § 1365).

5. Constitutional law ⇐56.
Executors and administrators ⇐15.

Provisions of Bank Act under which office of executor descends by operation of law to successor banking corporation do not violate constitutional provisions vesting original jurisdiction of probate matters in Superior Court (St. 1909, p. 95, § 31, as amended by St. 1921, p. 1373, § 15; St. 1909, p. 87, § 31a, as added by St. 1913, p. 152, and amended by St. 1921, p. 181; Const. art. 6, § 5, as amended in 1924).

6. Executors and administrators ⇐55.

Executor was required to take charge of property of estate of deceased as it existed at time of death.

7. Executors and administrators ⇐60, 465.

Where there is no ancillary administration, domiciliary representative may administer on stock of foreign corporation and may be required to account for funds in foreign jurisdiction of which it takes possession (Civ. Code, §§ 657, 658, 663, 946).

8. Executors and administrators ⇐506(3).

In hearing on executor's account, evidence warranted finding that estate had not been damaged nor confronted with loss because of failure to have ancillary letters of administration taken out in Republic of Mexico, where deceased owned stock in Mexican corporation (Civ. Code, §§ 657, 658, 663, 946).

9. Executors and administrators ⇐513(3).

Orders settling executor's accounts were not subject to review where they had become final, appeal not having been taken.

10. Executors and administrators ⇐35(1).

Large family allowances made under court orders, due to mistake in estimate in value of property of estate, furnished no grounds for removal of executor (Code Civ. Proc. § 1626).

11. Executors and administrators ⇐35(1).

That persons who were guardians of estates of minors were trust officers of executor of will did not require removal of executor (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1365, 1626, 1751).

12. Executors and administrators ⇐35(1).

Litigation involving divorced wife's petition for partial distribution of estate arising out of mutual mistake indulged in by all attorneys connected with estate and proceedings furnished no ground for removal of executor (Code Civ. Proc. § 1626).

13. Executors and administrators ⇐35(8).

Executor's advancements through honest mistake to deceased's divorced wife, where she owned portion of property taken over by executor, held not ground for removal of executor (Code Civ. Proc. § 1626).

14. Executors and administrators ⇐506(3).

Evidence warranted court's finding that inventory and appraisement returned and filed in proceeding respecting executor's annual account was greatly in excess of actual value of property.

15. Executors and administrators ⇐35(8).

Executor's withdrawal of surplus of Mexican corporation in which deceased owned stock in itself furnished no ground for removal of executor (Code Civ. Proc. § 1626).

16. Executors and administrators ⇐507(2).
Probate judge could reserve rulings on allowance or disallowance of any portion of executor's account, where evidence was unsatisfactory and incomplete.

17. Appeal and error ⇐901.
Error is not presumed, and appellant must show error on appeal.

18. Executors and administrators ⇐475.
Value of use of property could not alone be taken as standard for estimating market value in determining whether executor's account should be surcharged with loss on sale.

19. Executors and administrators ⇐506(3).
Evidence warranted court's finding that no loss resulted to estate from executor's sale of certain property in Mexico.

20. Executors and administrators ⇐506(3).
Under evidence, court properly found there was no loss requiring surcharge of executor's account in executing renewal lease to tenant in accordance with option given in original lease.

21. Executors and administrators ⇐510(11).
There being no evidence to contrary, appellate court could not disturb trial court's finding that amount paid by executor to certain person to take care of business connected with Mexican property was reasonable amount.

22. Executors and administrators ⇐104(1).
Executor paying claim of fifth class before paying succession taxes and federal estate and income taxes bearing higher rate of interest held not accountable for difference in interest under evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Charles C. Haines, Judge.

The Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association, as executor of the estate of Benigno Barreiro, deceased, filed a fourth annual account, to which objections were filed by Maria Teresa Barreiro and others, minors, by Charles A. Brinkley and another, guardians of their estates, and removal of the executor from office was asked. From the orders made, the minors appeal.

Orders modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

Jesse George and C. A. Brinkley, both of San Diego, for appellants.

Wright & McKee and C. M. Monroe, all of San Diego, for respondent.

MARKS, J.

Benigno Barreiro, citizen of the United States, resident of San Diego, died testate on June 4, 1925, leaving as heirs his three minor children, Maria Teresa Barreiro, Benigno Barreiro, Jr., and Oscar Barreiro. He had been divorced from his wife, Gertrudis Marquez Barreiro, on December 29, 1923. The decree of divorce was silent as to any division of the community property, leaving them tenants in common with an equal interest therein.

Benigno Barreiro owned property in California and in Mexico, and conducted a considerable mercantile business in the latter country originally under the name "Barreiro & Co." In 1920 he organized a Mexican corporation, the Compania Mercantil Internacional, S. A., hereafter referred to as the "Compania Internacional," through which he transacted his mercantile business in Mexico and which held the legal title to his property in that country. At some date, probably early in 1922, he discontinued the operations of the Compania Internacional except for the purpose of its liquidation. Victoriano Sanchez was appointed its liquidator with the apparent object of collecting in and distributing its assets and otherwise winding up its affairs. Accounts receivable and promissory notes of the total face value of about $30,000 (whether in Mexican money or that of the United States is uncertain) came into his possession. As far as the record discloses, no accounting was obtained from him by the deceased, and none has been made to the executor. Miguel Gonzales purchased the other and remaining personal property of this corporation for $250,000, payable part in cash, the balance being evidenced by promissory notes. The certificates of stock of the Compania Internacional have not been found, but it is probable that Mr. Barreiro owned all of them with a community interest in his wife.

Mr. Barreiro organized another Mexican corporation, the Compania de Inversiones de la Baja California, hereafter referred to as the "Compania," to which was deeded all of the Mexican real estate of the Compania Internacional, except one lot in the city of Mexicali, title to which remained in the original corporation. After 1922 the business of Mr. Barreiro in Mexico consisted mainly of leasing the real estate there.

The capital stock of the Compania was divided into one thousand shares of the par value of $100 each, Mexican money, which would be equivalent to $50 in money of the United States at the rate of exchange prevailing at that time. All of the stock was issued to bearer and was found in the possession of Mr. Barreiro at the time of his death. He evidently assumed that he owned all of the corporate stock, as he disregarded the rights of his divorced wife in the interest which she took at the time of the divorce as tenant in common with him.

Deceased left two testamentary instruments which have been construed as his last will and a codicil thereto and have been admitted to probate as such. They were offered for probate by the Southern Trust & Commerce Bank, a California banking corporation, with its principal place of business in San Diego, together with a petition for its appointment as executor, which petition was granted. The bank immediately qualified and entered upon the discharge of its duties with Norman R. Morison, its trust officer, assuming active charge of the affairs of the estate.

On the same day that the will was admitted to probate, Norman R. Morison was appointed sole guardian of the estates of the minor children. He qualified and acted as such guardian until May 12, 1927, when his resignation was accepted, and Dean M. Plaister, an official of the Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association, was appointed and qualified and continued to serve until January 17, 1929, when he resigned and Robert L. Cardenas and Charles A. Brinkley were appointed in his stead. They qualified and are now acting in such capacity. Mrs. Barreiro is the appointed, qualified, and acting guardian of the persons of the minors.

The Southern Trust & Commerce Bank was sold to the Bank of America. The Bank of America consolidated with the Liberty Bank, and was known as the Liberty Bank of America. The Liberty Bank of America was sold to the Bank of Italy, which was converted into a national banking association known as the Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association.

A first executor's account was filed by the Southern Trust & Commerce Bank; a second by the Liberty Bank of America; and a third by the Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association, all of which were settled, and the orders settling them were allowed to become final. The Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association filed a fourth annual account to which objections were filed by the minors, and removal of the executor from office was asked. After a lengthy contest, the trial court ordered a full and detailed account of matters not directly covered in any of the other accountings. Amended and supplemental accounts were filed to which the minors objected, and another extended hearing was had. The trial court settled certain portions of the account, overruling objections to some of its items, and reserving its rulings on others. It virtually surcharged the executor's account with certain expenditures which it held were illegally made, but not with the full amount which the minors sought to have charged against it. The removal of the executor was refused; the court holding that it had succeeded to the office originally occupied by the Southern Trust & Commerce Bank.

On November 13, 1929, the trial court filed findings of fact and conclusions of law in which the various changes from the Southern Trust & Commerce Bank to the Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association were found in detail, and it was concluded therefrom that the Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association had succeeded to the office of executor and was then the duly qualified and acting executor of the estate. On November 21, 1929, a judgment was filed in which the following appears: "Now, Therefore, it is ordered and decreed that the Bank of Italy National Trust and Savings Association by reason of successive transfers and mergers and by operation of law has become and now is vested with the office of executor of the last will and testament of said Benigno Barreiro, deceased. That the petition for the removal of the Bank of Italy National Trust and Savings Association from the office of executor of the last will and testament of said Benigno Barreiro, deceased, be and the same is hereby denied."

After the filing of the amended and supplemental accounts and objections thereto, a hearing was had, and this question of the succession of the Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association as executor was again considered by the trial court, for it again made and filed findings of fact and conclusions of law on June 27, 1930, in accordance with those of November 13, 1929, and incorporated in this judgment a paragraph similar in effect to the one we have quoted from the judgment filed on November 21, 1929. The judgment of June 27, 1930, is the one attacked on this appeal as well as the minute order of November, 1929.

Appellants' specifications of error upon which they rely for a reversal of the judgment contain the following: "Appellants maintain that the Honorable Superior Court erred in the following particulars, viz.:

"One: In finding and holding that the Bank of Italy National Trust and Savings Association lawfully succeeded to the office of Executor by means of the series of purchases and sales set forth in Finding IV of the Findings of November 13, 1929, without appointment or letters, and without having taken the oath of office, and in recognizing it as anything other than an intermeddler required to account as such.

"Two: In finding and holding that the so-called Mexican corporation, Compania de Inversiones de la Baja California, S. A., ever had a separate existence apart from the decedent, Benigno Barreiro, during his lifetime and apart from the Executor after his death.

"Three: In holding under the facts found that the said Corporation, Compania de Inversiones de la Baja California, was legally organized on July 9, 1926, by the Executor, or at all, and holding that all or any of the irregularities, defects or illegalities in the said reorganization and conduct of the said Compania have been waived by the appellants, and that no damage has or will result to the appellants from said reorganization.

"Four: In finding and holding that the Estate of the decedent has not been damaged or prejudiced, nor put in jeopardy of damage and prejudice by the failure of the Executor to have ancillary administration of the estate in Mexico."

"Six: In refusing to discharge the Executor Banks as required by section 1626 of the Code of Civil Procedure, even if it ever had a status as executor, for acts of waste, mismanagement, neglect, and embezzlement actually found by the court, and other like acts established by the evidence and which should have been found by the Court."

"Eight: In refusing to surcharge the Fourth Account as supplemented and amended, for losses suffered through waste, neglect, and embezzlement in the following sums in addition to the amount of the actual surcharge ordered, viz: (a) In the sum of $8799.-63 overpayments to and embezzlements by Manuel Lujan, instead of the sum for which it was actually surcharged on that account amounting to $4732.95 net. (b) In the sum of $16,986.00 principal of the so-called Cardinale notes and interest thereon at seven per cent. per annum from the date of said notes, September 18, 1924, for negligently failing to collect said notes. (c) In the sum of $6500.00 principal of the Alfred H. (Ed.) Johnson note and interest at seven per cent from the date of the death of the decedent, outstanding and uncollected and now uncollectable. (d) In the sum of $14,000.00 for failure to collect from Victoriano Sanchez, liquidator of the Compania Mercantile Internacional. (e) In the sum of $35,000.00 loss on the sale of the Tia Juana real property, fractional portions of lots 9 and 10, block 40, Tia Juana, Mexico, according to old plat thereof sold to Mariano Escobeda and the Compania Commercial S. A. for $35,000.00 less than the fair market value. (f) In the sum of $13,895.00 spent in speculation on the mining claims. (g) In the sum of $500.00 per month from the date of the death of the decedent, loss suffered from the renewal of the leases with the Compania Commercial owned by Miguel Gonzales after he had offered to surrender and cancel them. (h) In the sum of $50.00 per month from January 1, 1929, rental of store room occupied by Eustachio Valle. (i) In the total sum of $3605.75 payments to Ernestine Belindez on her fifth class claim before delinquent income and Federal Estate taxes drawing 12 per cent interest were paid."

"Ten: In suspending, postponing and reserving decision upon and deferring for further hearing the following issues and matters presented for determination, viz: (Consisting of a restatement of subdivisions a, b, c, d, and f, of specification eight just quoted.)"

"Twelve: In failing to make findings and conclusions upon and to determine and adjudicate the following matters on issues squarely presented for determination and adjudication, viz: (a) The misconduct and negligence of the Executor Banks in entering into the contract Exhibit A with Gertrude Marquez Barreiro, agreeing that one-half of the property of the estate should be set aside and distributed to her, and that her share should be placed in trust with the said Banks during her lifetime, and in demanding that she execute a trust agreement in accordance with said contract and offering to allow a distribution of a full one-half of the property to her if she would execute such trust agreement, engaging the estate in a prolonged, void proceedings in partial distribution because of her refusal, claiming and collecting fees for extraordinary services in said void proceedings and afterward having said proceedings set aside as void."

Many other specifications of error are made but have been omitted here as they are a restatement of those already quoted, couched in different language or necessarily involved therein.

We will have occasion to refer to Code sections relating to probate and guardianship proceedings. All such references will be made to the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure in effect at the time the questions discussed here arose and not to the Probate Code now in effect.

Appellants' first contention, that the Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association did not lawfully succeed to the office of executor by means of the series of purchases and consolidations, presents a question which has not been definitely decided in this state. As a first answer to this contention, respondent urges that this matter is res adjudicata and cannot properly be considered on this appeal, and relies upon the following facts: Appellants' original objections to the fourth annual account presented the issue as to whether or not the Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association had succeeded to the office of executor and requested its removal from office as an interloper. Thereupon the executor filed a petition seeking an order that it had succeeded the Southern Trust & Commerce Bank as executor. By a minute order made on September 13, 1929, the petition to remove the executor was denied, and the petition of the bank was dismissed on the ground that the order sought was unnecessary. The minute order was followed by the formal judgment of November 21, 1929, which we have already quoted. While respondent has presented forceful arguments in support of its contention, we prefer to place our conclusion that the respondent is now the due and lawful executor of the will of deceased upon other grounds. Whether this order, under the circumstances, could be interlocutory, is a question that seems not to have been determined in California, and authorities in other jurisdictions are not in harmony.

The various mutations by which the Southern Trust & Commerce Bank finally was purchased by and consolidated into the Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association have been fully set forth in the opinion of the Honorable Charles C. Haines, trial judge as follows: "On December 31, 1926, under the provisions of section 31 of the California Bank Act (as amended by St. 1921, p. 1373, § 15) the Southern Trust and Commerce Bank sold its business, including its Trust Department, to the Bank of America, which had trust powers and was authorized to do business as a trust company in this state. Before the sale was completed the Bank of America and Liberty Bank consolidated under the provisions of section 31a of the California Bank Act and continued its corporate existence under the name of 'Liberty Bank of America,' which likewise had trust powers and was authorized by law to transact business as a trust company in this state. In January, 1927, the State Superintendent of Banks approved the sale of the Southern Trust and Commerce Bank to the Liberty Bank of America and thereupon the trust business of the Southern Trust and Commerce Bank was transferred to the Liberty Bank of America. On the 15th day of February, 1927, the Liberty Bank of America, under the provisions of section 31 of the California Bank Act, sold all of its assets to the Bank of Italy and said sale was approved by the Superintendent of Banks of the State of California, and thereupon the trust business of the Liberty Bank of America was thereafter transferred to the Bank of Italy, which was a state institution and had trust powers and was authorized by law to do business as a trust company in this state. On the 1st of March, 1927, the Bank of Italy under the provisions of section 5154 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (12 USCA § 35) was converted into and became a national banking association under the name of Bank of Italy National Trust and Savings Association with its principal place of business at San Francisco, California. Immediately upon its conversion into a national banking association, Bank of Italy National Trust and Savings Association made the deposits required by law and received from the Federal Reserve Board and from the Superintendent of Banks of the State of California permits and certificates authorizing it to do business as a trust company in this state." These transitions involve purchases under section 31 of the California Bank Act (St. 1909, p. 87, as amended), and consolidations under section 31a of the same act, together with the reorganization of a state bank into a national banking association under sections 35 and 36 of chapter 2 and section 248 of chapter 3 of title 12 of the United States Code Annotated. A decision of the interesting question presented requires careful consideration of portions of these sections.

Section 31 of the California Bank Act, dealing with the sale and purchase of banks, in effect at the time of the above purchases, contains the following provisions: "Upon the approval by the superintendent of banks of an agreement of sale and purchase and the transfer of the business of a trust department or of a bank having a trust department the purchasing bank shall, ipso facto and by operation of law and without further transfer, substitution, act or deed, and in all courts and places, be deemed and held to have succeeded and shall become subrogated and shall succeed to all rights, obligations, properties, assets, investments, deposits, demands, contracts, agreements, court and private trusts and other relations to any person, creditor, depositor, trustor, principal or beneficiary of any court or private trust, obligations and liabilities of every nature, and shall execute and perform all such court and private trusts in the same manner as though it had itself originally assumed the relation or trust or incurred the obligation or liability."

Section 31a of the same act (as added by St. 1913, p. 152, and amended by St. 1921, p. 181), governing the consolidation of banks, provides in part as follows: "When the superintendent of banks issues the certificate of authorization provided for by section one hundred twenty-eight of this act the new or consolidated corporation shall be a body politic and corporate by the name stated in the certificate, and for the term of fifty years, unless it is, in the articles of incorporation and consolidation, otherwise stated and thereupon each constituent corporation named in the articles of incorporation and consolidation must be deemed and held to have become extinct in all courts and places, and said new corporation must be deemed and held in all courts and places to have succeeded to all their several capital stocks, properties, trusts, claims, demands, contracts, agreements, assets, choses and rights in action of every kind and description, both at law and in equity, and to be entitled to possess, enjoy, and enforce the same and every thereof, as fully and completely as either and every of its constituents might have done had no consolidation taken place. Said consolidated or new corporation must also, in all courts and places, be deemed and held to have become subrogated to its several constituents and each thereof, in respect to all their contracts and agreements with other parties, and all their debts, obligations, and liabilities, of every kind and nature, to any persons, corporations, or bodies politic, whomsoever, or whatsoever, and said new corporation must sue and be sued in its own name in any and every case in which any or either of its constituents might have sued or might have been sued at law or in equity had no such consolidation been made."

Sections 35 and 36 of chapter 2, title 12, United States Code Annotated, provide for the reorganization of state banks into national banking associations. Section 248 of chapter 3 of the same Code provides that a national bank, when not prohibited by state or local laws, may have "the right to act as trustee, executor, administrator, registrar of stocks and bonds, guardian of estates, assignee, receiver, committee of estates of lunatics, or in any other fiduciary capacity in which State banks, trust companies, or other corporations which come into competition with national banks are permitted to act under the laws of the State in which the national bank is located."

[1] We cannot see how the Legislature could have been more explicit and clear in the language it used in the subdivision of section 31 of the California Bank Act which we have quoted in specifying the right of the purchasing bank to ipso facto succeed to all of the rights, privileges, and benefits of the purchased bank without any further court or other proceedings. It would do violence to the plain language of this section to hold that a purchasing bank would not automatically succeed to the office of executor held by the purchased bank, unless the language of the Bank Act be modified by some other statutory enactment or be repugnant to some provision of our Constitution. This perhaps explains the scarcity of decisions in California upon this question. However, two recent decisions are of assistance to us in construing this section.

In the matter of the Estate of Barnett, 97 Cal. App. 138, 275 P. 453, 454, the Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association, the same corporation that is before us here as executor, filed its annual account as trustee under the will of Melancton Barnett, deceased. It asserted its right of succession from the original corporate trustee appointed in the decree of distribution of the probate court to the office of trustee of this trust estate following various purchases, consolidations, and mergers with its predecessors. The beneficiaries under the trust objected to the account filed by the Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association upon the ground that it could not succeed to the office of the original trustee merely by operation of law resulting from these sales, consolidations, and mergers. The court held adversely to this contention, and in so doing said: "Sections 31 (as amended by St. 1921, p. 1373, § 15), 31a (as amended by St. 1921, p. 181), and 31b (as added by St. 1921, p. 1375, § 16), of this act provide for the transfer of the business of banking corporations by sale, by consolidation, and by merger. Each section makes special provision for the transfer of trusteeships by such corporations, the provisions of section 31 relating to a sale reading, in part, as follows: 'Upon the approval of the superintendent of banks * * * the purchasing bank shall, ipso facto and by operation of law and without further transfer, substitution, act or deed, and in all courts and places, be deemed and held to have succeeded * * * to all rights, obligations, * * * court and private trusts and other relations to any * * * principal or beneficiary of any court or private trust.' With this statute before it, it became the duty of the court sitting in probate to recognize the respondent as the new trustee and that court was without jurisdiction to hear or determine any protest on the part of the beneficiaries to the statutory substitution of the trustee, unless the statute is void as offending some constitutional provision."

The case of Bank of America of California v. Granger, 115 Cal. App. 210, 1 P.(2d) 479, also furnishes us with authority for the conclusion that the office of executor passed to the Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association by operation of law. This case involved purchases and consolidations of state banks under sections 31 and 31a of the California Bank Act. While the question of the right of a purchasing bank to automatically succeed to the trusts held by the purchased bank or the right of a consolidated bank to succeed to those of its component parts was not particularly discussed in the opinion, it was of necessity before the court, and the conclusions there reached could not have been arrived at had not the court been of the opinion that all of the rights of the predecessor banks merged in the successor banks by operation of law under the provisions of the two sections of the California Bank Act from which we have quoted.

Section 31a of the California Bank Act is also clear and specific in its terms. Its provisions have been thoroughly discussed in the case of Mercantile Trust Co. v. San Joaquin Agricultural Corporation, 89 Cal. App. 558, 265 P. 583, 585. This case involved the right of a bank, after consolidation, to receive and exercise a trust in which the bank with which it had consolidated was named as trustee. In reaching the conclusion that the consolidated bank succeeded to this office by operation of law under the provisions of section 31a of the California Bank Act the court said: "It is not claimed here, nor could it be, upon any sound or reasonable basis or hypothesis, that the legislation involved in the foregoing section of the Bank Act in any manner or degree impinges upon or transcends any of the constitutional restrictions by which the legislative department of the state is hedged. Nor can it be doubted that where, as here, there is, in pursuance of the provisions of section 31a of our Bank Act, a consolidation of two banking corporations the result of which is to bring into existence a single corporation as the successor of the two, the former ipso facto succeeds to and is vested with ownership of the combined capital stocks, properties, trusts, contracts, etc., of the two several constituents of the corporation thus created. * * * The rule as thus stated is declared and expressed in section 4712, vol. 7, Fletcher's Cyc. Corp., as follows: 'When corporations are consolidated, the rights, franchises and privileges of the consolidated corporation depend upon the intention of the Legislature as manifested by the statute authorizing the consolidation. The Legislature may confer upon it, with the consent of the consolidating corporations, which consent is given impliedly by entering into the consolidation, all the rights, franchises, privileges and property of the consolidating corporations, or it may withhold some of them, or it may add to them new rights, franchises or privileges. * * *' See, also, 5 Thompson on Corporations, §§ 6083, 6107, 6111.

"The banking laws of the state of Illinois, as well as those of the state of New York, in all vital respects, are substantially the same as those of California. The provisions in the statutes of those states relating to the merging and consolidation of banking corporations are practically similar to those contained in section 31a of our own Bank Act. Especially illuminating and peculiarly pertinent to the present investigation, therefore, is the discussion in the decisions of the courts of those states in construing and expounding the several provisions of their statutes relative to banking corporations and the scope and the effect thereof with respect to the rights acquired and the obligations assumed by the offspring of the consolidation of two or more banking corporations. The case of Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Zinser et al., 264 Ill. 31, 35, et seq., Ann. Cas. 1915D, 931, 105 N. E. 718, is, in the facts, strikingly similar to the case at bar, and discusses and disposes of several points advanced here. In that case a corporation named Real Estate Title & Trust Company of Chicago was made by one Etta Nelson the executor of her last will and testament. By her will she authorized said corporation, as her executor, to sell and convey the real estate of which she died seized. At the time the will was made the Real Estate Title & Trust Company and the Chicago Title & Trust Company were two distinct and unrelated corporations, each organized under and according to the laws of the state of Illinois and each vested with the power and right to accept and execute trusts and to be appointed assignee or trustee by deed, and also to be appointed executor, guardian, and trustee by will. Subsequently to the making of the will, and prior to the death of Etta Nelson, the two corporations were consolidated into one, under the name of Chicago Title & Trust Company, in pursuance of the statute of said state authorizing such consolidation. After due legal proceedings, letters testamentary were issued to the plaintiff (the consolidated corporation), and thereafter said plaintiff instituted a suit to compel the specific performance by the Zinsers of an agreement, entered into by and between the latter and the plaintiff after letters testamentary had been issued to the corporation, whereby the Zinsers agreed to purchase certain real estate belonging to the estate of the deceased. The suit was resisted upon grounds involving objections similar to some of those urged against the position of the plaintiff in the case now before us. The cause reached the Supreme Court of Illinois, and the action was by that court sustained in an opinion so clearly and satisfactorily disposing of the objections referred to that we feel that pardonably we may in extenso quote therefrom as follows:

"'By the consolidation of the Real Estate Title & Trust Company and the Chicago Title & Trust Company the original corporations ceased to exist, and the appellee, as the consolidated corporation, acquired and succeeded to all the faculties, property, rights, and franchises of its component parts and became subject to all the duties, obligations, and conditions imposed upon them. Robertson v. City of Rockford, 21 Ill. 451; Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad Co. v. Moffitt, 75 Ill. 524.

"'The material question here is whether the general rule that a trustee cannot delegate his authority to another is an obstacle to the exercise of a power by the appellee to act as executor or trustee where one of the constituent corporations was named as such. That general rule rests upon the ground that the selection of a trustee implies personal confidence in his discretion and judgment. If a power is given to an executor or trustee which is not ministerial or given for the purpose of executing a declared trust which the court can enforce but which involves the exercise of discretion and judgment, the power cannot be delegated or transferred to another, either by the trustee or a court. The rule, however, cannot be applied to the case of a corporation, because the element of trust in the judgment and discretion of an individual is entirely wanting. A corporation is without personality, and if it is selected as trustee or executor there can be no reliance upon individual discretion or even upon the continuance of the same administration. Etta Nelson, in naming the Real Estate Title & Trust Company as executor and trustee, knew that its directors, officers, and stockholders might change from time to time, and that the statute authorized a change of name or place of business, enlargement, or change of the object for which the corporation was formed, an increase or decrease of capital stock or change in the number of shares or par value, increase or decrease of the number of directors, and the consolidation of the corporation with any other corporation then existing or that might thereafter be organized. She therefore contemplated that these changes might occur, and that the Real Estate Title & Trust Company might be consolidated with some other corporation such as the Chicago Title & Trust Company, and that it would thereby cease to exist and become a component part of a new corporation. A consolidation took place and a new corporation was created from the original corporations, with an enlarged capital stock and unimpaired franchises. The appellee was entitled to execute the trust, and the chancellor did not err in overruling the demurrer.' To the same effect are the Matter of the Will, etc., of Bergdorf, 206 N. Y. 309, 99 N. E. 714; McElwain Co. v. Primavera, 181 App. Div. 929, 930, 168 N. Y. S. 1134. See latter case also reported in 180 App. Div. 288, 167 N. Y. S. 815."

[2, 3] Under the banking laws of the United States, the changing of a state bank into a national banking association does not destroy the identity of the original bank. All the assets and rights of the state bank pass to the national bank without any formal assignment, and are subject to all the existing liabilities and obligations of the state bank as if the change had not taken place. Michigan Insurance Bank v. Eldred, 143 U. S. 293, 12 S. Ct. 450, 36 L. Ed. 162; Metropolitan National Bank v. Claggett, 141 U. S. 520, 12 S. Ct. 60, 35 L. Ed. 841. Where a state bank reorganizes into a national bank, it passes from one jurisdiction to another, but its identity is not thereby necessarily destroyed. It remains substantially the same institution under another name and subject to new control. Coffey v. National Bank, 46 Mo. 140, 2 Am. Rep. 488; City National Bank v. Phelps, 86 N. Y. 484. With these rules before us, the conclusion is inevitable that the transition of the Bank of Italy, a state institution, into Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association, a national bank, carried with it the office of executor of the last will and testament of Benigno Barreiro, deceased, by operation of law and without the necessity of court order.

Appellants seriously contend that jurisdiction over the estates of decedents is vested in the probate courts in California; that these courts have discretion in the appointment of executors given them by law; that an executor is required by law to take the oath of office after its appointment, and that the provisions of the state and national banking acts must be construed with and modified by the provisions of the probate law of this state; that the Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association did not receive its appointment as executor through an order of the probate court, and did not qualify by having one of its officers take the required oath of office, and that it cannot now be held to be the duly appointed, qualified, and acting executor of the estate of Benigno Barreiro, deceased, but must be regarded and treated as an interloper in the office which it asserts it occupies; that the right to name the executor of his estate is a right belonging to a testator, and to hold that the office of executor would descend to a corporation not named as such executor would destroy the right of nomination by the testator.

Several of the foregoing objections are answered in the portion of the opinion in Mercantile Trust Company v. San Joaquin Agricultural Corporation, supra, from which we have already quoted. Some are also considered in Estate of Barnett, supra, where the court said: "But, to our minds, there is one principle which controls a situation of this kind and that is the principle of consent of the parties. The Legislature, as we have stated, having the power to enact the legislation, and the trust having been created in contemplation of it, the consent of all parties to the legislative method of substitution of trustees must be deemed to have been given. Mr. Justice Hart, in the Mercantile Trust Case, expressed the same thought in this language: 'The statute authorizing the consolidation or merger of banking corporations, in so far as it prescribes a scheme for the transfer of their properties, * * * enters into and becomes a part of every agreement or obligation * * * and of this the defendant (the trustor), its directors, and bondholders are presumed to have known before and at the time of the execution of the trust deed * * * and * * * to have impliedly assented to the exercise of the legal right of said bank to merge * * * with all the consequences following such merger or consolidation as are prescribed by the law.' The right of the trustor to provide a method of filling vacancies and for appointment of successors in the trust is not disputed. 26 R. C. L. p. 1278. But when a trustor, in full contemplation of the provisions of the Bank Act relating to the sale, consolidation, or merger of banking corporations, voluntarily designates such a corporation as trustee he must be deemed to have adopted and included within his declaration of trust the full scheme for substitution of trustees prescribed in that act. No more forceful application of this principle could be made than in a case such as we have here of a testamentary trust, because the right to make a testamentary disposition of property is not an inherent right, but one which depends entirely upon the consent of the Legislature. Thus, when the Legislature has prescribed the rules and conditions under which the disposition and administration of estates may be had, the testator is deemed to intend the result which such rules produce and 'they affect the testamentary disposition and provisions as though embodied in the will.'"

The same questions were considered in In re Bergdorf's Will, supra, from which it appears that the will of a decedent named the Morton Trust Company as his executor. Before his death the Morton Trust Company merged into another corporation known as the Guaranty Trust Company under the banking laws of the state of New York which contain provisions similar to those we have quoted from the California Bank Act. After the death of the testator, the Guaranty Trust Company applied for letters testamentary, which application was contested. In denying the contest and granting the letters to the Guaranty Trust Company, the New York court said: "It was within the power of the Legislature to enact that a trust company, into which another trust company lawfully designated as an executor had been merged subsequent to the making and prior to the probate of the will, should be the transferee of the privilege or right of being the executor. * * * By virtue of the statute, effective as a part of the will, the Guaranty Company was designated as an executor, and as such is entitled to receive the letters testamentary." Chicago Title & Trust Company v. Zinser, supra, strongly supports this conclusion.

The case of O'Rourke v. Standard Wood Turning Company, 204 App. Div. 658, 198 N. Y. S. 632, 634, decides a question very similar to the one before us. An award under the Workmen's Compensation Law of the state of New York had been made to Bridget O'Rourke for the death of her husband. She had been declared incompetent and the Trust Company of America, a New York corporation, appointed committee of her property. The Trust Company of America merged with the Equitable Trust Company of New York which petitioned for the payment of the award to it as the successor of the Trust Company of America. In directing the award to be paid to the Equitable Trust Company of New York, the court said: "The merger was an equitable and ratable combination of the assets of each of said companies, becoming one instead of two bodies, and the taking of the one name for both companies. The question is asked: Is the relation of committee and incompetent a trust relation? In Person v. Warren, 14 Barb. 488, it is held that the committee is a trustee of an express trust, although at the same time he is a servant or bailiff of the court. In People ex rel. Smith v. Commissioner of Taxes, 100 N. Y. 215, 3 N. E. 85, the court says: 'The office of committee is as well defined and specifically referred to in law and in the statutes, as that of guardian, executor or administrator.' The question here is the effect of the merger, and the force of the statute is pointed out in Bank of Long Island v. Young, 101 App. Div. 88, 91 N. Y. S. 849. It is disclosed in Matter of Bergdorf's Will, 206 N. Y. 309, 99 N. E. 714, that the testator made his will in 1904, he named, with others, the Morton Trust Company an executor thereof. In January, 1910, the Morton Trust Company merged into the Guaranty Trust Company. The testator died in January, 1911. It was held that the merger did not prevent the issuing of letters testamentary to Guaranty Trust Company. It is found by the Industrial Board that the compensation 'is due and payable to Bridget O'Rourke,' and directs its payment to her committee, the Equitable Trust Company of New York. I am of the opinion that said committee has authority to take it under section 494 of the Banking Law." It must be borne in mind that in this case there was no new appointment of a committee by the court after the merger and no showing of the new committee taking an oath of office.

In Turner's Estate, 277 Pa. 110, 120 A. 701, the orphan's court of Pennsylvania appointed a state trust company as guardian of the estates of minors. The trust company was afterwards consolidated with a national bank which petitioned the orphan's court to order the guardianship funds turned over to it as guardian of the minors. The petition was denied by the orphan's court, but upon appeal was reversed by the Superior Court, which order was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the state. In the opinion of the latter court no question of the necessity of an application for letters of guardianship by the national bank after the consolidation was discussed, but a consideration of this question would seem to be necessarily involved in the decision, and it must therefore be construed as indicating that the conclusion of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania was that the office of guardian occupied by the state trust company under order of the orphan's court automatically descended upon the national bank at the time of the consolidation, and that no application for appointment or oath of office by the national bank was necessary.

[4, 5] The next question involved in this appeal is whether or not the provisions of the California Bank Act, under which we have held that the office of executor descended by operation of law to a successor corporation, violates the provisions of section 5 of article 6 of the Constitution of California (as amended November 4, 1924), which vested original jurisdiction of all probate matters in the Superior Court. Appellants insist that the power to select and appoint a new administrator with the will annexed is taken from the probate court upon the happening of the purchase or consolidation of an executor bank. A sufficient answer to this is found in the cases which we have already cited, through which runs the principle that purchase or consolidation does not create an entire new entity, but, to paraphrase the expression of a court of a sister state, merely directs the blood of the old corporation into the veins of the new, the old living in the new. Further, the power to appoint a particular person or corporation as an executor or administrator concerns procedure in a probate court rather than its jurisdiction. A testator has the right to nominate the executor of his will, and the probate court will appoint the nominee in the absence of legal disqualification. Section 1365 of the Code of Civil Procedure has long provided the rules governing probate courts in the order of priority which must be followed in appointing administrators. These provisions have been recognized as lawful under the Constitution, and have never been held to interfere with the jurisdiction of the probate court in the administration of estates. By analogy we conclude that the holding that the office of executor descends to a purchasing or consolidated bank is not a violation of these constitutional provisions any more than it is a limitation on the probate court in the appointment of an executor or administrator in the instances above specified. The power remains in the probate court to remove the successor bank from the office if occasion should arise and the necessity for such action present itself.

We have reached the conclusion that the Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association succeeded to the office of the executor of the estate of Benigno Barreiro, deceased, without the necessity of court action, and that it is the duly appointed, qualified, and acting executor of that estate. We are aware that this conclusion is contrary to the weight of authority on this question in Massachusetts.

[6] Appellants' second specification of error naturally divides itself into two phases, namely: (1) Is the finding that the Compania had an existence separate and apart from deceased during his lifetime supported by the evidence? And (2) is a like finding concerning the Compania and the executor supported by the evidence? We cannot see how the first of these two questions possesses any such materiality as to deserve extended discussion here. This appeal is taken in a probate proceeding, the purpose of which is to settle and distribute the estate of deceased under the terms of his will, and is from an order of the court made after extended hearings on an account. The executor was required to take charge of the property of the estate of the deceased as it existed at the time of the death. Whether or not deceased during his lifetime operated in Mexico through the Compania as his alter ego is no concern of the probate court, as the alter ego question between deceased and the Compania is not material, and can have no bearing on the conduct of the executor in the administration of the estate. Whether or not the executor used the corporation as its alter ego in taking possession of and operating the properties of the Compania in Mexico is more directly involved in the appeal in case Civ. No. 488 [13 P.(2d) 1033] the opinion in which is this day filed, and is referred to for a more extended discussion of, and decision upon, this question. It is not necessary to repeat here the facts there stated nor the reasons given for upholding the conclusions of the trial court.

Appellants' third assignment of error is necessarily involved in the second phase of their second assignment, and is also considered and decided in the opinion filed this day in case Civ. No. 488 [13 P.(2d) 1033], which we refer to and incorporate herein.

[7, 8] Appellants complain that the finding that the estate has not been damaged, prejudiced, nor confronted with loss because of a failure to have ancillary letters of administration taken out in the republic of Mexico is not supported by the evidence. In considering this question, we must bear in mind that the principal estate of the deceased consisted of shares of stock of the Compania which were in his possession in California at the time of his death. This stock was personal property (sections 657, 658, and 663, Civ. Code), and, "if there is no law to the contrary, in the place where personal property is situated, it is deemed to follow the person of its owner, and is governed by the law of his domicile." Section 946, Civ. Code; Estate of Lathrop, 165 Cal. 243, 131 P. 752. Where there is no ancillary administration, it has been held, on the grounds of comity, that the domiciliary representative may administer on stock of a foreign corporation and may be required to account for funds in a foreign jurisdiction of which it takes possession. Reed v. Hollister, 44 Cal. App. 533, 186 P. 819; Brown v. San Francisco Gaslight Company, 58 Cal. 426. We have been cited to no law of the republic of Mexico under which an administration by a California court on the stock of a Mexican corporation would not be recognized there. It appears from the record that proceedings to probate the estate were started in a Baja California court by officials of that state, but were discontinued as unnecessary. The termination of this proceeding, if it can be considered terminated, seems to have met with the approval of the parties interested because of the great expense of such proceedings in Mexico which appear to be considerably larger than in similar proceedings in California. The assets of the estate in Mexico, exclusive of those whose title is of record in the Compania, are of comparatively small and questionable value. It was the conclusion of the trial judge that the value of the property to be recovered to the estate by ancillary proceedings in Mexico would not exceed, and might be much less, than the cost of the proceedings to the estate. This conclusion is amply supported by the evidence, and it does not appear that the lack of administration proceedings in Mexico has yet caused proven loss to the estate. It should be the object of the administration of an estate to conserve its assets and not waste them. Should it prove advisable to take out ancillary letters in Mexico at any time in the future, there is nothing to prevent such proceedings being instituted.

[9, 10] Appellants, in addition to their objections to the fourth annual account and the amendments and supplements thereto, ask the removal of the executor under the provisions of section 1626 of the Code of Civil Procedure because of waste, embezzlement, and mismanagement of the estate. They present many grounds in support of this petition, some of which are considered in this opinion, and others in the opinion in case Civ. No. 488, to which we again refer for a discussion of these questions. Many of the grounds urged for the removal of the executor and a revocation of its letters concern matters directly involved in the first, second, and third annual accounts which were heard and settled by the court in the regular course of the probate proceedings. No appeals were taken from the orders settling these accounts, and, inasmuch as they have now become final, they are not subject to review here. Estate of Clary, 203 Cal. 335, 264 P. 242. Up to and including the settlement of the third account, these include what appellants refer to as lavishing money upon the family of deceased and paying a family allowance out of all proportion to the assets of the estate and its income. These allowances, including those made after the settlement of the third account, were made upon petitions to and under orders of the court. They were large, and, in view of the facts now disclosed as to the actual value of the estate and its present income, appear to have been extravagant, but this was undoubtedly due to a mistaken estimate of the actual value of the property belonging to the estate and the permanency of the very considerable income from this property which existed at the time of the death of Mr. Barreiro and for some little time thereafter. These mistakes were indulged in by Mrs. Barreiro, all the parties interested in the probate proceedings, and their then attorneys. They were honestly made, and the amounts of the allowances can furnish no grounds for the removal of the executor under the facts disclosed by the record. The order settling the fourth account made a substantial reduction in the family allowance.

[11] Appellants urge that their rights were not properly protected in the estate affairs and in the settlement of the first three annual accounts, because Norman R. Morison and Dean M. Plaister, who were the guardians of their estates, were at the same time the trust officers of the executor and acting as its representatives in the active management of the affairs of the estate, and therefore occupied adverse and hostile positions in the two offices. No suit in equity has been brought to vacate any of the orders settling these accounts. We cannot conclude that the sole fact of the same person being the guardian of the estates of minors who are distributees under a will, and at the same time in charge of the affairs of the estate for the corporate executor in itself, demonstrates that he occupies two hostile and adverse positions rendering his acts conclusively illegal in either of them. It is a common custom to appoint the parent of minors, who take under a will, the executor of the will and the guardian of the persons and estates of the minors. That both these offices may be filled by the same person is recognized by the laws of this state. Sections 1365, 1751, Code Civ. Proc. When both offices are held by the same person, that fact of necessity is known to the court hearing the accounts. It may be a reason for a more careful scrutiny of such accounts, but it cannot be said that one and the same person cannot fill both offices. The fact that one person fills both offices cannot be made the sole ground for his removal from either of them.

[12] Appellants complain that the executor wasted large sums of money in needless and useless litigation. They have reference to litigation in the republic of Mexico which we have considered in the opinion in case Civ. No. 488, and to which we refer for a discussion of this question. They also refer to the litigation resulting in the decision in the case of Estate of Barreiro, 86 Cal. App. 764, 261 P. 509. That proceeding was started by Mrs. Barreiro in her petition for partial distribution to her of that portion of the estate which she claimed belonged to her as "community property," in reality being the property which she owned as tenant in common with her husband after the divorce. This litigation arose out of a mutual mistake indulged in by all the attorneys then connected with the estate and the proceedings. They apparently assumed that Mrs. Barreiro would take the property which belonged to her, through the estate, rather than adversely to it. Her attorneys chose the forum in which she sought to assert her rights. She instituted the proceeding which was contested through all of the courts of this state having probate jurisdiction. The order of partial distribution which was made was vacated by the trial court on the ground that it was beyond the jurisdiction of a probate court. No appeal was taken from this decision. In his findings, conclusions, and judgment under attack here, the trial judge held that, as the mistake resulting in the order of partial distribution had been honestly made, it afforded no ground for removal of the executor under the provisions of section 1626 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is apparent from the record, and from the final order of the trial judge settling the account wherein he refused the allowance of further fees to the executor and its attorneys at that time, that in the future, in fixing fees for unusual services, he will exercise a sound discretion, taking into consideration the extra services performed and to be performed in the probate proceedings. Under this state of the record we conclude that the finding of the trial court, that the expenses of this litigation do not furnish grounds for the removal of the executor, finds support in the record.

[13] Appellants further urge that the executor should be removed and its letters revoked because of a payment to Mrs. Barreiro of some $1,300 under what is termed an "advancement" to her. She was given $1 under the will of deceased, and was not entitled to receive any greater sum under the provisions of that document. This "advancement," of course, should not be credited as a lawful expenditure by the executor out of the funds of the estate, as Mrs. Barreiro, having been divorced from her husband, was neither his widow nor his heir at law at the time of his death. She was, however, the owner of a portion of the property in the possession of the deceased at the time of his death and which the executor took over when appointed and has since held. These advancements should be charged against Mrs. Barreiro's portion of the property when it is carved out of the assets held by the executor and an accounting had between them. We believe that the trial court was justified in holding that these payments did not furnish any sufficient ground for the revocation of letters testamentary as the mistake was honestly made.

[14] Appellants complain of a finding of the trial court to the effect that the inventory and appraisement returned and filed in this proceeding was greatly in excess of the actual value of the property appraised. They direct their arguments chiefly to the appraisement of the shares of stock in the Compania. Three appraisers were appointed by order of court, one of whom was an inheritance tax appraiser. They appraised the one thousand shares of stock in the Compania at $500,000, including within this appraisement the stock belonging to Mrs. Barreiro. It is of course immediately apparent that this was a mistake, as the executor could not administer upon any property not owned by the deceased at the time of his death. The valuation placed upon this stock was seemingly measured by the income derived from rentals. This was an attempt to value property by its use rather than its market value. The difficulty of obtaining a reasonably accurate appraisement of this or like property of the estate may be demonstrated by an exhibit from the record showing appraisements of Mexicali property made over a short interval of time. For the purposes of illustration only here follow the total appraised values of practically the same properties: In Mexican money, the first, $399,256; the second, $399,256.98; the third, $1,040,064.76. The same properties appraised in money of the United States, the first, $131,500; the second, $199,268.34; the third, $111,500. The last appraisement in Mexican money, $1,040,064.76, seems to have been based upon cadastral values, and is so in excess of the other appraisements as to cast a decided doubt upon the reliability of cadastral values as measures of the market value of property. We cannot disturb the finding of the trial court that the appraised value of the shares in the Compania was greatly in excess of its market value.

[15] Appellants complain of what are denominated in the accounts as "liquidating dividends" taken from the Compania by the executor and used by it in paying the expenses of administration, the family allowances, repairs to the property in Mexicali damaged by earthquake, and other such purposes. The record discloses that in excess of $83,000 was so used. They maintain that this amounted to an unlawful distribution of the capital assets of the corporation and was conclusive evidence of waste, mismanagement, and embezzlement of estate funds by the executor requiring its removal from office.

The Compania was incorporated with one thousand shares of capital stock with a par value of $100 per share in Mexican money, which would give a total capital value of approximately $50,000 in money of the United States at the rate of exchange prevailing at the time of the death of Mr. Barreiro. The excess of the actual value of the property owned by the Compania over the par value of its stock was more than $83,000. If the corporation were in California, this excess could be considered as surplus, undivided profits, or a reserve for dividend purposes. The distribution of a portion of this surplus or undivided profits for the benefit of the stockholders would not in itself be illegal, as the assets of the Compania were not reduced in value below the par value of its capital stock. The fact of the withdrawals of this money, in itself disassociated from the actual expenditures made, does not furnish grounds for the removal of the executor. The conclusions of the trial judge in refusing to revoke the letters testamentary and remove the executor from its office because of waste and mismanagement of the estate or embezzlement of estate funds were based upon a great mass of conflicting evidence. Some of this evidence sustains his conclusions that the executor was not guilty of the acts charged. We therefore conclude that the order refusing to remove the executor and revoke its letters finds support in the evidence and may not be disturbed by us. Estate of Bottoms, 156 Cal. 129, 103 P. 849.

[16] We now pass to the consideration of the Manuel Lujan accounts, the so-called Cardinale notes, the Johnson note, the accounts of Victoriano Sanchez as liquidator of Compania Internacional, and money spent on the mining claims, upon all of which, except a portion of the Lujan accounts, the trial court reserved its ruling. The account of the executor was virtually surcharged in the net amount of $4,782.95 to be paid to the Compania out of its own funds, and $500 out of the estate funds. This was held to have been illegally paid to Manuel Lujan. Appellants claim an additional amount of $3,506.68 should have been surcharged as having been illegally paid to Lujan. This latter amount was one among a number of items upon which the trial court reserved its ruling. Appellants complain of the refusal to surcharge the account with the various amounts upon which ruling was reserved. They maintain that all of these amounts should have been surcharged to the executor and it required to pay the money into the assets of the estate. We have examined the evidence and agree with the trial judge that in many respects the account is most incomplete and unsatisfactory. We can see no reason why he could not reserve his rulings upon the allowance or disallowance of any portion of the account wherein the evidence was unsatisfactory and incomplete. In re Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Imperial (Cal. Sup.) 1 P.(2d) 422. It would be a manifest injustice to the executor to surcharge the account with items, if the payments were lawfully made, and would be a like injustice to the distributees to fail to surcharge the account with them, if they were not made in accordance with law. The right of a probate judge to reserve his rulings upon any items of an account concerning the legality of which there is reasonable question was recognized in the early case of Reynolds v. Brumagim, 54 Cal. 254, where it was said: "The Court could in terms have settled the account as rendered, expressly reserving all questions as to liability for the omission now complained of."

[17] Appellants make one further criticism concerning the account of Manuel Lujan of which we must take notice. The trial judge found that Lujan had received from the executor and the Compania $10,050. Appellants assert he received an additional amount of $300 which the court failed to consider, and which should have been surcharged against the executor. Without making any further explanation or comment upon this payment, they merely refer to the clerk's transcript "Volume Two, page 431." On this page appears the following entry under date of January 1, 1927: "Southern Trust & Commerce Bank sight draft drawn by L. Lujan, $300.00." We presume that in the long record before us there is some valid explanation of this payment to Lujan and vouchers therefor. Error cannot be presumed, and we do not feel called upon to search the entire record to determine whether or not this expenditure, relatively small in amount, was legally made. We rely upon the well-established rule that error is not presumed and that an appellant must show error before an appellate court can hold that it has been committed by the trial court.

Appellants complain of the ruling of the trial court in refusing to surcharge the executor's account with $35,000, alleged to have been lost on the sale of Tia Juana real property; with $500 per month on the lease with the Compania Commercial; with $50 per month rent of a storeroom occupied by Eustaquio Valle; and with loss of interest from the payment of the claim of Ernestine Belindez. The trial court found against appellants on these items and that no loss resulted to the estate therefrom. This finding is attacked as not supported by the evidence and contrary to it.

[18, 19] The real property in question consisted of portions of lots 9 and 10 in block 40, Tia Juana, Mexico. These were sold to Mariano Escobeda and the Compania Commercial then owned by Miguel Gonzales. Escobeda paid $25,000 in lawful money of the United States for one portion of the property; the Compania Commercial paying $15,000 in like money for the other. The portion of the property purchased by Escobeda had been rented to him by deceased at $300 per month, and that purchased by the Compania Commercial had been rented to it at $100 per month. Appellants maintain that this last lease was very much below what it should have been, and that it could have been rented for from $300 to $350 per month. They argue that this property should have been producing a net revenue of 7 per cent. upon a valuation of $80,000. They produced two witnesses who attempted to testify as to the reasonable market value of the property. One, Silvio Blanco, a business man and resident of Tia Juana, estimated the fair market value of the property at $65,000. It was evident from his testimony that this value was based largely upon its rental value. He knew of no sales of, nor offers for, similar property in that city. The other witness, Juan J. Cervantes, an engineer in the department of public works of Tia Juana, estimated the value of the property at between $68,000 and $75,000. He knew of no sales of, nor offers for, similar property in Tia Juana, but seemingly placed his valuation on what is known there as cadastral values. Fixing market values in Tia Juana according to standards adopted in the United States was a very difficult problem, as there was no available evidence of sales of property in that city, and the estimates of values given by these witnesses were based upon rentals. The futility of attempting to fix the market value of these properties by the rentals produced at a given time is immediately apparent from the record. The properties of the estate in Mexico were used for the sale of liquor and kindred enterprises which are prohibited by law in California. These uses are not stable and rentals fluctuate with the conditions of business prevailing in the different localities. Property belonging to the Compania in the city of Mexicali which a few years ago rented for several hundred dollars a month is now untenanted. It nowhere appears in that portion of the record cited by appellants whether the valuation placed upon this property by either of the above witnesses was in Mexican money or in money of the United States. If it were in Mexican money, it would make their estimated valuations, measured in money of the United States according to the rate of exchange prevailing at that time, not more than $37,500, or $2,500 less than the executor actually received for the property.

Just before the sale of the Tia Juana real estate, the property belonging to the Compania in the city of Mexicali had been seriously damaged by earthquake, and repairs were necessary to keep it suitable for rental purposes. The greater portion of the income of the estate was derived from rentals there. Sufficient funds were not available for these repairs, and it seemed necessary to sell the Tia Juana property. Accordingly the executor made efforts to secure a purchaser. The best price offered for the property as a whole was $25,000. With the exercise of considerable diligence and effort, no purchaser could be found who would pay more than $40,000. This was the amount actually received.

Courts have experienced considerable difficulty in arriving at a rule which will always govern the fixing of the market value of property where there has been no actual demand for it, or where there have been no sales of similar property in the neighborhood. In the case of San Diego, etc., Co. v. Neale, 78 Cal. 63, 20 P. 372, 3 L. R. A. 83, such a situation was before the Supreme Court. In that case it was held that the value of the use of property, or its rental value, could not be used solely as a basis for fixing its market value; that by market value was meant the price the owner could obtain after a reasonable effort over an ample period of time in finding a purchaser and making a sale of the same or similarly situated property. While the value of the use of property, or in other words, its income, may be considered as an element in fixing its value, the value of the use cannot alone be taken as a standard upon which to estimate and fix its market value. We can find nothing in the evidence cited by appellants which would justify us in setting aside the conclusion of the trial judge that no loss was occasioned by the sale of the property in question for $40,000 in lawful money of the United States.

While appellants have not specified any error committed by the trial court in refusing to surcharge the accounts of the executor with alleged losses from sales of property in Mexicali and in Algodones, they devote many pages of their briefs to a discussion of these two questions. What we have said concerning the alleged loss through the sales of the Tia Juana property applies to the sales of property in Mexicali and Algodones.

[20] Appellants next complain of the loss of $500 per month in a renewal lease for rentals of Mexicali and Tia Juana properties to the Compania Commercial. The record discloses that Barreiro during his lifetime had leased these properties to this corporation which was owned and controlled by his friend Miguel Gonzales. The lease contained an option for a renewal over a period of years. It seems that the original lease contained a provision requiring that notice of an intention to exercise this option be given Barreiro at a Mexicali address. The notice was not sent to the Mexicali address, but was given to, and personally received by, Barreiro in San Diego and also in Tia Juana. Upon this technicality of the notice not having been given at the Mexicali address, Barreiro, shortly before his death, started suit in the Mexican courts to cancel the lease and recover possession of the property. This suit was pending at the time of his death. Subsequently a higher rental was offered by another party, but was rejected by the executor. A renewal lease was executed to Gonzales at the rental specified in the original lease. Appellants maintain that loss to the estate was occasioned by not accepting the higher rental offered by the prospective new tenant. They particularly refer to a conference held in San Diego between Mr. Morison, representing the executor, Gonzales, various attorneys, and others, during which Gonzales offered to cancel his lease and surrender the property to the possession of the executor. We have carefully examined this portion of the transcript, and find that Gonzales did make a statement in one portion of his testimony that he would cancel his lease, but all the evidence bearing on this subject would lead to the conclusion that this statement was not an offer of a present cancellation and surrender of the leased premises, but a request that the executor examine the legal rights of the parties under the original lease and option for extension, together with the notices of intention to exercise this option actually given to Mr. Barreiro, and, if after such investigation it was of the opinion that the suits against the Compania Commercial could be prosecuted to a successful termination, he would peacefully and without further litigation cancel his lease and surrender the property to the executor. We are of the opinion that the investigation made by the executor and its attorneys correctly disclosed that the action instituted by Barreiro could not have been brought to a successful conclusion. The new lease was for the same term and at a similar rental as specified in the option for an extension executed by Mr. Barreiro. Under this state of facts no loss was shown.

[21] Appellants complain of an alleged loss of rental of $50 per month on a storeroom occupied by Eustaquio Valle. It is not questioned that this storeroom had a rental value of the amount stated. Valle had been employed by the executor to take care of certain business connected with the Mexican properties and was paid a monthly salary, and as part of his compensation was furnished this room for use as an office. While the total compensation, including the use of the office, was somewhat in excess of that paid for like service in California, we have been referred to no evidence that would indicate that the total amount paid Valle was an unreasonable amount for such services in Baja California. There being no evidence to the contrary, we cannot disturb the finding of the trial court that the amount paid to Valle by the executor, including the free rental of the room in question, was a reasonable amount to be paid for his services, and that the estate suffered no loss thereby.

[22] Appellants make objection to the payment of the Belindez claim which had been allowed and which consisted of $750 and $2,855.75, paid on October 17, 1927, and December 21, 1927, respectively. They contend that the state succession taxes and the federal estate and income taxes ought to have been paid first because they bear a higher rate of interest than ordinary allowed claims, and thereby a loss of interest resulted to the estate. Section 1643 of the Code of Civil Procedure classifies obligations with reference to priority. Debts given priority under the laws of the United States are assigned to the third class while liens generally are assigned to the fourth class and general obligations of the estate to the fifth class. The Belindez claim was a recognized debt of the estate, and no objection can be made to its payment except, perhaps, as to time. From the opinion of the Hon. Charles C. Haines, trial judge, we quote and adopt the following: "In my judgment there can be no question about the propriety of paying it (the Belindez claim) prior to the payment of either the state succession tax or the federal estate tax. The state succession tax is a tax on the individual shares passing from the decedent by will or otherwise to other persons, and, though the executor is liable for it, it is paid out of their shares, not out of the gross estate, and obviously cannot be intended to have any priority over the claims of any creditors of the decedent. The federal estate tax is reckoned on the value of the estate rather than any shares in the estate, but it is reckoned on the net estate, and obviously was not intended to prejudice creditors. The situation as to the federal income tax is, indeed, different, as that was a debt or obligation of the decedent incurred in his lifetime and which undoubtedly has a priority under the laws of the United States. There was, however, prolonged uncertainty about what it amounted to, and it is not clear from the evidence just when its amount was finally arrived at and fixed and placed in shape to be paid. In the meanwhile, the Belindez claim bore 7 per cent. interest. Were it clear from the evidence that the income tax demands were liquidated and fixed before the payments complained of on the Belindez claim were made, so that the executor deliberately preferred in time of payment a claim of the fifth class, bearing 7 per cent. interest, over one of the third class, having priority by law and bearing 12 per cent. interest, doubtless it would be accountable for the 5 per cent. difference in interest so lost. But in the circumstances it is not sufficiently plain that the executor did not use reasonable business judgment in that matter to make me feel justified in surcharging it on that account. As far as the principal of both obligations is concerned, it would have to be paid in any event before the net share of the minors in the estate could be freed of the claim."

[23] Appellants' twelfth assignment of error refers to an alleged misconduct of the executor in entering into a contract with Mrs.

Barreiro and in attempting to get her to execute a trust agreement placing her portion of the estate properties in trust with the executor for her use during her lifetime and for the benefit of appellants after her death. This contract was prepared before the appointment of the executor. The declaration of trust was not executed by Mrs. Barreiro. If executed, it might have resulted in benefit to the appellants, as it would have given them a fixed and present interest in the property of their mother which they do not now have. Neither the estate nor appellants were prejudiced by this contract or by the unexecuted declaration of trust.

[24] In the opinion this day filed in case Civ. No. 488 [13 P.(2d) 1033], we have affirmed the order of the trial court directing the executor to pay the sum of $4,782.95 out of its own funds into the treasury of the Compania on the ground that it was negligent in not collecting this sum from Manuel Lujan, the Mexican attorney who disappeared before making payment of this money to the executor of the Compania. In that case we held that the probate court could examine the conduct of the executor in its control of the Mexican property of the deceased and the Compania because it had disregarded its corporate entity and managed the property in Mexico without due regard to the existence of the corporation. In the instant case we have examined in great detail some of the actions of the executor in its management of the Mexican property and sustain the ruling of the probate court in refusing its removal, even though, through its negligence, it lost the money taken by Lujan. A return of this money by the executor will prevent its loss to the estate. The trial court was of the opinion that the executor and its then attorney, now deceased, were honestly mistaken in the position taken in the earlier years of the administration, and that a refund of the money lost was all that the equities of the situation required; the removal of the executor not being necessary under the circumstances disclosed by the record. We have not disturbed these findings. Rulings were reserved on a number of questions involving possible loss to the estate. Because such rulings were reserved for future hearing and determination, these questions are not before us on either appeal except as to the right of the trial court to reserve its ruling.

[25] As we have repeatedly stated, the property owned by Mrs. Barreiro should be removed from the possession of the executor. The income from this property, if any, does not belong to the estate. The expense of caring for and maintaining her portion should not be charged to the estate. It is evident that an accounting must be had and some adjustment made. Whether this will result in the executor being charged with a greater amount than its account now shows, or being credited with expenditures in excess of those now claimed by it, cannot now be determined. The order of the trial court should be amended by reserving to it the right to credit to, or charge against, the executor any sums that an accounting between it and Mrs. Barreiro may show necessary and proper under the circumstances of such an accounting.

It is ordered that there be, and there is hereby, added to the order of the trial court filed on June 27, 1930, a paragraph numbered eighteenth, in words and figures as follows:

"Eighteenth: It is further ordered that the court reserve unto itself the right to further correct and modify the accounts of the executor by reducing from the total value of the property in the accounts charged to it, the value of that portion of such property as may be determined to belong to Gertrudis Marquez Barreiro, if any, and to modify the accounts of the executor by adding thereto, or deducting therefrom, as the case may be, any income received by said executor on the property held by it during the course of administration which actually belonged to Gertrudis Marquez Barreiro, and any expense incurred by it which should have been properly charged against or credited to the said Gertrudis Marquez Barreiro, if it should finally appear that such credits or charges should be made."

The orders appealed from, as so modified, are affirmed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; SCOVEL, Justice pro tem.

BARREIRO et al. v. BANK OF ITALY NAT. TRUST & SAVINGS ASS'N.

Civ. 488.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 29, 1932.

Rehearing Granted Aug. 24, 1932.

1. Divorce ⇐322.

Where divorce decree made no disposition of community property, husband and wife became owners thereof as tenants in common.

2. Corporations ⇐1.

Before court will look through form of corporation in order to reach sole owner of stock, there must be facts that would otherwise perpetrate fraud on innocent party.

3. Corporations ⇐1.

Facts did not bring alter ego doctrine into play to such extent that court could hold Mexican corporation alter ego of executor of stockholder in management of its Mexican affairs.

Facts were that, after decedent's death, there were found among effects of deceased all shares of capital stock of Mexican corporation made payable to bearer, but some of such stock was owned by deceased and his divorced wife as tenants in common, that executor caused meeting of stockholders of Mexican corporation to be held, and at such meeting a new board of directors was elected with trust officer of executor elected as president and the then attorney for executor named among the directors, and that executor and its successors had ever since continued in control of affairs of such corporation.

4. Executors and administrators ⇐55.

Where executor found among deceased's assets shares of stock payable to bearer, some of which were owned by deceased's divorced wife, right of possession of only portion belonging to deceased vested in executor at time of appointment.

5. Corporations ⇐194.

Meeting of stockholders which was illegal as to one considerable stockholder was illegal as to all.

6. Corporations ⇐1.

Executor of deceased stockholder having disregarded corporate existence and failed to observe law regarding functioning of corporation, and having taken direct charge of corporate property, could not hide behind corporate entity and protect itself from losses occasioned by executor's direct management of corporation's property.

7. Courts ⇐200¼.

Superior courts have both probate and equity jurisdiction, and, where necessary to do justice, probate court may exercise equity jurisdiction.

8. Equity ⇐437.

Where equity court has jurisdiction of person, it may enforce decree in personam, although it could not enforce it in rem.

9. Executors and administrators ⇐465.

Where California executor has gathered in assets of estate in foreign jurisdiction, it may be held accountable for them.

10. Executors and administrators ⇐469(1).

Probate court had jurisdiction to require executor to account for Mexican property of which it took control.

11. Executors and administrators ⇐506(3).

Under evidence, court properly refused to allow executor credit for $1,200 paid attorney for services to deceased, consisting of consultations and drawing of papers, and properly allowed only $200 therefor.

12. Executors and administrators ⇐508(1).

Where executor taking charge of Mexican corporation wrongfully paid out sum to attorney from corporation's treasury without any lawful procedure, court properly directed that said sum be returned to treasury, rather than into estate funds.

13. Executors and administrators ⇐506(3).

Under evidence in hearing on account, court properly concluded that loss of rentals of properties wrongfully obtained by attorney in proceeding was directly traceable to executor.

14. Executors and administrators ⇐508(1).

Court properly directed executor to replace overpayments made to attorney for services in certain appeals where attorney had, before deceased's death, given receipt found among papers of which executor took possession.

15. Executors and administrators ⇐506(3).

Amount of evidence which probate judge may require of executor in support of correctness of account is largely matter of his own discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Charles C. Haines, Judge.

The Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association, executor of the estate of Benigno Barreiro, deceased, filed its fourth annual account, opposed by Maria Teresa Barreiro and others, minors, by Charles A. Brinkley and Robert L. Cardenas, guardians of their estate. From a portion of an order settling the account, the executor appeals.

Affirmed.

Wright & McKee and C. M. Monroe, all of San Diego, for appellant.

Jesse George and C. A. Brinkley, both of San Diego, for respondents.

MARKS, J.

This is an appeal taken by the executor of the last will and testament of Benigno Barreiro, deceased, from a portion of an order of the superior court of San Diego county, settling its fourth annual account, in which order the executor was directed to pay out of its own funds into the treasury of the Compania de Inversiones de la Baja California the sum of $4,782.95, and also the sum of $500 out of the funds of the estate.

This is a companion case with one bearing the same title and our Civ. No. 885 [13 P. (2d) 1017], wherein the minors appealed from the same order, the opinion in which case has been this day filed and is referred to for a more complete statement of the facts than is here incorporated and a discussion of some of the questions of law which we find it unnecessary to repeat. The Compania de Inversiones de la Baja California will hereafter be referred to as the "Compania."

After the death of Benigno Barreiro and the appointment of appellant's predecessor as the executor of his last will and testament, there were found among the effects of the deceased 1,000 shares of the capital stock of the Compania made payable to the bearer. It is true that some of this stock was owned by the deceased and Gertrudis Marquez Barreiro, his divorced wife as tenants in common. The then executor caused a meeting of the stockholders of the Compania to be held in Mexico on July 9, 1925, at which time a new board of directors was elected, with Norman R. Morison, who was trust officer of the executor and in active charge of the estate, elected as president, and Lewis J. Utt, then the attorney for the executor, named among the directors. The executor and its successors have ever since continued in control of the affairs of the Compania.

The order of the trial court requiring the executor to pay moneys into the treasury of the Compania is based upon its finding that charges made by Attorney Manuel Lujan of Mexico for professional services rendered and expenses incurred were unjust, excessive, and no proper charge against the deceased, the Compania, or the estate. The task of the trial court in determining the correctness of these charges was made more difficult by the fact that Lujan, prior to the hearing that resulted in the order under consideration, left his home, has not been heard from since, and is presumably now dead. Mr. Utt, who acted as attorney for the executor and American advisor for the Compania during all of the time covered by the Lujan account, is also dead. Therefore the testimony of these two witnesses, which would have been most desirable, was not available.

While appellant makes several separate specifications of error upon which it relies for a reversal of that portion of the judgment of which it complains, practically all of them may be stated and considered under one head, namely: Has the probate court of California, having jurisdiction over the estate of the deceased, the right to examine the conduct of the executor in managing the affairs of a Mexican corporation and charge it with expenditures made by it for or through the corporation? This question does not seem to have been directly answered by any of the cases decided in California. The respondents seek to justify the action of the court below upon the theory that the executor possessed the control of all of the stock of the Compania and the complete management of its affairs, using it only as its alter ego, and that therefore the court could look through the corporation and examine the actions of the executor and its officers as though the corporation did not exist. Were this the only ground upon which the decision of the trial court could be sustained, we might not agree with it.

[1] The argument of respondents in support of the order in question is based upon the mistaken assumption that the deceased was the sole and only owner of all of the stock of the Compania and all of the property standing of record in its name. They urge that the corporation after the reorganization meeting of July 9, 1925, ceased to have any actual existence in so far as the management of its properties and affairs was concerned, and served only as a fictitious name under which the executor managed and operated the properties in Mexico. The deceased at the time of his death had possession of all the certificates of stock in the corporation, which were all made in favor of the bearer. While this might have created a presumptive ownership of the stock in him, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it is evident that Gertrudis Marquez Barreiro, his divorced wife, was, as tenant in common with him, the owner of a portion of this stock. Barreiro and his former wife were divorced on December 29, 1923, the final decree making no disposition of their community property. Under this state of facts they became owners as tenants in common of all the community property possessed by them at that time. Biggi v. Biggi, 98 Cal. 35, 32 P. 803, 35 Am. St. Rep. 141; Kirschner v. Dietrich, 110 Cal. 502, 42 P. 1064; Brown v. Brown, 170 Cal. 1, 147 P. 1168.

[2, 3] It is true that in some instances a court may look through the form of a corporation in order to reach the sole owner of all of the stock when that owner attempts to transact his business in the name of the corporation as his alter ego. There must be a unity of interest and ownership between the two individualities, and such a state of facts that would perpetrate a fraud and work an injustice upon an innocent party by the recognition of the existence of the corporation separate and apart from the identity of the individual owning all its stock and operating through it, to justify such an action by the court. Minifie v. Rowley, 187 Cal. 481, 202 P. 673; Wenban Estate, Inc., v. Hewlett, 193 Cal. 675, 227 P. 723. We do not believe that the facts of the case before us bring the alter ego doctrine into play to such an extent that we can hold the Compania the alter ego of the executor in the management of its Mexican affairs. Wood Estate Co. v. Chanslor, 209 Cal. 241, 286 P. 1001; LeComte Davis (Liberty Mortgage Co.) v. Perry (Cal. App.) 8 P.(2d) 514.

[4] The first question to be considered is the legality of the reorganization meeting held on July 9, 1925, at which a new board of directors was elected for the Compania. As we have observed, the stock in the corporation was issued to bearer and was in the possession of the executor. At the time of the death of Mr. Barreiro, its ownership was vested in himself and his former wife, an undetermined amount in each. The right of possession of only that portion of the stock belonging to Mr. Barreiro vested in the executor at the time of its appointment.

Section 313 of the Civil Code, as it existed prior to the amendments of 1931, provided that "shares of stock of an estate of a minor, or insane person, may be represented by his guardian, and, of a deceased person by his executor or administrator." This section has been construed to give the right to executors to vote stock belonging to their testators upon exhibiting a certified copy of letters testamentary without formal transfer of the shares on the books of the corporation. Smith v. San Francisco, etc., Co., 115 Cal. 584, at page 591, 47 P. 582, 35 L. R. A. 309, 56 Am. St. Rep. 119; Market Street Ry. Co. v. Hellman, 109 Cal. 571, 42 P. 225. Of course, this right given to the executor to represent the stock of the deceased at any meeting of stockholders of the Compania could only extend to such stock as was owned by Mr. Barreiro at the time of his death. The executor could not represent the stock owned by Mrs. Barreiro without authority from her.

There seems to be no great difference between the rules of descent established by the Mexican law and those prevailing in California. The estate of a deceased person in both jurisdictions descends to the heirs subject to administration. Article 3232 of the old Mexican Civil Code, stated to be article 1286 of the new Code; article 3235 of the old Civil Code, stated to be article 1290 of the new Code; article 3173 of the old Civil Code, stated to be article 1990 of the new Code; articles 3703 to 3706 of the old Civil Code and articles 3726, 3727 of the old Civil Code consolidated in article 1704 of the new Code. Articles 3728, 3729, and 3730 of the old Mexican Civil Code, re-enacted into articles 1704, 1705, and 1706 of the new Code, give the executor such powers as are authorized by law and by the testator in a will or those which the heirs expressly give him, and no others. In the will admitted to probate, the Southern Trust & Commerce Bank was given charge of the heritages of the children of Mr. Barreiro, and the desire was expressed that Eustaquio Valle continue carrying on the business of the Compania as he was doing prior to the death of deceased. Under this power in the will, which seems to be permitted under the provisions of the Mexican Civil Code, it is argued with some force that the executor possessed the same rights to represent the deceased and his children in voting the stock of the Mexican corporation that it would have possessed under the authority given by section 313 of the Civil Code of California had the Compania been a California corporation. For the purpose of this opinion we will assume, without holding, that such powers were given to it.

Article 204 of the Commercial Code of Mexico provides that the call for meetings of a corporation shall be made by the board of directors, or by the examiners, and that more than one-half of the capital stock must be represented. Article 203 of the same Code provides that the calls to general stockholders' meetings shall be made by a notice published in the official journal of the state, district or territory wherein the corporation has its domicile, and that the notice must contain a statement "of the proceedings for the day, or of all questions to be submitted for the deliberation of the meeting. Every resolution adopted in contravention of this article shall be void." These rules were not all followed in calling the meeting.

The by-laws of the Compania provided that calls for general stockholders' meetings must be signed by the president or by the commissary and be published for at least ten days in advance of such meeting. The by-laws further provided that, when all of the capital stock is represented, a meeting may be held without the necessity of a call. Mr. Uribe, a Mexican attorney called as an expert on Mexican law, testified that the provisions of the Commercial Code would prevail over those of a by-law.

The trial court was of the opinion that, as all of the stock of the corporation was actually represented at the meeting of July 9, 1925, including the stock of Mrs. Barreiro, those participating in the meeting would be estopped from contesting its legality, and that the directors elected at such meeting would at least be the de facto directors of such corporation and entitled to act as such until removed from office by a proceeding instituted by an authority other than that of one of those participating in the meeting. Guaranty Loan Co. v. Fontanel, 183 Cal. 1, 190 P. 177; Dolbear v. Wilkinson, 172 Cal. 366, 156 P. 488, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 1001; San Buenaventura Mfg. Co. v. Vassault, 50 Cal. 534; Guaranty Loan Co. v. Treadwell, 53 Cal. App. 538, 200 P. 653. We have been referred to no opinion of any one learned in the law of Mexico and to no decision of a Mexican court upon this question.

At the time of the meeting of July 9, 1925, Mrs. Barreiro was represented there by Messrs. Herman Freese and Stephen Connell, who were her attorneys. The minors were represented by their guardian, and the executor bank was represented by its trust officer and by Mr. Lewis J. Utt, its attorney in the probate proceedings. The minutes of this meeting recite that all of the stock of the Compania was represented as follows: Eustaquio Valle, 1 share; Norman R. Morison, 1 share; Stephen Connell, 1 share; Anton J. Schreiber, 1 share; M. G. Richardson, 1 share; D. M. Plaister, 1 share; Lewis J. Utt, 994 shares. The minutes recite that Morison was named president of the meeting and Valle its secretary, and that Messrs. Connell and Utt were named inspectors to count the number of shares and votes. Messrs. Morison, Richardson, Schreiber, Connell, and Utt were elected directors, and Morison and Utt were elected president and secretary, respectively. The by-laws were amended by making Tia Juana as well as Mexicali an authorized place for holding the corporate meetings. These minutes were protocalized before a Mexican judge of the first instance and were recorded in the registry at Tia Juana, Mexico. The Mexican law provides that the certificates of stock of a corporation must be actually and physically present and exhibited at a stockholders' meeting. It is doubtful if this provision was complied with at this meeting.

[5] From what we have said it is apparent that the meeting of July 9, 1925, was not legally called and held, and that, if the proceedings there had are to be considered binding upon the stockholders, it must be because of the doctrine of their estoppel to question the legality of the meeting because of their participation therein. If they be estopped to question the legality of this meeting, at least Mrs. Barreiro is not estopped from questioning the legality of any subsequent meeting, either of the stockholders or of the board of directors. No call or notice of any subsequent meeting was given, and she did not participate therein. Her attorney, Mr. Connell, was removed as a member of the board of directors. The subsequent meetings, being illegal as to one considerable stockholder, must be considered illegal as to all.

[6] The Mexican law vests the management of the affairs of a corporation in its board of directors much as does the law of California. No meetings of the board of directors seem to have been held. All the business of the corporation which was referred by the executor to any meetings seems to have been referred to stockholders' and not to directors' meetings. The questions of sales of properties, execution of leases, and other matters of policy, when considered at all, were considered at stockholders' meetings which were held without Mrs. Barreiro being notified or represented, and which were not called in accordance with Mexican law. The stockholders of a Mexican corporation seem to be given no power over the details of its management under the law of Mexico. Therefore it follows that whatever was done in the name of the corporation after the meeting of July 9, 1925, was done, not only without the authority of law, but in direct violation of the provisions of the Mexican Code.

The Mexican Commercial Code requires that corporations keep an elaborate set of books in forms particularly specified. No effort was made after the death of Mr. Barreiro to keep any such set of books, and no attention was paid to any of these requirements.

It cannot be doubted that the executor dominated and controlled all of the affairs of the corporation following the death of Mr. Barreiro. It chose one board of directors, and then proceeded to brush aside their authority and administer the properties of the corporation without regard to the corporate entity. The only function performed by the Compania after the meeting of July 9, 1925, seems to have been that of holding the naked title to the Mexican property. The executor brushed aside the legal entity of the corporation and assumed direct control of its property and its affairs. In its first annual account filed in the court below on July 2, 1926, it set forth: "Your petitioner, immediately upon its appointment, proceeded to reorganize the said Mexican corporation, and to assume full control and active management thereof. * * * The collection of rents from said real property, and the execution of leases to tenants has involved and does involve a high degree of attention, as well as responsibility. Your petitioner has had to handle considerable sums of money from this source, as well as to carry on all the business of the decedent, a business which engrossed his entire time, and which consisted of looking after his Mexican investments."

The question, therefore, which presents itself may be stated as follows: Can the executor, after having disregarded the corporate existence and corporate entity, and having failed to observe the provisions of law of the republic of Mexico regarding the functioning of a corporation, and having taken direct charge of the corporate property, hide behind the corporate entity which it did not recognize over a period of years, and thus protect itself from losses occasioned by its direct management of the properties of the Compania? The question would seem to contain its own answer.

In this opinion all references to the Code of Civil Procedure are made to that Code in effect before the adoption of the Probate Code.

We are next confronted with the question of the jurisdiction of a probate court of California over property owned in Mexico by the Compania which was taken possession of and administered by an executor appointed by the California probate court without any ancillary letters having been issued in Mexico. Section 1913 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the authority of an executor or administrator does not extend beyond the jurisdiction of the government under which it was given its authority. The rigorous jurisdictional limitation of the powers of an executor imposed by this section has been somewhat modified by many decisions sustaining the right of an executor to collect debts due the estate in other jurisdictions when such collections can be made without suit. 12 Cal. Jur. 238, 239, and cases there cited.

[7] It is well settled in California that superior courts have both probate and equity jurisdiction, and that, where necessary to do justice to all parties concerned, the probate courts may exercise equity jurisdiction. Estate of Maxwell, 74 Cal. 384, 16 P. 206; Estate of Burton, 93 Cal. 459, 29 P. 36; Verdier v. Roach, 96 Cal. 467, 31 P. 554, 557; Toland v. Earl, 129 Cal. 148, 61 P. 914, 79 Am. App. 548, 86 P. 842; Estate of Hill, 94 Cal. App. 113, 270 P. 708. In Verdier v. Roach, supra, it was said: "Our superior courts have both probate and equity jurisdiction, so that whenever, in the course of the administration and settlement of estates, our probate statutes are found to be inadequate to authorize and accomplish all that a court of equity is authorized to do in such cases, our superior courts may exercise their equity powers in connection with, and as incidental to, their powers in probate matters, to the extent necessary to a complete administration and distribution of estates: provided, of course, that nothing be done in contravention of any statutory provision."

[8] It has long been the rule in equity that, where a court has jurisdiction of the person, it may enforce a decree in personam, although it could not enforce it in rem. Penn v. Lord Baltimore, 1 Vesey Sr. 443 [27 English Reports, Reprint, p. 1132]; Massie v. Watts, 6 Cranch, 148, 3 L. Ed. 181; Arglasse v. Muschamp, 1 Vern. 75; Tollor v. Carteret, 2 Vern. 494; Phelps v. Cronan, supra, it was held that the courts of Nevada, having obtained personal jurisdiction over the parties therein, had the right to inquire into and determine the powers of a California corporation, its officers and stockholders, under the laws of California, and question the validity of the corporate acts, although the courts of Nevada had no jurisdiction over the corporation itself.

[9] For many years it has been held in California that, where a California executor has taken charge and gathered in assets of the estate in foreign jurisdictions, it may be held accountable for them. Estate of Ortiz, 86 Cal. 306, 24 P. 1034, 1035, 21 Am. St. Rep. 44; Fox v. Tay, 89 Cal. 339, 24 P. 855, 26 P. 897, 23 Am. St. Rep. 474; Estate of Grivel, 199 Cal. 351, 249 P. 184, 185; Reed v. Hollister, 44 Cal. App. 533, 186 P. 819. The rule is stated in Estate of Ortiz, supra, as follows: "I think the law applicable to the facts is correctly stated by Prof. Schouler, in his late treatise on Executors and Administrators (2d Ed. 1889, § 175), as follows: 'The earlier rule frequently asserted in England, in one loose form or another, is that assets in any part of the world shall be assets for which the domestic executor or administrator is chargeable; the practical effect being to enjoin upon the principal personal representative the duty of procuring, so far as foreign law and the peculiar circumstances will permit, personal assets wherever situated, realizing the bulk of the estate of his decedent as best he may, gathering in the property as one who represents the whole fortune, and, having gathered it, account to those interested accordingly. Some of the judicial expressions on this point, to be sure, import too onerous a responsibility on the representative's part; and Mr. Justice Story has pointed out the fallacy of holding a domestic executor or administrator answerable for foreign property which it is admitted that he can neither collect nor sue upon, nor compel its payment or delivery to himself by virtue of his domestic appointment—foreign property, we may add, of whose existence, or of the grant of foreign administration for realizing it as assets, he may be quite unaware. And yet, to let external assets knowingly escape his control, and be lost to the estate, when with reasonable diligence they might have been procured, seems a plain dereliction of duty in the principal or domiciliary representative, whose function, as rightly understood, is to grasp the whole fortune, as the decedent did during his life, save so far as the obstructive law of foreign situs, or the limitations of his own appointment, may restrain him.'"

Estate of Grivel, supra, is quite similar in fact to the one at bar. The deceased had property in the republic of Mexico and in the United States. He had a former wife and children. There was this difference, that probably there were ancillary probate proceedings in Mexico. The appeal was taken by the domiciliary executor from an order surcharging his accounts. In the course of the opinion the court said: "Appellant admits that he did sell about 1,600 head of cattle, collected debts owing decedent from persons residing or doing business in Mexico, and transacted other business in said foreign territory, but claims that in so doing he acted solely as attorney in fact for said [ancillary] administratrix, and not in his official capacity as administrator of said estate. He further admits that moneys derived from the sales of property made in Mexico, and which passed into his hands, were deposited by his direction in a bank situate in Calexico, county of Imperial, where the business of the estate was transacted by him. It is the insistent claim of appellant that he was acting in two separate and distinct capacities in handling the funds and property of an estate of which he was the domiciliary administrator, to wit, as agent or attorney in fact of the ancillary administratrix of all property which had its situs in Mexico at the time of decedent's death, and as administrator only of such property as had its situs in the state of California at the time of decedent's death, and to no further extent. We question the soundness of this contention. Appellant was the administrator of the entire estate and of all the funds and property which came into his hands which were admittedly property and moneys belonging to the estate, and it was clearly his duty as such officer to report and account to the court which had appointed him for all moneys and property belonging to the estate which he received into his possession, and it does not matter what the source may have been. We think as a general proposition that the court has inherent power to compel a report of the property which has passed into the hands of the domiciliary administrator, even though he claims to have remitted it to the ancillary administrator."

Reed v. Hollister, supra, also involved the necessity of a local executor accounting for funds coming into his possession from a foreign jurisdiction and the power of the probate court to require him to account for such funds. After a careful consideration of the case, the court reached the conclusion that the probate court had such jurisdiction, and that the executor must account to it for such funds.

[10] We have reached the conclusion that the probate court had the jurisdiction to require the executor of the estate of Barreiro to account to it for the Mexican property of which it took control and which it virtually removed from the possession of the Mexican corporation which owned it, and correctly required the executor to render an account of all of the transactions which it conducted in connection with the Mexican property standing in the name of the Compania.

The order of which the executor complains on this appeal is a virtual surcharge of its account in the sum of $4,782.95, on account of moneys paid to and collected by Manuel Lujan. Mr. Lujan, an attorney at law of the republic of Mexico, was apparently the personal attorney of Benigno Barreiro and for the Compania before Mr. Barreiro's death. He acted also as the Mexican advisor to the executor of the estate. The items of the account, showing charges and receipts as summarized by the trial judge, are as follows:

For services rendered prior to Mr. Barreiro's death, as per statement of June 20th, 1925 (Executor's Exhibit N-2), as follows:
1. Trip to Mexico City re certain appeals pending against the Compania and the city of Mexicali as well as the Galeana case	$ 1,300.00
2. Cardinale attachment	1,775.00
3. Attachment on real property of Paul Kittiquitz	650.00
4. Two suits against the Compania Commercial	500.00
5. Appeal in a criminal case involving Mr. Barreiro	500.00
6. Consultations with Mr. Barreiro, stated to have been not less than 100 in number	1,000.00
7. Drawing up documents and papers	200.00
Total	$ 5,925.00
For services to Compania for the 12 months ending June 6, 1926, as per statement (Executor's Exhibit O-2) of that date, at $350.00 per month	$ 4,200.00
Personal expenses during that year	250.00
Compensation for the two months ending August 6, 1926, as per statement dated November 30, 1926 (Executor's Exhibit P-2)	700.00
Compensation and expenses on trip to Mexico City in summer and fall of 1926, amounting apparently to	2,100.00
(Balances the two remittances to him for that purpose of July 27, 1926, and September 11, 1926, respectively hereinafter referred to.)
Making an aggregate of	$13,375.00

As against these charges he has admittedly been paid:

By Mr. Barreiro in his lifetime (see Executor's Exhibit N-2)	$ 100.00
Other items as shown by said supplement to the Executor's Fourth Account:
November 5, 1925	600.00
December 4, 1925	500.00
July 27, 1926 (re Lujan's trip to Mexico City)	600.00
August 19, 1926	400.00
September 11, 1926 (re Lujan's trip to Mexico City) (I do not count a transmission charge on last item of $32.95 in this connection.)	1,500.00
December 8, 1926	500.00
Also collections in which Executor's Exhibit O-2 Lujan admits having made and retained as follows:
13 months' rent from the Compania Commercial on the Mexicali and Tia Juana properties affected by the lease litigation, at $450.00 per month	5,850.00
Interest on the so-called Johnson note	325.00
Aggregating	$10,375.00
This accounting, if correct and complete, would still leave due to Lujan		$3,000.00

The account as revised and allowed by the trial court is as follows:

Lujan admits, according to his statements (Executor's Exhibits N-2, O-2, and P-2), as hereinbefore reviewed, an aggregate of		$10,375.00
This, however, includes what he collected by way of interest on the Johnson note, an account which was apparently not property of the Compania de Inversiones, and should therefore, have nothing to do with his accounting with it		325.00
This leaves of money of the Compania de Inversiones for which he admits being accountable		$10,050.00

As we have also seen, he is chargeable also with the $591.68 collected by him through the Cardinale escrow; but since there has been reserved for the future the question of whether he has earned anything in connection with the Cardinale litigation, the question whether this debit of $591.68 is to be offset against any such charge may properly be reserved, and the disposition of said $591.68 item reserved also. Neglecting this item for the present, then, we consider the credit side of his account generally.

He is to be credited with:

Expenses in trip, January and February, 1925, to Mexico City, amounting altogether to sixty days	$1,200.00
Fees in suits against the Compania Commercial	500.00
Consultations with Benigno Barreiro regarding Compania affairs and drawing up documents relative to same	200.00
Fourteen months' services as consulting Mexican attorney for the Compania de Inversiones subsequent to Mr. Barreiro's death	2,100.00
Personal and traveling expenses for ten days in trips to Mexicali	200.00
Personal and traveling expenses for thirty days in summer and fall of 1926 in trip to Mexico City	600.00
Making an aggregate of	$4,800.00
This left him indebted to the Compania de Inversiones to the extent of		$ 5,250.00

To the balance of the account just quoted and charged against the executor the court added the sum of $32.95, costs paid on sending money to Lujan in Mexico City.

The items of which appellant complains are those credits either disallowed or reduced. Ruling was reserved on the charge of $1,775 for the Cardinale attachment, and $591.68 collected through escrow. We have considered the right of the probate court to reserve ruling on items of an account, in our opinion filed in case Civ. No. 885, which was an appeal by the minors from this same judgment. This portion of that opinion is referred to for a discussion of this question, and it will not be necessary to repeat it here.

The court below disallowed the charge of $650 for an attachment on the real property of Paul Kittiquitz. It appears that this grew out of a claim against one Johnson alleged to be due to the Compania Merchantil Internacional, a corporation formerly controlled by Mr. Barreiro which he placed in the hands of a liquidator for the purpose of liquidation. It is evident that this particular claim for services could not be made against the executor or the Compania, but against the Compania Merchantil Internacional or the liquidator. The trial court reserved a ruling upon the question of a settlement between the executor and the liquidator, and this item can undoubtedly be adjusted when that matter is determined.

[11] The charge of $1,000 for not less than one hundred consultations by Barreiro with Lujan, and the $200 for the drawing up of documents and papers by Lujan, will be considered together. On November 19, 1924, Lujan executed a receipt to the Compania, whereby he receipted for $500 in full for his services, both to the Compania and to Mr. Barreiro up to that date, and agreed to make no further charge for services to be rendered by him in the two appeals pending in the supreme court in the city of Mexico, one on a petition of Miguel Galeana, in which the Compania was a third party, and the other an appeal presented against the municipal council of Mexicali. This receipt was dated about seven months prior to the death of Mr. Barreiro. The trial judge was of the opinion that the charges were excessive and were not supported by proper evidence. In this we agree with him. He allowed $200 for these services, which we cannot hold was an unreasonable compensation under the circumstances disclosed by the record.

Lujan presented a bill for services rendered the Compania for fourteen months at the rate of $350 per month. On account of the death of Mr. Utt, and the apparent death of Mr. Lujan, the evidence as to just what these services consisted of is very meager. The trial court found that some services were performed consisting of consultations with Mr. Utt as attorney for the executor and the Compania, and that the reasonable value of the services rendered was $150 per month. We think the allowance quite liberal under the circumstances, and cannot hold the trial court in error in fixing the compensation at this sum.

The account of Lujan contains three items of traveling expenses, one on a trip to Mexico City concerning the two appeals pending there which we have mentioned, which trip occupied sixty days, another, compensation and expense on a trip to Mexico City in the fall of 1926 in connection with the same two appeals which occupied thirty days, and, the third, expenses of trips to Mexicali which occupied ten days. The total amount claimed by Lujan for these items was $3,850, which the court held to be excessive and not justified by the evidence. In so far as they included any compensation for services rendered in connection with the two appeals, the correctness of the ruling of the trial court in excluding such charges from the account cannot be questioned in view of the receipt given by Lujan on November 19, 1924. The trial court allowed him traveling expenses of $20 per day for each day consumed on the trips to Mexico City and to Mexicali. The receipt of Lujan did not contain any agreement not to make a charge for traveling expenses, and a reasonable allowance to cover such expenditures was undoubtedly correct. We think the sum of $20 per day fixed by the trial court for this purpose was ample, and that it cannot be questioned by us. These allowances made by the trial court are supported by competent evidence in the record, and, as the question is merely one of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the ruling of the trial court, its conclusion becomes final.

[12] Appellant urges that the probate court had no authority to direct that the sum of $4,782.95 be paid out of the private funds of the executor into the treasury of the Compania, but only had authority to surcharge the executor's account with this amount and direct it to be paid into the estate funds. This money was withdrawn from the treasury of the Compania by the executor without any authority from the board of directors or any lawful procedure. The trial court was undoubtedly correct in directing it to be returned to the source from which it was taken. The order was in accordance with the forcible suggestion made by the trial court of the desirability of reorganization of the Compania as a going concern lawfully conducted under the laws of the republic of Mexico. It is very evident that this result is desirable, and that suggestion should be followed, if, under the Mexican law, it is now possible for the corporation to be revived. It would save many legal complications similar to those that have arisen which of necessity embarrass the executor and the other persons interested in the affairs of the Compania. It would ease the removal of the property of Mrs. Barreiro from the possession of the executor without unduly disturbing the other affairs of the administration.

Appellant maintains that the finding of the trial court to the effect that the executor failed to use due diligence, prudence, and care in its transactions with Lujan, and that Lujan was overpaid and was permitted to retain more money than he was reasonably entitled to, due to the negligence of the executor, is not supported by the evidence, and is contrary to it. It relies upon the rule that, where the executor exercises its best judgment and due care and prudence in the selection of an agent or attorney who is well recommended, it is not liable for money lost by the insolvency of the agent, unless the executor was negligent and careless in its dealings with him. 24 Cor. Jur. 126; Estate of Taylor, 52 Cal. 477. Appellant particularly urges that it should not be chargeable with the sum of $5,850, thirteen months' rental from the Mexicali and Tia Juana properties, nor with overpayments to Lujan on account of his trips to Mexico City.

[13] The real properties from which the rentals were collected were the ones involved in an action instituted by Mr. Barreiro to cancel leases held by the Compania Commercial.

See opinion in case 13 P.(2d) 1017, Civ. No. 885 for further particulars. When the suits were instituted, the rents were paid into court. Lujan, as the attorney of record in these cases, in some manner obtained possession of the money after the commencement of probate proceedings, retaining it when he disappeared, which was some considerable time later. During the time that this money was in his possession, the executor did not seek to have him pay it into the treasury of the Compania, where it rightfully belonged, nor in any manner did it seek its recovery. The trial court concluded, and we think correctly so, that the loss of this money was directly traceable to the executor, who, over a considerable period of time, failed to collect from Lujan, and seemingly acquiesced in his retention of this money.

[14] Appellant urges that it was not negligent in overpaying Lujan on account of his expenses and services rendered on the two trips to Mexico City, because, at the time the payments were made, it did not have actual knowledge of the receipt which Lujan had executed on November 19, 1924. The evidence discloses that this receipt was found among the papers of Mr. Barreiro, of which the original executor took possession at the time of his death. No good reason appears why the executor by the exercise of reasonable diligence could not have acquainted itself with the contents of this receipt long before it made any of these payments to Lujan. We think its negligence is apparent in both instances, and that the court properly directed it to replace the money lost as a result thereof.

[15] Appellant next complains that the trial court wrongfully placed upon it the burden of proving the correctness of its accounts rather than placing upon the contestants the burden of proving that the accounts were not correct. In this contention we cannot agree with appellant. The amount of evidence which a probate judge may require of any executor in support of the correctness of any account is largely a matter of his own discretion. Where there is no contest, it is the duty of the trial court to satisfy itself of the correctness of the account, and, within the limits of reason, it may require the executor to produce such evidence as will satisfy it in this respect.

The portion of the order approving the final account, appealed from by the executor, is affirmed.

ANDERSON v. MATSON NAV. CO.

Civ. 8205.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 23, 1932.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 22, 1932.

1. Damages ⇐132(3).

$9,000 to seaman for permanent partial paralysis of side of face, with permanent loss of control of eyelid, disfigurement, and pain and suffering, held not excessive.

2. Trial ⇐260(1).

Refusal of requested instruction which adds nothing to general instructions given is not error.

3. Negligence ⇐66(1).

Failure to heed warning does not constitute negligence, if warning comes so late as to offer no opportunity to avoid danger.

4. Seamen ⇐29(5).

Refusal of requested instruction that injured seaman's failure to heed warning to look out for falling crowbar constituted contributory negligence held proper under evidence (Merchant Marine Act, § 33 [46 USCA § 688]).

The evidence disclosed that the crowbar was being lowered down hatchway, and that it slipped through rope in which two loose half-hitches had been tied, and the only warning referred to in evidence was that given by second officer, who shouted "Look out below" after crowbar slipped, or as he saw it slipping.

5. Seamen ⇐29(4).

Doctrine of assumption of risk held inapplicable to seaman struck by falling crowbar which slipped through rope due to negligence of fellow seaman (Merchant Marine Act § 33 [46 USCA § 688]; Federal Employers' Liability Act § 1 [45 USCA § 51]).

6. Damages ⇐210(1).

Instruction to deduct from seaman's damages for inability to work amount which steamship company paid for keep and maintenance held properly refused as misleading (Merchant Marine Act § 33 [46 USCA § 688]).

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Rasmus P. Anderson against the Matson Navigation Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Ford & Johnson and Fletcher A. Cutler, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

SPENCE, J.

Plaintiff, a seaman employed by the defendant, brought this action under section 33 of the Merchant Marine Act (U. S. Code, tit. 46, § 688 [46 USCA § 688]), to recover damages for personal injuries suffered in the course of his employment. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $9,000, and from the judgment entered upon the verdict defendant appeals.

The injuries were sustained on December 28, 1929, while plaintiff was working on the 'tween deck located two decks below the main deck in hold number four on the S. S. Ventura. He had been assigned to cleaning up, and, after filling a bucket with rubbish which he had taken from the scuppers, he walked to the edge of the hatch on the 'tween deck, and looked up for the purpose of calling for a line to hoist the bucket. Plaintiff testified that just as he looked up, and before he had a chance to call for the line, something struck him. The object which struck him was an iron crowbar which was approximately five feet in length and weighed approximately thirty to thirty-five pounds. This crowbar was being lowered down the hatch by a seaman named Cauling under directions of the second officer. The testimony showed that Cauling had tied two loose half-hitches around the bar, and that, when he started to lower it, the bar slipped through the rope. It is conceded that there was sufficient evidence to sustain the implied finding of defendant's negligence.

[1] Appellant's first contention is that the damages are excessive. The settled rule in this connection as expressed in the recent case of Davis v. Renton, 113 Cal. App. 561, at page 563, 298 P. 834, is that a "reviewing court may interfere only in cases where the excess appears as a matter of law, or where the recovery is so grossly disproportionate to any compensation reasonably warranted by the facts as to shock the sense of justice or at first blush raise a presumption that it is the result of passion, prejudice, or corruption rather than honest and sober judgment." We have carefully reviewed the evidence relating to the nature and extent of the injuries received by respondent, and in our opinion appellant's contention cannot be sustained.

The crowbar struck the left side of respondent's head. The blow laid open the entire left side of respondent's face, fracturing the bones. He was immediately taken to the hospital on December 28, 1929, and remained there as a result of his injuries until July 19, 1930, a period of approximately seven months. Thereafter he continued treatment for his injuries, and there was testimony indicating that he would require further treatment for the rest of his life. Four operations were required, one of which involved plastic surgery performed in an effort to at least partially cover the ugly wound inflicted. Four sets of nerves were either lacerated or destroyed, resulting in an anæsthesia and partial paralysis of the left side of the face. Respondent lost control of his left eyelid and was unable to close the left eye. This resulted in constant tearing, and, because of the inability to close the eye, there was inflammation and danger of infection caused by dust or other foreign substances blowing into the eye. It appeared that this condition of the eye and the paralysis of the face were permanent, and could not be corrected by further operation. We deem it unnecessary to go into greater detail concerning the evidence of respondent's injuries and the prolonged treatment which he was compelled to undergo. The record discloses that despite said treatment, and any treatment which he may receive in the future, he will permanently have a partially paralyzed face, prominently scarred and the inability to close his left eye, the results of which tend, not only to be disfiguring, but also disabling. There was further testimony tending to show that respondent was unable to work because of dizziness experienced when he attempted to bend over or when he attempted to go to any height. Some of respondent's claims in this connection were at least partially discredited by pictures taken by a private detective while respondent was assisting others in building a small shack shortly before the trial. Much is said in the briefs regarding this portion of the testimony, but in our opinion this testimony may be disregarded. Taking into consideration the severity of the injuries, the unquestioned pain and suffering endured by respondent during his long confinement in the hospital, and the permanent effects of said injuries upon respondent's face and eye, as shown by the evidence and briefly outlined above, we do not believe that this court under the settled rule above stated should interfere with the determination of the jury and trial court on this issue of damage.

Appellant next contends that the trial court erred in refusing to give certain requested instructions on contributory negligence. It is conceded by appellant that there was no error in the instructions given on this subject, but it is contended that appellant was entitled to have the jury more specifically instructed thereon, citing Southern Railway Co. v. Hermans (C. C. A.) 44 F.(2d) 366; Illinois Central Railroad v. Nelson (C. C. A.) 203 F. 956; Flack v. Delaware, L. & W. Railroad Co. (C. C. A.) 45 F.(2d) 683, and other cases. Requested instructions Nos. 8 and 9, on the subject of contributory negligence, which the trial court refused, were as follows:

"Instruction No. 8.

"Where an employee has actual knowledge, or, under the circumstances reasonably ought to have knowledge of the possible danger, and such knowledge is of such a character that a reasonably prudent man, under similar circumstances, would exercise due care to avoid the danger, and he is injured by reason of his failure to use such care, he is guilty of contributory negligence."

"Instruction No. 9.

"If a warning has been given to an employee of a possible danger and he has heard it or under the circumstances reasonably should have heard it, and yet fails to heed the warning, and such failure proximately contributes to his injuries, such conduct on the part of the employee constitutes contributory negligence."

[2-4] Requested instruction No. 8 went no further than to tell the jury that, if a prudent man would exercise due care under the circumstances to avoid a possible danger, respondent was under such duty and his failure to do so would be contributory negligence. In our opinion, this instruction added nothing to the general instructions given by the court on this subject. Requested instruction No. 9 purported to tell the jury as a matter of law that failure to heed a warning constituted contributory negligence. It is subject to criticism, in that it ignores the element of opportunity to heed such warning. If a warning comes so late in point of time as to offer no opportunity to act to avoid the danger, we know of no rule under which an injured man would be chargeable with negligence as a matter of law merely because of his failure to heed such warning. The proposed instruction relates to any warning preceding injury, and in the light of the evidence we believe that the said instruction was properly refused. Respondent testified that he heard no warning. The only warning referred to in the evidence was that given by the second officer. He testified that he sang out, "Look out below," after the crowbar had slipped or as he saw it slipping. The chief mate was the only witness called by appellant who was near the scene of the accident at the time. Although he testified that the shout of warning came first, he stated, "In the order that I heard it, I heard a shout, a bang and then saw something hit Anderson." A reading of the entire testimony on the subject leads to the conclusion that the time element between the so-called warning and the striking was practically negligible. Under these circumstances, the instruction in the form proposed would have been misleading, to say the least, and it was not error to refuse to give it. If it may be said that there was any evidence warranting an implied finding that respondent had an opportunity to avoid the danger by heeding a warning, and failed to do so, appellant should have proposed a properly qualified instruction on this subject.

[5] Appellant further contends that the trial court erred in the giving and refusing of certain instructions on assumption of risk. Section 33 of the Merchant Marine Act, under which this action is brought, provides that: "All statutes of the United States modifying or extending the common-law right or remedy in cases of personal injury to railway employees shall apply." Turning to the Federal Employers' Liability Act, we find the following: "Every common carrier by railroad while engaging in commerce between any of the several States or Territories * * * shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce * * * resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such carrier. * * *" U. S. Code, tit. 45, § 51 (45 USCA § 51.) In construing these statutes it has been held that, while the fellow servant rule does not apply in actions brought thereunder, the doctrine of assumption of risk, at least to a restricted degree, is applicable. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Kuhn, 284 U. S. 44, 52 S. Ct. 45, 76 L. Ed. 157; Reed v. Director General of Railroads, 258 U. S. 92, 42 S. Ct. 191, 66 L. Ed. 480; Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. De Atley, 241 U. S. 310, 36 S. Ct. 564, 60 L. Ed. 1016; Southern Railway Co. v. Hermans (C. C. A.) 44 F.(2d) 366; States Steamship Co. v. Berglann (C. C. A.) 41 F.(2d) 456; Grimberg v. Admiral Oriental Steamship Line (D. C.) 300 F. 619; McGeorge v. Charles Nelson Co., 107 Cal. App. 148, 290 P. 75.

The instructions given at the request of respondent informed the jury that respondent "did not assume the risk of any negligence on the part of any of the officers or employees engaged in said work," and that, even if respondent "knew and assumed the risks of an inherently dangerous method of doing the work assigned to him he did not assume the increased risk attributable not to the method but to the negligence of this defendant in pursuing it if any." On the other hand, the refused instructions requested by appellant were to the effect that respondent assumed the ordinary risks of his employment, "and when obvious or fully known and appreciated he assumed the extraordinary risks and those due to negligence of his employer and fellow employees. * * *"

A review of the decisions under the above-mentioned statutes shows that the authorities are not entirely harmonious in defining the proper application of the doctrine of assumption of risk. The instructions proposed by respondent and given by the court find support in the rule as stated in 56 Corpus Juris, 1100, § 684, where it is said: "The doctrine of assumption of risk is inapplicable where the damage was proximately caused by the negligence of a fellow servant. The seaman does not assume the risk of injury from the negligence of an officer, or from other member of the crew." In Reed v. Director General of Railroads, 258 U. S. 92, it is said at page 95, 42 S. Ct. 191, 192, 66 L. Ed. 480: "In actions under the federal act the doctrine of assumption of risk certainly has no application when the negligence of a fellow servant which the injured party could not have foreseen or expected, is the sole, direct, and immediate cause of the injury. To hold otherwise would conflict with the declaration of Congress that every common carrier by railroad while engaging in interstate commerce shall be liable to the personal representative of any employee killed while employed therein when death results from the negligence of any of the officers, agents or employees of such carriers." In Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co. v. Proffitt, 241 U. S. 462, 36 S. Ct. 620, 622, 60 L. Ed. 1102, the court, after saying that the employee assumes the ordinary risks "so far as these are not attributable to the negligence of the employer or of those for whose conduct the employer is responsible" goes on to say: "Even if plaintiff knew and assumed the risks of an inherently dangerous method of doing the work, he did not assume the increased risk attributable not to the method, but to negligence in pursuing it."

Conceding that the doctrine of assumption of risk may apply in cases where an inherently dangerous method is ordinarily employed in doing certain work, still it would do violence to the terms of the statute to hold that an employee assumes the risk of particular acts of negligence of his fellow employees in pursuing the method employed. In the present case, even assuming that respondent may be said to have assumed the ordinary risks attendant on lowering heavy objects into the hold on a line, it cannot be said that he assumed the increased risks resulting from the negligence of his fellow employees in pursuing that method. Turning to the evidence, we find that the seaman Cauling, who was in the act of lowering the crowbar when it slipped, was not called as a witness, although present in court. The only evidence relating to the cause of the slipping was given by the second officer. He testified that Cauling put two loose half-hitches around the bar, and that it slipped just as Cauling started to lower it. The only rational conclusion to be drawn from the evidence is that the bar slipped by reason of the negligent manner in which Cauling tied the half-hitches, and that the accident happened as the result of this particular act of negligence on the part of Cauling in pursuing the method rather than as the result of one of the ordinary risks inherent in the method employed. Under these circumstances, the doctrine of assumption of risk was not applicable, and there was no error in the giving and refusing of the instructions to which reference has been made.

[6] Appellant also complains of error in the refusal of a proposed instruction relating to damages. Respondent prayed for general and also special damages, alleging, among other things, that prior to the accident he received the sum of $65 per month, "together with his keep and maintenance." Appellant alleged in its answer and showed by the evidence, that since the accident it had paid to respondent several hundred dollars for his keep and maintenance. It proposed the following instruction, which was refused: "Defendant alleges in its answer that it has paid to and for the plaintiff for his keep and maintenance since the time of the accident certain sums of money. I instruct you that if you find the defendant has paid to or for plaintiff for his keep and maintenance since the accident any sums of money you should deduct such sums from any damages suffered by plaintiff for inability to engage in employment in case you find plaintiff entitled to any such damage at all." The only authority cited by appellant is Graeber v. Derwin, 43 Cal. 495. The authority cited is not in point. In the case of a seaman, the compensation for his services is made up of two elements, the actual wage and his keep or maintenance. Employees other than seamen are ordinarily compensated for their services solely by wages. In the case cited, the court merely held that it was error to allow an injured person (not a seaman) damages for loss of wages and also compensation for his living expenses during the same period. Under the maritime law, however, the shipowner is under obligation to furnish maintenance to a sick or disabled seaman, regardless of whether he is liable for damages for negligence. The Osceola, 189 U. S. 159, 23 S. Ct. 483, 47 L. Ed. 760; The Bouker (C. C. A.) 241 F. 831. This right to maintenance arises out of the contract of employment while the right to damages for injuries arises in tort. Pacific Steamship Co. v. Peterson, 278 U. S. 130, 49 S. Ct. 75, 73 L. Ed. 220. The latter right existed prior to the Merchant Marine Act only in the case of unseaworthiness. Appellant concedes that, since the enactment of the Merchant Marine Act, the right to maintenance continues even though the injured seaman may also recover damages for injuries resulting from negligence, but appellant argues that respondent "is not entitled to recover the same damages twice." This may be granted but we find nothing to indicate that, by reason of the instructions given, or by reason of the refusal of this proposed instruction, such double recovery resulted. The only reasonable construction to place upon the words "loss of wages if any," as used in the instructions given, is that it had reference to the loss of the actual wages which had been received by respondent while working and not to his maintenance received in addition thereto as part of his compensation. If appellant believed that there was any doubt regarding the meaning thereby conveyed to the jury, a proper instruction could have been proposed to dispel such doubt. The proposed instruction, however, indicated that respondent was not entitled to maintenance in addition to the items of damage mentioned in the instructions given, but that all sums paid for maintenance should be deducted from the sum to be awarded. There was not error in refusing this proposed instruction.

The judgment is affirmed.

PACIFIC FINANCE CORPORATION v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY. *

Civ. 8358.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 23, 1932.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 22, 1932. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Oct. 20, 1932.

Dismissal and nonsuit ⇐60(1).

Cross-complaint not brought to trial within five years after filing of answer must be dismissed (Code Civ. Proc. § 583).

Petition for writ of mandate by the Pacific Finance Corporation against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Los Angeles.

Writ granted.

Overton, Lyman & Plumb, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and S. V. O. Prichard, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, Acting P. J.

In an action commenced by the petitioner for rescission of contract, the defendant served and filed an answer and cross-complaint in March, 1927. Said action was not set for trial until March 31, 1932, on which date the same was called to be heard in the Superior Court. Two days prior thereto the plaintiff had served and filed its notice of motion to dismiss the action upon the ground that it had not been brought to trial within five years after the defendant had filed his answer. The court, after argument, dismissed on its own motion the original complaint and answer, and ordered the case to trial upon the cross-complaint and the answer thereto. This proceeding was instituted here to show cause why the said motion should not be granted below as prayed. It is contended by the respondent that section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure, upon which said motion was founded, does not require the dismissal of an action as to a cross-complaint where issue was joined thereon less than five years prior to the date of such motion. Said section provides that: "Any action heretofore or hereafter commenced shall be dismissed by the court in which the same shall have been commenced or to which it may be transferred on motion of the defendant, after due notice to plaintiff or by the court upon its own motion, unless such action is brought to trial within five years after the defendant has filed his answer, except where the parties have stipulated in writing that the time may be extended."

No case in point is cited by either party. In fact, it is virtually conceded that there is none. We do not feel that an exception should be read into the section by us, which was not deemed by the legislature essential to insure expedition in the trial of civil cases. "The plain and obvious purpose of the foregoing section is to regulate the matter of compulsory dismissals only under one set of circumstances, to wit, where an answer has been filed and the action has not been brought to trial within five years thereafter." Allyne v. Superior Court, 200 Cal. 661, 254 P. 564, 565. Our Supreme Court in the cited case has lately held that the words of said section must be interpreted according to their common acceptance, and quoted with approval from Romero v. Snyder, 167 Cal. 216, 138 P. 1002, wherein that court declined to assume authority to depart from the express language of the statute. We therefore conclude that the motion to dismiss said action should have been granted as to all issues presented, and that the Superior Court was without jurisdiction to hear the same.

The writ of mandamus is granted, as prayed.

SUMNER v. EDMUNDS et al.

Civ. 785.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 24, 1932.

Appeal and error ⇐788.

Appeal from judgment for cross-complainant held dismissible where appellants' brief disclosed questions raised pertained only to issues involving judgment on original complaint, not affecting judgment on cross-complaint.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by Edgar W. Sumner against William J. Edmunds, M. A. Bucher, and others, in which M. A. Bucher filed a cross-complaint against William J. Edmunds and another. From an adverse judgment, William J. Edmunds and the Fresno Republican Publishing Company appeal. On motion of M. A. Bucher to dismiss the appeal from the judgment on the cross-complaint.

Motion granted.

Harris, Willey, Griffith & Harris, of Fresno, for appellant Fresno Republican Pub. Co.

F. W. Docker, of Fresno, for appellant Edmunds.

Martin C. Thuesen, of Fresno, for respondent Sumner.

Christian Hoeppner, of Fresno, and Feemster, Cleary, Perkins & McCormick and Earl W. Westcott, all of Visalia, for respondent Bucher.

MORTON, Justice pro tem.

In this action plaintiff recovered judgment for $2,600 against defendants William J. Edmunds and Fresno Republican Publishing Company, a corporation, for injuries received by him in an automobile collision, upon the finding of the trial court that he was a guest of said defendants at the time of the accident. Defendant M. A. Bucher, owner of the truck with which the Edmunds automobile collided, filed a cross-complaint against defendants Edmunds and Fresno Republican Publishing Company, a corporation, upon which the trial court awarded him judgment in the sum of $1,231. These defendants appealed from both judgments. Plaintiff Sumner has not filed a reply brief nor asked an extension of time within which so to do. Respondent Bucher moves the court for an order dismissing the appeal as to the judgment rendered in his favor against the cross-defendants and appellants upon his cross-complaint.

After an examination of appellants' brief, we are unable to find a substantial ground of appeal from the judgment awarded respondent Bucher. Appellants accept the finding of the trial court that Edmunds was an employee of the Fresno Republican Publishing Company and attack the Sumner judgment upon this premise. The questions raised therein all pertain to the issues involved in the Sumner judgment and if sustained would not affect the Bucher judgment.

The motion is therefore granted dismissing the appeal of the cross-defendants and appellants from the judgment rendered against them upon the cross-complaint of the said M. A. Bucher.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Douglas L. Edmonds, Judge.

Action by Paul M. French against the Orange County Investment Corporation and others. From a judgment granting partial relief to plaintiff against the People's National Bank (the National Bank of Commerce of Los Angeles), plaintiff appeals, and defendant bank appeals from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The two appeals were consolidated on stipulation of counsel.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Harry K. Sargent, of Los Angeles, for Paul M. French.

Faries, Williamson & Musick, of Los Angeles, for People's Nat. Bank.

YORK, J.

On March 28, 1928, plaintiff commenced an action against defendants for fraudulent conversion of a deed, executed by plaintiff's assignors. The complaint in said action prayed that defendants account to plaintiff for the value of plaintiff's interest in the real property conveyed by the deed, to wit, the sum of $2,673.64, and that plaintiff have judgment therefor and for $10,000 exemplary damages. Thereafter, upon motion of plaintiff, the action was dismissed as to all defendants except the defendant bank. On January 19, 1929, the action was tried before a jury which resulted in a judgment for plaintiff. Defendant's motion for a new trial was granted, and a second trial was had on November 1, 1929, which again resulted in a judgment in favor of the plaintiff; said second judgment being for the sum of $2,142.27.

Plaintiff appeals from this judgment, specifying as grounds for reversal seven errors of the court (1) in refusing to allow plaintiff to examine C. J. Shepherd, president of defendant bank, under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure; (2) in overruling plaintiff's objection to a question asked of one of the witnesses; (3) in refusing to permit plaintiff to amend his complaint to conform to the evidence; (4) in modifying plaintiff's requested instructions as to measure of actual damages; (5), (6), and (7) in refusing to give certain instructions requested by plaintiff.

Defendant bank appeals from the judgment and also from an order of the court denying its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and contends that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict and judgment. Upon stipulation of counsel the two appeals were consolidated.

The transaction out of which the action and these appeals arise appears to be as follows: On or about December 13, 1927, the then owners of the property here involved, through their agent in Portland, Or., by letter mailed December 9th, deposited a "deed in blank" with the defendant bank with instructions to deliver the same to the Orange County Investment Corporation when the bank held $300 net to the owners. The Investment Corporation had undertaken to act as agent in finding a purchaser for the property. The owners were residents of Oregon, and ignorant of the true value of the property. They acted in reliance upon representations made to them by the Investment Company that the lots were worth not over $500 each, whereas in fact their market value was $1,250 each. On December 29, 1927, at 9:30 a. m., the bank received written instructions from the said agent to the effect that unless the money was received during banking hours of that day to return the deed. Between the time of the receipt of these instructions and 11:30 a. m. of the same day, the escrow officer of the bank, who was also assistant cashier, was directed by the president of the bank to insert the name of said president as grantee in the deed and charge the president's account with the sum of $300. At 11:30 a. m. of the same day the escrow department of the bank received a telegram from the owners' agent reading: "Do not deliver Hodder deed mailed ninth return immediately." Later in the day the escrow officer, at the direction of the president, sent the following wire to the agent: "Telegram and letter received too late to hold deed stop remitting today." The remittance of $300 was sent to the agent, and the deed was recorded on January 4, 1928. Shortly thereafter the property was sold at a profit.

The value of the property was alleged in the complaint to be $3,750, less incumbrances of $776.36. At the trial proof was adduced showing that the incumbrances were $1,307.73 and a stipulation entered into between the parties to that effect. The jury found in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $2,142.27—$3,750 less incumbrances of $1,307.73 and $300, the amount remitted to the agent.

[1] Taking up the appeal by plaintiff. If there was error committed by the court in its refusal to permit the plaintiff to examine Mr. Shepherd under section 2055, Code of Civil Procedure, such error was harmless, for the reason that the plaintiff was allowed extremely wide latitude in his cross-examination of this party, who was president of the defendant bank at the time he took title to the property, but who subsequently resigned such position and at the time of trial was not connected with the bank. Plaintiff was allowed to bring out the transaction in great detail in his cross-examination of this witness.

[2] The second specification of error is based on the overruling of plaintiff's objection to defendant's question to the vice president of the bank, as to whether or not the former president had discussed with the directors of the bank the fact that he had bought the property here in question. We fail to see how the court's action prejudiced the plaintiff in any way, in view of the fact that the judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff runs against the defendant bank.

[3] The plaintiff's objection that he was not awarded exemplary damages in addition to compensatory damages is not well taken, because plaintiff prosecutes this action solely and only as assignee of the cause of action of the injured persons who owned the property at the time of the alleged unlawful conversion of their deed. In 8 Ruling Case Law, p. 595, it is said: "Exemplary damages are allowed only to the immediate person receiving the injury, either in a suit prosecuted by himself or by some one for his use." This appears to be harmonious in principle with the rule that "a bare right to file a bill in equity for fraud committed upon the assignor will be denied, because the transfer of such right is against public policy." Swallow v. Tungsten Products Co., 205 Cal. 207, 217, 270 P. 366, 370.

[4, 5] The allowance or refusal of amendments to pleadings is a matter within the discretion of the trial court. The basis of plaintiff's proposed amendment was the testimony of the real estate agent, who stated that it was his opinion that the lots were worth $4,500. When asked how he arrived at this figure, he claimed he knew of a sale of two lots for $3,200 located nearer the ocean, made a year or two prior to the sale in question. He also testified that he had offered $3,000 for the three lots involved in this action. In view of the testimony offered and the fact that the complaint alleged the value to be $3,750, we are convinced that there was no error in the refusal of permission to amend the complaint to conform to proof.

We have examined the modified instruction referred to, and also the three instructions requested by plaintiff and refused to be given by the court (Pltfs. Opening Brief, pp. 27 et seq.), and we fail to find wherein the plaintiff was injured or prejudiced by either the modification or the refusal of the court to give the instructions requested.

Defendant bank appeals from the judgment on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence. An examination of the record discloses ample evidence to support the verdict and the judgment.

[6-9] We are convinced that the bank, as depositary of the deed here involved, owes to the grantors the utmost good faith, and cannot exercise the power conferred by its position as holder to use the paper for its own benefit or to the advantage of its president for an entirely different object to that for which it obtained it. Having received it as a proposal, the escrow holder will not be allowed to have it acknowledged by an attesting witness and recorded as a subsisting contract between its president and its principal and others who never assented to its terms or accepted it. Wiard v. Brown, 59 Cal. 194. The evidence shows that the president of the bank conferred with Mr. Wickoff, who was the manager of the real estate department of the Orange County Investment Company, on the morning that the deed was completed, and it is reasonable to assume that Mr. Wickoff informed him of the profit that could be made upon the transaction as finally consummated. We are of the opinion that there was sufficient evidence upon which the jury could base its verdict, and, further, that the jury was convinced by such evidence that the act of the president in having his own name inserted as grantee, and the acquisition by him for $1,600 of property which was proved to be worth at least $3,000, was a breach of the good faith that was owing to the grantors on the part of the bank as depositary, and that the said depositary thereupon became liable in damages to the said grantors. Defendant-appellant makes the point that the rule that knowledge of agent is imputable to principal is not applicable where agent's interests are adverse to that of the principal. As president of a banking institution, we are unable to see how the interest of Mr. Shepherd could be adverse to that of his principal (the bank) in a transaction such as that here involved. At any rate, his interest should have been identical instead of adverse, because as president he, too, owed the utmost good faith to the grantors, and could not take advantage of the situation to make a personal profit.

No error was committed by the court in denying defendant-appellant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and neither was error committed in the giving of the instructions complained of, or in refusing to give the instructions which defendant-appellant contends it was entitled to have given to the jury. (Defts. Opening Brief, pp. 62 et seq.)

The judgment is affirmed. Also the order is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; A. C. Finney, Judge.

Action by Frances C. Bowman to annul marriage of Horace D. Bowman and Bryan Houston Bowman, in which Bryan Houston Bowman filed cross-complaint. From judgment for plaintiff, Bryan Houston Bowman appeals.

Affirmed.

Hill, Morgan & Bledsoe and Kenneth K. Wright, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Stearns, Luce & Forward, of San Diego, for respondent Frances C. Bowman.

Wright & McKee and C. M. Monroe, all of San Diego, for respondent Horace D. Bowman.

MORTON, Justice pro tem.

This is the second appeal in this action of Frances C. Bowman to annul the marriage of Horace D. Bowman and Bryan Houston Bowman. In the first trial judgment was entered for Frances C. Bowman, Bryan Houston Bowman appealed, and the judgment was reversed. Bowman v. Bowman, 97 Cal. App. 613, 275 P. 1023, 1024. Frances C. Bowman asked for a rehearing, which was denied, and hearing in the Supreme Court was also denied. Then Frances C. Bowman moved for a new trial in the court below on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings. This motion was granted, and the case was tried again. Judgment was again entered in favor of Frances C. Bowman, and Bryan Houston Bowman again appeals.

From a study of the record before us we find the facts to be as follows: Frances C. Bowman and Horace D. Bowman intermarried October 16, 1915; on September 28, 1923, Frances C. Bowman filed suit for divorce against Horace D. Bowman; Bryan Houston, a girlhood friend of twenty years who had often visited in the home of the Bowmans, staying over week-ends, and who had encouraged Frances many times not to put up with the conduct and ill treatment of Horace, appeared and testified as her corroborating witness; on October 13, 1923, Frances obtained an interlocutory decree of divorce.

About July 27, 1924, Horace and Frances became reconciled, effected a condonation, and resumed marital relations. On October 22, 1924, they moved to Pasadena, and after a day or two Horace moved some of his belongings to a Los Angeles hotel for the purpose of taking medical treatment and to be away from the noise of the children. While at the hotel, and after receiving a letter from Bryan Houston, he decided to "walk out on" Frances. On October 28th he called on his attorney, David P. Hatch, and arranged that he should call F. F. Grant at San Diego, attorney for Frances, and request him to have the final decree of divorce entered. Bowman did not inform his attorney that there had been a reconciliation and condonation, and Grant, without knowledge of the reconciliation and condonation, and without communicating with Frances, had the final decree entered October 28, 1924. Three days later Horace left on a trip east, called on Bryan Houston in New York, and they became engaged. November 20, 1924, Horace met Frances by prearrangement at Salt Lake City, and they celebrated the birthday of their older son, stopping at the same hotel, but occupying separate rooms. Horace returned to Los Angeles November 21, 1924, and on December 22 met Frances and his children at the train upon their return from Salt Lake City and assisted them in moving to a house in Pasadena. He, however, continued to live at a Los Angeles hotel. Early in January, 1925, Horace assisted Frances and his children to move to Santa Monica, and on January 15, 1925, he told her of the entry of the final decree. This was her first information concerning it. About a week later Frances wrote to Bryan Houston, then in New York, that the reconciliation had failed, that the final decree had been granted and of Horace's deception in getting it, and that they were telling people about it, and that it was a good end to a bad mess.

On April 21, 1925, Horace D. Bowman and Bryan Houston were married, and a week later Frances learned of the marriage. Horace and Bryan returned to Los Angeles in May, 1925. On May 23, 1925, Frances wrote to an attorney friend in Portland for legal advice. On June 6, 1925, she consulted an attorney in Los Angeles. Another conference with this Los Angeles attorney occurred in July. During the latter part of July, 1925, Horace and Bryan had trouble, and Horace consulted an attorney regarding the possibility of an annulment of their marriage. In August, 1925, Frances several times consulted her former attorney, F. F. Grant, in San Diego, and in September, 1925, he advised her that in his opinion she could, by motion, secure the setting aside of the final decree of divorce. This was the first time she had been so advised. On October 19, 1925, Frances filed her application to set aside the final decree of divorce, and two days later notice was served upon Horace, but no service was made upon Bryan.

Horace and Bryan separated on October 25, 1925. The final decree of divorce of Horace D. Bowman and Frances C. Bowman was set aside November 2, 1925, and two days later Frances brought this action to annul the marriage of Horace D. Bowman and Bryan Houston Bowman. On December 1, 1925, Frances and Horace became completely reconciled, a third child has been born to them, and they still continue to live together.

In this action to annul the marriage of Horace D. Bowman and Bryan Houston Bowman, defendant Horace D. Bowman answered, admitting the allegations of the complaint. Defendant Bryan Houston Bowman answered, denying the allegations of the complaint, pleaded certain affirmative defenses, and filed a cross-complaint naming Frances C. Bowman and Horace D. Bowman as cross-defendants, and praying that the order vacating their final decree of divorce be set aside and annulled, to which each filed an answer. In the first trial judgment was entered denying the prayer of the cross-complaint, and vacating, annulling, and setting aside the marriage of Horace D. Bowman and Bryan Houston Bowman. Defendant and cross-complainant Bryan Houston Bowman appealed on the judgment roll. Bowman v. Bowman, supra. The District Court of Appeal reversed the judgment, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment against Frances C. Bowman denying her prayer for annulment of the marriage of Bryan Houston Bowman and Horace D. Bowman, and ordered that judgment be entered in favor of Bryan Houston Bowman as prayed for in her cross-complaint against both cross-defendants, and that the order made in the action entitled "Frances C. Bowman v. Horace D. Bowman," numbered 40292, in the Superior Court of San Diego county, purporting to set aside and vacate a final decree of divorce, be set aside, vacated, and annulled, and that the final decree of divorce stand as a subsisting and valid decree. A petition for rehearing was denied by the District Court of Appeal and petition to have the case heard in the Supreme Court was also denied, Justices Richards and Langdon dissenting. After judgment had been entered in accordance therewith, respondent Frances C. Bowman moved for a new trial upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings. This motion was granted, and the action was retried. Judgment was again entered in favor of Frances C. Bowman, and Bryan Houston Bowman again appeals.

At the second trial of this action evidence was introduced which changed the picture as to Bryan being an innocent third party. The cross-complaint filed by Bryan alleged that, after being told by Horace of the entry of the final decree of divorce, and later having received a letter from Frances conveying the same information, she relied upon this knowledge and married Horace. She further alleged that Horace and Frances entered into a conspiracy and secret agreement to set aside the final decree and annul her marriage with Horace, thereby defeating and defrauding her of her marital rights. She further alleged that Frances allowed one year to pass before acting to set aside the final decree.

[1] To the introduction of evidence concerning alleged relations between the husband and Bryan Houston prior to the entry of the interlocutory decree of divorce and prior to the reconciliation of Horace and Frances, counsel for Bryan objected on the ground that these matters were incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and wholly collateral to any issue in the case. If the hands of Bryan Houston Bowman were tainted with fraud concerning the case at bar, the trial court was entitled to this information, and the objection was properly overruled. In the case of Manhattan Medicine Co. v. Wood, 108 U. S. 218, 2 S. Ct. 436, 442, 27 L. Ed. 706, Mr. Justice Field said (quoting from the opinion of Chief Justice Duer in Fetridge v. Wells, 4 Abb. Prac. [N. Y.] 144): "Those who come into a court of equity, seeking equity, must come with pure hands and a pure conscience. If they claim relief against the fraud of others, they must themselves be free from the imputation." See, also, Castroville Co-op. Creamery Co. v. Col, 6 Cal. App. 533, 92 P. 648.

We must now consider the law of the case as established in Bowman v. Bowman, supra. First, it should be noted that the appeal was taken on the judgment roll only, and the District Court of Appeal determined as follows: "The appeal presents the question as to whether or not the conclusions of law were supported by the findings, and whether or not, in view of the findings of fact, the cross-complainant should have been granted the relief prayed for in her cross-complaint." Second, the judgment of the trial court was reversed on two points: "[1] We determine that, irrespective of whether appellant was a necessary or proper party to the proceeding to vacate the final decree, she was entitled to notice of the application, as one whose rights as a wife have been injuriously affected by the order vacating the final decree of divorce, and that she is entitled to complain of the fraud practiced upon the court and upon herself, and, by her cross-complaint in equity, have the said order set aside and annulled. * * * [2] The second reason we find which would indicate that the judgment in this case should be reversed is that, in our view, the order made in the proceedings in the divorce suit after the entry of the final decree was void, as being in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, because (1) Frances C. Bowman was guilty of laches, as affirmatively appears in findings VII and IX, in delaying her application for suit herein from the early part of January, 1925, when it is found she first knew of the entry of said final decree, until November 2, 1925, a delay of approximately ten months; (2) she was estopped from the right to make application for an annulment of the final decree, as it affirmatively appears from said findings that when she first learned of the final decree in the early part of January, about three months after her own counsel had applied for and obtained the said decree on October 28, 1924, she acquiesced therein, expressed satisfaction therewith, and was willing and desirous that said decree should stand as a valid and subsisting decree. After she learned of the marriage of Horace D. Bowman to Bryan Houston Bowman, which took place in April, 1925, Frances C. Bowman accepted all of the benefits granted her by the said decree in the way of support, maintenance, and the custody of minor children, etc. She thereby confirmed and ratified the action of her attorney, Mr. Grant, in causing the issuance of said final decree. She made no effort thereafter to have said decree set aside until November 2, 1925, more than a year after its issuance, by which time the trial court had lost jurisdiction to vacate it or set it aside, under the well-established law of this state."

[2] On the first appeal the appellate court did not determine that Bryan Houston Bowman was a necessary or proper party to the proceedings to vacate the final decree of divorce. However, upon the findings of the trial court, it was held that she was entitled to notice of the application as one whose rights as a wife were involved and entitled to complain of the fraud practiced upon the court and herself. In numerous decisions, the Supreme Court of this state has laid down the rule that the law of a case only applies so long as the evidence develops the same state of facts. If the facts produced at the second trial are essentially different, the rule ceases to be of binding force. In Klauber v. San Diego Street Car Co., 98 Cal. 105, 107, 32 P. 876, the court held: "It is only when the same matters that were determined on the first appeal are brought before it on the second appeal that the rule can be invoked; and, being a rule which tends to prevent a judicial consideration of the case, it is not to be extended beyond the exigencies which demand its application, and it is therefore held that whenever, upon the second hearing, the record presents a different state of facts, the former determination ceases to be an estoppel." Mitchell v. Davis, 23 Cal. 381; Bennett v. Wilson, 133 Cal. 379, 65 P. 880, 85 Am. St. Rep. 207; Otten v. Spreckels, 183 Cal. 252, 254, 191 P. 11; Estate of Baird, 193 Cal. 225, 233, 223 P. 974; 2 Cal. Jur. 950.

[3] After a careful examination of the evidence and the findings of the trial court, we believe that at the second trial a different state of facts presents itself for determination. In the second trial the findings held that there was no conspiracy and agreement between respondent Frances C. Bowman and respondent Horace D. Bowman to defraud either the court or Bryan Houston Bowman as to the entry of the final decree, and that Frances on her own initiative, and without assistance from Horace, was the moving party to set aside the final decree. Further, it was held that the proceedings to vacate the final decree were not kept secret from Bryan, and there was no agreement between Frances and Horace to institute this present annulment action if the motion was granted. The court further found that the affidavits upon which the final decree of divorce was set aside were true; that Horace did not oppose said motion because he had no defense and had been so advised by his counsel; that Frances and Horace were living together as husband and wife in pursuance of their reconciliation when the final decree of divorce was granted; that they continued to live together until November 1, 1924; that Bryan Houston knew of the reconciliation and condonation between Horace and Frances which had commenced in July, 1924, and continued until after the final decree had been entered; that Bryan Houston for many years had been an intimate friend of Frances, frequently visiting in the home of Frances and Horace, and, while accepting their hospitality, engaged in a secret love affair with Horace; that for this reason Bryan desired to bring about a separation, and advised and encouraged Frances to secure a divorce; that the conduct and influence of Bryan was a cause of the separation and divorce; that Bryan was a corroborating witness in the divorce action, and testified in support of Frances' allegations; that Bryan had possession of all the facts of this case which were then before the court, and nothing connected with the case was unknown to her, and there were no facts in her possession that would have caused or required or justified the court in refusing to set aside the final decree of divorce; that she had no defense to the motion to set aside the final decree and no facts existed which would have caused its denial; that, had she been served and had she been present at the hearing and produced all said facts, no different or other action would have resulted. It now appears from all the evidence and the findings in the second trial that Frances was the innocent party deceived by fraud practiced over a number of years by her supposed friend Bryan Houston.

In the first trial of the case and on the appeal, Bryan Houston Bowman appeared an innocent third party, a second wife about to be defrauded of her rights by a conspiracy and agreement between the husband and the first wife. On the present appeal, from the evidence and the findings, she now appears as the third person in the original divorce action. With her knowledge of the facts surrounding the securing of the interlocutory decree, the condonation and reconciliation, and the manner by which the final decree was obtained, it should be said, as in Medina v. Medina, 22 Colo. 146, 43 P. 1001, that a person acting under such a decree is not entitled to the protection of the court, as she acquired no rights in good faith upon which she could rely under a decree of court.

[4, 5] The evidence shows that in July, 1925, Horace and Bryan discussed a separation and a possible annulment of their marriage. Bryan knew that Horace had written to a Kansas City attorney regarding it, and at approximately the same time she consulted legal counsel in Los Angeles. It appears that Horace desired a separation and that Bryan was opposed to it. Prior to the motion to set aside the final decree (during September and October, 1925), Horace told Bryan several times that Frances was starting a lawsuit in the old divorce matter to open up the matter of the divorce and property and everything concerning her situation. After the papers were served on him, he told Bryan that Frances had started the suit. Bryan knew in what court the divorce action had been tried, she had appeared as a witness for Frances, and she knew how the final decree had been secured. She had ample information to put her on inquiry immediately. "In the absence of positive law or order of court requiring notice, it may be stated as a general rule that, where a fact as to which notice might otherwise be required, is one which the party has means of ascertaining from a definite known source, or which is equally known to both parties, no notice thereof need be given." 46 Cor. Jur. 552; Tynan v. Kerns, 119 Cal. 447, 51 P. 693; Prouty v. Devin, 118 Cal. 258, 50 P. 380. A court of equity does not allow one to take advantage of his own fraud, and will refuse to lend its aid to assist in enforcing a fraudulent imposition upon government, public, or private individuals. When parties are in pari delicto, a court will leave them where it finds them, after purging its records of the fraud practiced upon the court. 12 Cal. Jur. 779.

[6] The first trial court by its findings held that Frances learned of the granting of the final decree in January, 1925, and made no effort to set it aside; on the contrary, she acquiesced therein, expressed satisfaction that it had been granted and her willingness that it should stand as valid and binding, and that she had accepted benefits under said decree after the marriage of Horace and Bryan. Presented with this finding, the District Court of Appeal, with no evidence or knowledge of the fraud of Bryan Houston, naturally concluded that Frances was guilty of laches, having, according to their conclusion, waited ten months before moving to set it aside. The only party injured by the delay was Bryan, and in the eyes of the appellate court she appeared the innocent second wife.

With both the evidence and the findings at our command, we are able to get the entire picture of the situation. According to the record before us, there had been a complete reconciliation and condonation between Frances and Horace. In January, 1925, he told her that he had secured a final decree in October, and, stunned by his deception, she endeavored to cover her disappointment by saying she was satisfied. Between January and April, Horace came to the home frequently to see the children, and Frances tried upon several occasions to discuss the matter of the divorce with him, but he would reply, "Oh, forget it." He would tell her that what he had done was for her best interest. She testified that he had her convinced there was nothing she could do about it. In April, 1925, she learned of the marriage of her husband to her former friend and confidante and of their secret love affair. The discovery of this fraud first crushed her, then caused her to act. In view of this evidence, it is here that the time should start, if at all, upon which to base a charge of laches. It was at this time that Frances discovered the fraud practiced by Bryan upon her. She testified that investigation brought additional light, and then in June she sought legal advice. Up to that time the law was somewhat uncertain, but the case of McGuinness v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 222, 237 P. 42, 40 A. L. R. 1110 (decided May 29, 1925), clearly determined the principles involved for a motion to vacate the final decree. In that case it was held that, in an action for divorce, where there had been a reconciliation, condonation, and a resumption of marital relations after entry of the interlocutory decree, and if, during that period, the husband without the knowledge of the wife secured a final decree of divorce, these facts constituted extrinsic fraud upon the court, and the court retains jurisdiction to set aside the final decree upon motion of the wife. Upon the advice of her Los Angeles attorney, she consulted attorneys in San Diego during August and September, and in October her motion was filed to set aside the final decree. The motion was heard on November 2, 1925, and the final decree was set aside by order of the Superior Court of San Diego county. Within approximately six months of the discovery of the fraud her motion had been made and granted.

[7] After distinguishing the law of the case as found by the District Court of Appeal in Bowman v. Bowman, supra, and in view of the entirely different state of facts as shown by the evidence and findings on the second trial now before us, we must turn to the proper function of courts in dealing with fraud practiced upon them. In the case of McGuinness v. Superior Court, supra, we find that an almost identical state of facts as is here involved is defined as extrinsic fraud, and that the court retained jurisdiction to set aside its decree, and its right so to do is not derived from section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, nor limited to the time therein specified. In the case of Ex-Mission L. & W. Co. v. Flash, 97 Cal. 610, 32 P. 600, it was held that a motion to set aside a judgment upon the ground of fraud in its procurement is not subject to the six-month limitation provided in section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and in the opinion in that case it is pointed out by the court that said section of the Code, while providing for relief in cases of "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect," does not include "fraud" among the grounds upon which relief from a void or voidable judgment may be sought under its terms.

The introduction of the additional evidence involved the question of fraud on the part of appellant, Bryan Houston Bowman, and the determination of her rights involved a consideration of her acts and representations under the light of the law as to fraud. In the case of Dealey v. East San Mateo Land Co., 21 Cal. App. 39, at page 43, 130 P. 1066, 1068, the court says: "Here the fraud is not against the defendant, but against the public. Pleading such a fraud is not a condition precedent to the court's taking cognizance of it. As soon as it is disclosed to the court, whether alleged in the pleadings or not, that the contract between the parties contemplates a fraud upon the public, it must sua sponte refuse to grant any relief to either party based on such contract. [Citing cases.] It is the duty of courts to protect the public at all times against fraud, and one way of doing so is by closing the doors to would-be or actual perpetrators of such fraud who would fain make use of the court to divide the spoils between them."

In Mitchell v. Cline, 84 Cal. 409, 24 P. 164, 166, we find the court quoting Pomeroy's Equity Jurisdiction, § 401, as follows: "Where two or more have entered into a fraudulent scheme for the purpose of obtaining property in which all are to share, and the scheme has been carried out so that all the results of the fraud are in the hands of one of the parties, a court of equity will not interfere on behalf of the others to aid them in obtaining their shares, but will leave the parties in the position where they have placed themselves."

[8] Ignoring for the moment the children of Frances and Horace, let us find who were the parties interested in the original divorce action. The record discloses Frances C. Bowman as plaintiff and Horace D. Bowman as defendant. The case of Lane v. Superior Court, 104 Cal. App. 340, at page 345, 285 P. 860, 863, clearly portrays the true parties to every marriage contract when an action comes before the court for an interlocutory decree. "There are two major reasons why the law requires a year to intervene between the interlocutory and the final decree of divorce. One is to permit the determination of the paternity of the children, and the other, not less of interest to society, is to permit, if possible, the husband and wife to compose their difficulties and become so reconciled to one another that the marital relations may be resumed and no final decree of divorce become necessary. If the marriage relation found its inception in a civil contract of the two parties in the performance, existence, and termination of which they alone be concerned, our task would be a simple one. But in every such contract there is a third party vitally interested, the society in which we live, and representing it, the government which gives that society the permanence upon which its existence depends. For this reason the rules of marriage are prescribed by law, and the right of dissolution should be jealously guarded." The interest of the third party, "the society in which we live," our government and the public in general, requires a careful analysis of all the facts before a marriage contract is dissolved.

It must be admitted that the true guardian of the American home is the wife and mother. If a child is led astray, she never relaxes her effort to bring him back. If the husband, through sickness, weakness of character, or inability to resist the appetites of human nature, errs, and the wife still loves him because of what he used to be, or because he is a fond and loving father to her children, has she not the right to endeavor to bring him back under the proper circumstances and re-establish her home and family? From the evidence we must conclude that this husband with his wife and children constituted a happy family until Bryan Houston became involved in a secret love affair with the father. Then friction arose, and we find Bryan Houston writing to the wife, "Every one gets into trouble but only smart people get out of it," and frequently saying to her in the supposedly close confidence of a twenty-year friendship, "I would not live with him," and, "I would get a divorce from a man who treated me that way." She appeared as a corroborating witness to assist the wife in getting free from the husband whom "I would not live with." Throughout the years of friction and litigation the love of the husband and father for his children continually drew him back to his first home. Approximately eight months after the interlocutory decree there was a reconciliation and condonation concerning which Frances wrote in detail in two letters during August of 1925 to her supposedly close friend, Bryan Houston, telling her how happy they all were. These letters were not answered by Bryan. The husband, after secretly securing the final decree of divorce on October 28, 1924, very promptly told Bryan about it, and from that moment, by reason of the letters previously written her by Frances, which she admits receiving, and her own personal knowledge of the reconciliation, she was charged with notice that said final decree was fraudulently obtained. Without hesitating, and before Frances knew of the final decree, she became engaged to Horace during the early part of November, 1924, less than a month after the granting of the final decree, and before she had received the letter of January 16, 1925, from Frances expressing satisfaction over the granting of the final decree. From the evidence we conclude that Bryan Houston knew she was involved in and a principal cause of the family's troubles, and had designingly advised the wife to leave her husband and get a divorce; that she had personal knowledge of the reconciliation and condonation; that she had knowledge the final decree was granted through concealment and fraud upon the court; that Frances, without knowledge of the fraud, designing advice, and betrayal of friendship by Bryan, had expressed satisfaction with the granting of the final decree possibly to cover her pride and anguish. In spite of all this knowledge, Bryan Houston married Horace D. Bowman. It is apparent she was fully aware of the fact that the legal eligibility of Horace for a marriage to her was upon very uncertain ground, and that whenever the fraud upon which his freedom had been secured was exposed the court might properly revoke and annul the entire judgment.

[9] The question squarely before this court is, Shall Bryan Houston Bowman be allowed to take advantage of her own fraud and stand on the technical ground of lack of legal notice and a finding of laches against an innocent party, made by a court before which these facts did not then appear, or shall the court purge its records of the fraud?

[10] Society is entitled to a condemnation of the tactics of Bryan Houston Bowman. We should permit this mother and defrauded wife to re-establish her home and family. In the case of Rehfuss v. Rehfuss, 169 Cal. 86, 145 P. 1020, 1022, our Supreme Court directed attention to the fact that actions for divorce differ from ordinary suits between private parties in the degree of solicitude which the law as well as public policy imposes upon the court in the interest of preserving the integrity of marriage relations. The court says: "That relation is the basis of the family, the foundation of society. It cannot be destroyed by the mere consent, whim, or caprice of the parties to the marriage, nor can it be stipulated away in judicial proceedings. The relation can be dissolved only by consent of the state, and upon statutory grounds, presented in good faith to a court of competent jurisdiction. * * * It is the duty of the court, representing the state, in accordance with the letter and policy of the law, to guard strictly against fraud, collusion, or imposition."

In the case at bar we find fraud practiced upon the court, upon society, and upon three children, two born prior to the divorce proceedings and the third after the final reconciliation and condonation. The fraud which permeates this case cannot be condoned by the court, and cannot be allowed to brand this third son with the stigma of illegitimacy. Preservation of the sanctity of the marriage state is essential to the continuance and betterment of organized society. "The state has an interest in the maintenance of the marriage tie, which neither the collusion nor the negligence of the parties can impair." Rehfuss v. Rehfuss, supra. A full consideration of the law and the evidence leads to but one conclusion, that the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

FOERST v. HOBRO et al.

Civ. 8350.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 24, 1932.

Rehearing Denied, Sept. 23, 1932.

1. False imprisonment ⇐20(1).

Complaint alleging false imprisonment must show that judicial proceedings pursuant to which imprisonment occurred were defective and that court had no jurisdiction.

2. False imprisonment ⇐20(1).

Complaint alleging plaintiff was charged with criminal offense and imprisoned stated no cause of action for false imprisonment where not alleging how proceeding was defective.

Complaint alleged in substance that inspector of department of health swore to criminal complaint against plaintiff pursuant to which she was arrested by police officer and imprisoned in city prison for several hours; that as result of such arrest and imprisonment she suffered damages on account of humiliation, mental shock, and physical injuries, and her claim that imprisonment was illegal was based solely upon assertion that complaint in criminal proceeding did not state a public offense, but she did not set forth copy of criminal complaint nor substance of its allegations nor allege its defects.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Wilhemina Foerst against William D. Hobro and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

M. James McGranahan, of San Francisco, for appellant.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Walter A. Dold, Chief Deputy City Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondents.

TUTTLE, Justice pro tem.

This was an action to recover damages for an alleged false imprisonment, brought against two inspectors of the department of health of the city and county of San Francisco, one of whom was chief inspector. Demurrers to the original and the first amended complaint were sustained with leave to amend; and the second amended complaint being defective also, the demurrer thereto was sustained without leave to amend. Judgment in favor of defendants was entered accordingly, and plaintiff appeals therefrom.

The complaint alleged that the inspector, acting under instructions from and at the direction of his chief, swore to a criminal complaint against plaintiff, pursuant to which she was arrested by a police officer and imprisoned in the city prison for several hours; and that as a result of such arrest and imprisonment she suffered damages on account of humiliation, mental shock and physical injuries.

As will appear from the second amended complaint, and from plaintiff's briefs on appeal, her claim that the imprisonment was illegal is based solely upon the assertion that the complaint in the criminal proceeding did not state a public offense. She did not set forth a copy of the criminal complaint, however, nor any portion thereof, nor the substance of any of its allegations; nor did she allege generally or at all wherein the said criminal complaint was defective or failed to state a public offense; in fact, she did not even indicate the nature of the criminal charge placed against her. With respect thereto, both on this appeal and before the trial court, she has chosen to stand on the single allegation contained in paragraph VI of the second amended complaint: "That the said arrest was illegal and unlawful by reason of the fact that the aforesaid [criminal] complaint did not state a public offense."

[1, 2] Respondents contend that the foregoing allegation is but a conclusion of law, and that therefore, since no facts are pleaded which show the imprisonment to have been unlawful, no cause of action is stated. The authorities fully sustain such contention. As held in the case of Burlingame v. Traeger, 101 Cal. App. 365, 281 P. 1051, a demurrer to a complaint for false imprisonment is properly sustained where the complaint fails to allege any facts indicating that the order of arrest or the affidavit upon which it is based are insufficient, and where there is no showing of any irregularity on the face of the order of arrest or any lack of jurisdiction of the court to issue it; allegations that the order is illegal, unauthorized, and void, and that the affidavit is insufficient, being mere conclusions of law. In so holding the court said (page 369 of 101 Cal. App., 281 P. 1051, 1052): "The rules are elementary that an allegation that an instrument is 'illegal,' 'unauthorized,' or 'void' is but a conclusion of law, and that such words, when used in connection with issuable facts, are to be regarded as mere surplusage and never obviate the necessity of alleging the facts showing wherein the illegality, lack of authorization or invalidity lies." Likewise in the case of Going v. Dinwiddie, 86 Cal. 633, 25 P. 129, it was held that allegations charging merely that the acts constituting such imprisonment were done "wrongfully" or "unlawfully" are nothing more than conclusions of law, and tender no issue, where no facts are averred to show the acts complained of are wrongful or unlawful; the court saying: "There may be some relations where 'wrongfully' and 'unlawfully' and similar adverbs have some significance, but the ordinary rule is that for purposes of pleading they are utterly valueless." And again, in Lapique v. Agoure, 51 Cal. App. 56, 195 P. 1075, 1076, in holding that an action for false imprisonment does not lie for an imprisonment in due course of regular proceedings of a court having jurisdiction of the offense (19 Cyc. 339), the court goes on to say that "a complaint for false imprisonment must aver facts from which want of jurisdiction appears. Allegations, as here, that the imprisonment was unlawful and void, tender no issue," citing Going v. Dinwiddie, supra. From the foregoing it will be seen that where, as here, it affirmatively appears from the complaint that the alleged wrongful detention is pursuant to judicial proceedings, facts must be stated showing that such proceedings were defective and that therefore the court in which they were had was without jurisdiction; and that it is not enough to allege merely that the complaint was insufficient or that the court had no jurisdiction. 25 Cor. Jur. p. 533, § 129.

Stripped, then, of its conclusions of law, the second amended complaint shows merely that an inspector of the department of health instituted a criminal proceeding in a court of competent jurisdiction, by swearing to a complaint charging plaintiff with a criminal offense, and that thereafter plaintiff was arrested and imprisoned under process duly issued in said proceeding. In that state of the pleading, all presumptions of regularity being indulged in, and no facts being alleged showing how or in what respect the proceeding was defective, no cause of action for false imprisonment has been stated.

The case of Ah Fong v. Sternes, 79 Cal. 30, 21 P. 381, stressed by plaintiff in support of her position, is essentially different from the present one for there, in addition to alleging that plaintiff was unlawfully imprisoned, the complaint set forth specific facts, which, in themselves, if true, were sufficient to establish an illegal imprisonment. In this regard it was alleged that a writ of habeas corpus had been duly issued by the superior court commanding defendant to produce the body of plaintiff at a specified time and place; that said writ had been served on defendant while he had plaintiff in his custody and under his control; and that defendant refused to obey such writ. Plaintiff calls attention to certain language used in the decision therein which she claims upholds the form of complaint here filed; but an analysis of the language relied upon, in the light of the cases cited by the court in support thereof, shows clearly that the language was intended to apply to cases such as the court then had under consideration, where specific facts are alleged which are legally sufficient in themselves to show an illegal imprisonment, or to cases where the arrest is made without the sanction of a warrant or any judicial proceeding, and facts are alleged which, if true, would establish an illegal arrest and detention.

We conclude, therefore, that the demurrer to the second amended complaint was properly sustained, and no other points being made with respect thereto, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

LEJEUNE v. GENERAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION OF CALIFORNIA.*

Civ. 8325.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 20, 1932.

Rehearing Granted Sept. 19, 1932.

1. Appeal and error ⇐221.

Point that damages were excessive cannot be raised for first time on appeal.

2. Seamen ⇐29(5).

Allegations regarding employer's negligence where anchor chain, while being hauled in, suddenly reversed and injured seaman, did not show specific manner in which accident occurred so as to prevent application of res ipsa loquitur doctrine (Jones Act 1920, § 33 [46 USCA § 688]; Federal Employers' Liability Act § 1 [45 USCA § 51]).

Complaint alleged that while plaintiff seaman was engaged in stowing away anchor chain in performance of his duties, officers and employees of shipowner so carelessly and negligently operated winch and its appliances used to haul in anchor and stow anchor chain, and such winch and its appliances and said anchor chain were, by reason of negligence of defendants, so defective and insufficient that anchor chain suddenly reversed in opposite direction, and seaman was thereby violently thrown against some portion of chain locker.

3. Seamen ⇐29(1).

It was duty of officers of ship, toward seaman sustaining injuries when anchor was being hauled in, to take precautions against results which might accompany heaving in of anchor on heavy swell of sea (Jones Act 1920, § 33 [46 USCA § 688]; Federal Employers' Liability Act § 1 [45 USCA § 51]).

4. Negligence ⇐24.

In determining question of negligence, there must be considered facts known to person, or which, by use of proper diligence, would have been known to prudent man in his place.

5. Seamen ⇐29(4).

Seaman does not assume risk of negligent acts of those in charge of ship, or their failure to take reasonable precautions (Jones Act 1920, § 33 [46 USCA § 688]; Federal Employers' Liability Act § 1 [45 USCA § 51]).

6. Seamen ⇐29(4).

Seaman does not assume risk, even though danger was obvious to him (Jones Act 1920, § 33 [46 USCA § 688]; Federal Employers' Liability Act § 1 [45 USCA § 51]).

7. Appeal and error ⇐1002.

Jury's conclusion on conflicting evidence could not be disturbed on appeal.

8. Negligence ⇐138(2).

Where explanation leaves it doubtful whether ultimate cause of injury was negligence of party charged, res ipsa loquitur instruction is proper.

9. Seamen ⇐29(5).

Res ipsa loquitur doctrine held applicable where seaman stowing anchor chain in chain locker was injured when anchor suddenly reversed direction and injured seaman (Jones Act 1920, § 33 [46 USCA § 688]; Federal Employers' Liability Act § 1 [45 USCA § 51]).

Evidence disclosed that plaintiff seaman and his companion were in chain locker and could observe nothing but chain coming through steel pipe from winch above, and could not observe manner in which windlass was operated, or in which other members of crew were performing their respective duties; that machinery was under immediate direction and control of officers of ship; that plaintiff could not know whether pawl or forelock was in proper position, or whether the compressor brake was being watched as it should be, but was compelled to rely upon proper operation of machinery by his superiors and agents of employer.

10. Appeal and error ⇐1170(7).

Erroneous admission of conversation held harmless where not necessary to establish plaintiff's case (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Admission of evidence in effect that prior to happening of accident seaman who was with plaintiff at time of accident had had conversation with first mate in which he had said that winch was not in perfect order, although error because conversation was vague and indefinite and no specification was made as to any particular defect in machinery, and plaintiff had made no effort to show any defect in windlass, was harmless because such testimony was not necessary for establishment of plaintiff's case.

11. Appeal and error ⇐1170(9).

Giving instruction regarding aggravation of pre-existing condition where no pre-existing injuries were involved held harmless, where jury was properly instructed regarding measure of damages (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Ford & Johnson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LAMBERSON, Justice pro tem.

The plaintiff was employed as an able seaman on the tank steamer Lebec, owned and operated by the defendant and appellant. Because of injuries received while the ship was weighing anchor off of the town of Davenport, Santa Cruz county, this action for the recovery of damages has been brought against appellant under the provisions of the Jones Act (46 USCA § 688), which reads as follows: "Any seaman who shall suffer personal injury in the course of his employment may, at his election, maintain an action for damages at law, with the right of trial by jury, and in such action all statutes of the United States modifying or extending the common-law right or remedy in cases of personal injury to railway employees shall apply. * * * " The Federal Employers' Liability Act, to which reference is made in the preceding act (45 USCA § 51), reads in part as follows: "* * * For such injury * * * resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, works, boats, wharves, or other equipment."

For about two weeks prior to the date of the incident, which is the subject of the action, the respondent had been employed on the Lebec. The ship, about February 15, 1931, and after a general overhauling, at San Pedro loaded with fuel oil and proceeded to Davenport, where it was the custom and was necessary to anchor in the open sea about one mile from shore, where the ship picked up a pipe line leading to the tanks on shore, which were used for storage, and to discharge its cargo through such pipe line. The ship was moored to three buoys, and had out the port and starboard anchors. For the performance of the task of hoisting anchor, two men, one of whom was the respondent, were assigned to the chain locker for the purpose of stowing the anchor chain as it came in. The chain locker was a compartment located in the forecastle head immediately below the windlass or winch, hereafter described, and was about 12 feet by 5 feet in dimensions, and 15 feet in depth. The anchor chain consists of links each about 14 inches long, 7 inches wide, and weighing about 25 pounds. It was hoisted by means of a windlass, to which was affixed a device known as a "wild cat," which operated on the principle of a friction clutch, and which, when meshed with the revolving part of the winch, drew the chain in by means of "dogs," which engaged the open space in the links of the anchor chain. The motive power which operated the winch was steam. From the winch the chain fell through a pipe into the chain locker. As a safety device, there was first a pawl or forelock built in to the deck between the winch and the opening in the ship's side through which the anchor chain was drawn. The forelock was so designed that in the event of a reversal of the chain, the "dog" on the forelock would fall into the open part of the link and prevent the chain from running further.

Because of the manner in which the chain was constructed it was agreed that about 20 inches of the chain might run out before the pawl would engage. As an additional safety factor, there was upon the winch or windlass a band or compressor brake which was operated by means of a handle, and which was designed for use in the event of the failure of the hoisting machinery or of the forelock to engage the chain while running out.

On the day of the accident, the boatswain was assigned to the duty of turning the steam into the winch and off, that is, attending the throttle. An able seaman was stationed at the starboard compressor brake for the purpose of applying the brake in the event of an emergency, while the first mate stood in the forecastle head in front of the winch and superintended the operation, watching at the same time the slackening away of the port anchor chain which was being slowly payed out, as the starboard anchor was being drawn in. The master of the ship was on the bridge about 175 feet away from the winch.

A heavy sea had been running during all of the morning and part of the preceding day, causing the lightened ship to rise as much as 8 to 12 feet with the swell. During the process of hoisting the anchor, and after the larger part of the chain had been drawn in, the ship rose with the swell, and the chain suddenly stopped running in, and reversed its direction. At that time the chain had been stowed to a height of about 4 feet below the top of the locker room, and there was a space left between the pile of chain and the walls. The respondent and his companion, who testified that he was about 3 feet from the respondent, were standing on the pile of chain, it being necessary to stoop over in order to work, and the respondent was shoving the chain over with his shoulder. As the chain suddenly ceased coming in, respondent's companion jumped to safety, but the respondent remained where he was, and by the reversal of the chain was thrown some distance from the pile, his head striking against some obstacle in the locker room. No serious injury was immediately apparent, although there was some bleeding from the nose, and the respondent, with the assistance of the boatswain, stowed the remainder of the chain. He continued with his various duties, although complaining of pains in his head, until after his arrival in San Pedro the following day. After some persuasion he went to a hospital, and later a paralysis of certain members on the left side of his body developed, resulting from damage to the brain. Respondent also claimed that his left eye and ear were injured.

After the boatswain had taken the place of the seaman who had been assisting the respondent, the work of hoisting the anchor was resumed, and it developed that the flukes of the anchor had been broken off, presumably because the anchor had become engaged with or had fouled boulders on the ocean floor. The anchor weighed approximately 9,600 pounds. The chain had been payed out to about 540 feet, and the ship, when unloaded, weighed approximately 10,200 dead weight tons. The starboard anchor was lying at a depth of between 45 and 50 feet. The pilot, who had been taking the ships in, and mooring and unmooring them during the period of two years, said that he could put the ship within 40 feet of the same place each time, and that this was the first occasion on which an anchor had fouled.

The jury returned a verdict in favor of respondent for $20,000. No motion for a new trial was made, and the appeal is from the judgment of the court entered upon the verdict.

[1] Appellant bases its appeal upon the following grounds: That there was no evidence of negligence on the part of defendant, but that the injury sustained by respondent was due entirely to the fouling of the anchor, and the heavy swell of the sea; that the court erred in admitting statements alleged to have been made to the seaman Morris, who had assisted respondent in the chain locker, at unspecified times prior to the accident, as to some unspecified defect in the windlass; that the court erred in instructing the jury as to the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, the appellant contending that the doctrine is not applicable to the case; and also that the court erred in instructing the jury as to the measure of damages and matters not in issue; and, lastly, upon the ground that the damages were excessive. This last point cannot be considered by this court for the well-established reason that such point cannot be raised for the first time on appeal, but must be presented to the lower court on motion for a new trial. Bate v. Jolin, 206 Cal. 504, 274 P. 971.

The question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict goes hand in hand with the question of the applicability of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. The testimony of the seaman Forrester, who was attending the starboard compressor brake, was that while the crew were heaving in the anchor "it slipped down, stopped, and surged out"; that he immediately put on the brake "which is the thing naturally to do." There is considerable conflict of testimony as to the distance which the chain traveled out of the locker room and over the winch toward the sea. The seaman Morris, who was with respondent in the locker room, said that the chain stopped falling down to them; that he immediately jumped away, and as he jumped, the chain ran out 6 to 12 feet. Witnesses on behalf of appellant testified that it ran back only 18 to 20 inches. The court gave the following instruction: "There is a rule of law known as res ipsa loquitur which, translated literally, means 'the thing speaks for itself.' This rule defined declares that when the thing which causes injury is shown to be under the management and control of the defendant and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management and control use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from a want of ordinary care."

And at the request of the appellant, the court gave a further instruction as follows: "I instruct you that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, meaning 'the thing speaks for itself,' to which I have referred in a previous instruction, applies only to the case where the injury was proximately caused by a thing under the control of the defendant, and defendant offers no evidence showing a lack of negligence. This doctrine, however, does not shift the ultimate burden of proof of negligence from plaintiff to the defendant. The defendant need not satisfy you by a preponderance of evidence that it was not negligent, but defendant is merely required to make such a showing of want of negligence on its part as to leave the jury unsatisfied whether or not there was negligence on the part of the defendant. When such evidence is offered by the defendant, then if the plaintiff fails to prove to you by a preponderance of evidence that the accident was proximately caused by the negligence of the defendant, your verdict should be against the plaintiff and in favor of the defendant, even though the defendant has merely made such a showing as to want of negligence on its part as to leave the jury unsatisfied whether the defendant's negligence was the cause of the injury or not."

[2] During the course of the trial, respondent was permitted to amend his complaint, and by his amendment alleged "that while plaintiff was engaged in stowing away the anchor chain, in the performance of his duties as aforesaid, the officers, servants and employees of said defendant herein, and each of them, so carelessly and negligently operated a certain winch and its appliances, used to haul in said anchor and stow said anchor chain, and said winch and its appliances and said anchor chain were, by reason of the negligence of defendants, and each of them, so defective and insufficient that said anchor chain, while the same was being hauled in by defendant, its officers, agents and employees as aforesaid, and stowed by plaintiff and another employee in the 'star board' chain locker on said steamship 'Lebec', suddenly reversed and violently proceeded in the opposite direction, and plaintiff was thereby violently thrown from his feet against some portion of said chain locker, and as a proximate result thereof plaintiff sustained great bodily injury," etc.

These allegations do not attempt to explain or set out the cause of the accident, or the specific manner in which it occurred, but are nothing more than general allegations of negligence. Vertson v. City of Los Angeles, 116 Cal. App. 114, 2 P.(2d) 411; Soto v. Spring Valley Water Co., 39 Cal. App. 187, 178 P. 305; Lippert v. Pacific Sugar Corporation, 33 Cal. App. 198, 164 P. 810; Burke v. Dillingham, 84 Cal. App. 736, 258 P. 627; Seney v. Pickwick Stages, 82 Cal. App. 226, 255 P. 279; Atkinson v. United Railroads of S. F., 71 Cal. App. 82, 234 P. 863.

In the case of Cochran v. Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. (D. C.) 31 F.(2d) 769, the court, in holding that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies in a case governed by the Federal Employers' Liability Act (45 USCA §§ 51–59) and Safety Appliance Act (45 USCA § 1 et seq.), said [page 771 of 31 F.(2d)]: "* * * The res doctrine is a rule of evidence. It is a rule which permits or requires an inference of negligence to be drawn from the fact of an accident plus the circumstances which characterize the accident. It is an evidential inference, which will carry a case to the jury, but is not binding upon the jury; indeed, the weight of the inference is oftentimes for the jury, and a court might not be justified in setting aside a contrary verdict, if the jury did not deem the inference sufficient to warrant a verdict in plaintiff's favor. * * *"

In the case of Michener v. Hutton, 203 Cal. 604, 265 P. 238, 59 A. L. R. 480, the Supreme Court said (page 607 of 203 Cal., 265 P. 238, 239, 59 A. L. R. 480): "It is elementary that the maxim, 'Res ipsa loquitur,' translated means simply, 'The thing, or affair, speaks for itself.' The courts of this state have long since adopted the rule as expressed in 1 Shearman and Redfield on Negligence (6th Ed.) p. 132, viz.: 'Where the thing is shown to be under the management of the defendant or his servants, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from want of proper care.' O'Connor v. Mennie, 169 Cal. 217, 223, 146 P. 674; Valente v. Sierra Ry. Co., 151 Cal. 534, 538, 91 P. 481; McCurrie v. Southern P. Co., 122 Cal. 558, 561, 55 P. 324; Judson v. Giant Powder Co., 107 Cal. 549, 556, 48 Am. St. Rep. 146, 29 L. R. A. 718, 40 P. 1020; Dixon v. Pluns, 98 Cal. 384, 388, 35 Am. St. Rep. 180, 20 L. R. A. 698, 33 P. 268. Of course, to justify the application of this doctrine in any case the circumstances of the accident must be such as, unexplained, afford reasonable evidence of want of care in a respect for which the defendant is liable in the particular action. * * * One who seeks to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been incurred by reason of another's negligence must establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the latter's negligence has occasioned him loss. However, where the facts are such as to give rise to an inference of negligence from the inherent nature and character of the act causing the injury, or, in other words, to give application to the principle of res ipsa loquitur, the burden of proceeding is shifted to the defendant and if he would escape an adverse finding he must adduce evidence to meet the plaintiff's prima facie case."

In the case before the court, the evidence does not disclose any fault on the part of respondent. He and his companion were in an almost completely inclosed compartment, and could observe nothing but the chain coming through the steel pipe from the winch above, the steam escaping from the cylinder of the engine operating the windlass, and the noise of the revolving windlass. They were unable to see or observe the manner in which the windlass was operated, or the manner in which the other members of the crew were performing their respective duties. The hoisting of the anchor was being done under the immediate direction and supervision of the captain, first mate, and boatswain. The machinery was under the immediate direction and control of the officers of the ship. The mooring place was determined by the pilot, and was under the control of appellant. The respondent could not know whether the pawl or forelock was in proper position, or whether the compressor brake was being watched as it should be. He was compelled to rely upon the proper operation of the machinery by his superiors and the agents of his employer. The hoisting of an anchor was one of the simplest and most common incidents involved in the operation of a ship operating in the trade in which the Lebec was being used. The port captain of the appellant, who piloted the Lebec to its mooring, testified that he had been present when the moorings were first laid; that he had been piloting the ship to that anchorage, mooring it and unmooring it for a period of two years.

[3] Objection has been made by defendant that the accident was due to the intervention of agencies over which it had no control; in other words, that the direct cause of the reversal of the anchor chain was the fouling of the anchor in a rocky reef, coupled with the heavy swell of the sea. The contention is not sound. The anchorage, as heretofore pointed out, was well known to the agents of the appellant, and in the absence of docking facilities, it was the duty of the appellant to be thoroughly informed as to the anchorage.

The heavy swell, which was on at the time of weighing anchor, had been on for many hours before the accident, and was nothing of extraordinary character. No extraordinary results followed it in any way. It was an ordinary, natural event, such as might have been contemplated and anticipated in an open roadstead like the anchorage at Davenport. It was the duty of the officers of the ship to take precautions against the results which might accompany the heaving in of the anchor under such conditions. There appears no intimation on their part that the swell which had been running created hazardous conditions, or that it imperiled the vessel in any way. The action of the sea and the effect of the heavy swell were not beyond the foresight of the ship's officers, although such conditions might have called for the exercise of more diligent care on their part.

[4] Negligence is opposed to diligence or carefulness, and is never absolute or intrinsic, but is always relative to some circumstance of time, place or person. Smith v. Whittier, 95 Cal. 279, 30 P. 529. There must be taken into consideration in determining the question of negligence those facts which were known to the person against whom complaint is made, or which, by use of proper diligence, would have been known to a prudent man in his place.

[5, 6] A seaman in the performance of tasks connected with his employment, does not assume the risk of negligent acts of those in charge of his ship, or their failure to take reasonable precautions. States S. S. Co. v. Berglann (C. C. A.) 41 F.(2d) 456. The relationship of master and seaman is intimate and peculiar. Masiulis v. United States, etc., Corp'n (C. C. A.) 31 F.(2d) 284, 285. He is bound to obey, and there is no assumption of risk, even though the danger may have been obvious to him. United States v. Boykin (C. C. A.) 49 F. (2d) 762; Panama R. Co. v. Johnson (C. C. A.) 289 F. 964; Wychgel v. States S. S. Co., 135 Or. 475, 296 P. 863.

"One who seeks to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been incurred by reason of another's negligence must establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the latter's negligence has occasioned him loss." Michener v. Hutton, supra. In the last-cited case the court said: "It is apparent from these latter authorities that it is for the jury, or the court when sitting without a jury, to determine from all the evidence in the case whether the defendant has successfully met and rebutted the prima facie case made out by the plaintiff in an action wherein the mere proof of the happening of the accident and the circumstances surrounding it give rise to an inference of negligence. That the inference of negligence created by the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur constitutes evidence which may not be disregarded by the jury, but is to be weighed and considered as against the evidence adduced by the defendant in rebuttal thereof, has been announced in numerous cases."

[7] Appellant has not offered any explanation of the reversal of the chain, or the failure of the windlass to hold the chain, or the failure of its employee to apply the brake in time to prevent the running out of the chain. The application of the brake, when made, so far as the evidence discloses, appears to have stopped the chain immediately. The jury had the duty of determining whether or not the explanation offered by the defendant was satisfactory, an in view of the conflict in the evidence, its conclusion cannot be disturbed. In the language of the court in Soto v. Spring Valley Water Co., supra (page 190 of 39 Cal. App., 178 P. 305, 306): "No reasonable inference seems possible, except that this apparatus, had it been properly operated, would have been safe, and that its improper operation was due to the negligence of somebody or to some defect in the machinery, undisclosed to and undiscoverable by the deceased, and known, if known to anybody, to the defendant's employees."

[8] Where the explanation given by the person charged with negligence leaves it doubtful as to whether or not the ultimate cause of injury is the negligence of the party charged, it is proper to instruct the jury as to res ipsa loquitur. Atkinson v. United Railroads of S. F., supra; Meyer v. Tobin (Cal. Sup.) 4 P. (2d) 542.

[9] The effect of the evidence offered by appellant as to the condition of the windlass, and the manner of the operation of its various parts in the hoisting of the anchor, was simply to create a conflict of evidence of which the jury was the final arbiter, and its conclusions cannot be disturbed.

Our conclusion is that the maxim res ipsa loquitur is applicable to the facts of this case, and that the trial court properly gave to the jury the two instructions of which complaint is made.

[10] There was received in evidence the deposition of the seaman Morris, who was with respondent in the chain locker at the time of the accident. Objection was made to testimony contained in such deposition as to conversations between a former first mate of the vessel and Morris, and between Morris and the man who was serving as chief mate at the time of the accident. Such testimony was as follows:

"* * * We were talking about one thing and another. I do not recall the other conversation. * * *

"Q. Prior to the happening of this accident to Lejeune, had you had any conversation with anyone on the ship about this winch? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. With whom? A. With the first mate, sir, a gentleman by the name of Tosh.

"Q. What was that conversation? * * * A. I mentioned something to Mr. Tosh about the way the winch worked and he said words to the effect, 'Yes, it was not in perfect order.'

"Q. Was that the only conversation you had with him? A. With that man, yes sir. And then with the mate relieving him, Mr. Friar, on there, a short while prior to the accident, I mentioned the same thing to him. * * *

"Q. What did the other mate say if anything when you made that remark to him? * * * A. He said, yes, or words to that effect, that he knew it was not working right."

While the statements of Morris might, under different conditions, have been admissible for the purpose of showing notice to the agents or officers of appellant, for which purpose it was ostensibly offered (Bundy v. Sierra Lumber Co., 149 Cal. 772, 87 P. 622; Diller v. Northern Cal. Power Co., 162 Cal. 531, 123 P. 359, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 908), the objection should have been sustained for the reason that the conversation as related by the witness was vague and indefinite, and no specification was made as to any particular defect in the machinery; furthermore, the respondent made no effort to show any defect in the windlass. We have read the entire record, however, and are of the opinion that the error is one of those contemplated by section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, and that it did not result in a miscarriage of justice. The testimony was not necessary for the establishment of his case on the part of respondent, as he had a right to stand on the proof of the happening of the accident and the circumstances surrounding it, from which the presumption of negligence arose.

[11] Appellant objected to the following instruction given at the request of the respondent: "If you believe from the evidence that at the time of the accident in question, plaintiff was suffering from any then existing physical impairment, then in assessing damages, in case your verdict is for the plaintiff, you are entitled to consider the effect of the injuries sustained in the accident, if any, in aggravation, if any, of the pre-existing condition, and award plaintiff damages in an amount compensating him for any additional physical or mental disability, if any, occasioned plaintiff by the accident in question."

The instruction would have been proper under other circumstances (Campbell v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 137 Cal. 565, 70 P. 624; White v. Red Mountain Fruit Co., 186 Cal. 335, 199 P. 318), but pre-existing injuries were not involved in the instant case. It is quite obvious from a reading of the record that the sole purpose of the appellant in asking the respondent about claims for alleged injuries, while working on other vessels, was to show that respondent was a person who was in the habit of making such claims, and also a malingerer. The giving of such an instruction may be ascribed to misapprehension of appellant's object in introducing the question, or to an excess of zeal on the part of respondent's counsel. The jury was properly instructed as to the measure of damages, and we are of the opinion that the error falls within the provisions of the Constitution hereinbefore cited.

We have examined all of the other instructions complained of by appellant and find no error which justifies a reversal of the judgment. The instructions fairly and fully submitted the issues involved to the jury, particularly upon the matter of burden of proof.

For the foregoing reasons stated, it is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 28, 1932. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 27, 1932.

1. New trial ⇐6.

Granting or refusing to grant motion for new trial is largely within discretion of trial court.

2. New trial ⇐72, 157.

In passing upon motion for new trial trial court must weigh evidence for both parties and, if satisfied that finding of jury is contrary to weight of evidence, may grant new trial.

3. New trial ⇐72.

Even where evidence is not conflicting and proof seems favorable to one litigant, question of probative force of testimony is within determination of trial court in proceeding on motion for new trial.

4. Appeal and error ⇐977(3).

Reviewing court cannot interfere with determination of trial court granting new trial unless manifest abuse of discretion appears, or evidence is insufficient as matter of law to support verdict for moving party.

5. New trial ⇐70.

Evidence respecting negligence of driver of automobile which struck boy attempting to cross street warranted order granting new trial after verdict for defendants (St. 1923, p. 553, § 113, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1436, § 30).

6. Negligence ⇐95(1).

KNIGHT, J.

Plaintiff, Allan Malloway, aged four years and ten months, while attempting to cross a street in Monterey, about 10 o'clock on the morning of the 4th of July, 1930, was struck and injured by an automobile owned by the defendants James Hughes and Mabel R. Hughes, and driven by their daughter, the defendant Betty Hughes, aged sixteen years, and through his guardian ad litem brought this action to recover damages for the injuries sustained. The action was tried before a jury, which rendered a verdict in favor of the defendants, and judgment was entered accordingly. Subsequently, on motion of plaintiff, the trial court granted a new trial on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, and from such order the defendants appeal.

The accident occurred at the intersection of High and Harriet streets, which are forty or forty-five feet wide. The former runs in a northerly and southerly direction, and the middle, traveled portion thereof is paved with rock and asphalt. Between the sidewalk and the curb there is a strip planted to grass. Harriet street is unpaved, and is without curbs or sidewalks in the vicinity of the intersection with High. The grade of neither street is level for any considerable distance from the intersection. The injured boy lived on the southeast corner of the intersection, and the house directly opposite, on the southwest corner, was occupied by a Mrs. Wishart. The automobile which Betty Hughes was driving, a Packard, was proceeding northerly along High street, and was approaching the intersection when the boy attempted to cross the street. He started from the easterly curb of High street in front of his home to cross to the westerly side of High street to the curb in front of the Wishart house, where some other children were playing; and the impact occurred on High street at or near the produced southerly intersection curb line of Harriet street.

Besides Betty Hughes, there were two other witnesses to the accident, Mrs. Perrin and a boy named Turner, twelve years old. Mrs. Perrin was riding in an automobile driven by her husband, traveling southerly on High street just northerly of its intersection with Harriet; and the Turner boy was standing on the sidewalk on Harriet street just easterly of the intersection. Betty Hughes testified that she first saw the Malloway boy about a half block ahead (approximately sixty feet), at which time he was walking slowly from his house toward the easterly curb line of High street, and was about twenty feet in from the curb; that about the same time she observed some children on the opposite side of the street. At that time, so she testified, she was traveling between eighteen and twenty miles an hour; that she sounded the automobile horn, and took her foot off the gas accelerator; that when she sounded the horn the Malloway boy stood still, and she continued on; that when she reached a point about opposite the boy, at which time she was traveling about twelve miles an hour, the boy darted from the curb toward the automobile; that she applied the brakes immediately and swerved the car sharply to the left, but the boy continued to run slightly ahead of and parallel with the right front end of her automobile; that she felt "a very slight thud" and at the same time looked up High street and saw an automobile (which proved to be the Perrin car) approaching the intersection in the opposite direction on High street. Continuing, she testified: "I knew I was either endangering myself or the car coming, and I think I applied the gas possibly, I am not certain, to get out of their way and kept turning into Harriet street." Stating further in this respect, "My natural instinct was to get out of the way of the oncoming car, because there would be another smash up." At any rate, the evidence shows that her automobile continued on diagonally over the intersection and across the pathway of the Perrin car, and stopped against the curb on the northwest corner of the intersection. In making the turn westerly down Harriet street, the rear end of the automobile swerved or skidded to the right against the curb, splintering some of the spokes in the rear right wheel. The evidence further shows that the boy was struck by the right end of the front bumper and was thrown several feet toward the middle of Harriet street, where it intersects the produced easterly curb line of High street, and that the main injuries sustained were a fractured clavicle, a fractured femur, both on the left side, and a linear skull fracture.

The testimony of Mrs. Perrin was substantially the same as that given by Betty Hughes, except that she states that the boy started to run across the street from the curb at the very corner of the intersection, and not several feet south of the corner; and she stated also that she saw some of the children run across the street just before the Malloway boy attempted to cross. In this regard she stated that she first saw the Hughes car when it was about a half block southerly of the intersection, at which time it was traveling between fifteen and twenty miles an hour, and at the same time she observed the children playing in front of the Malloway house on the High street side and that being conscious of the approaching automobile she watched the children because her own children were approximately the same age. Continuing, she stated that after some of the children had "darted" across the street the Malloway boy, who had a toy gun in his hand, turned very quickly and went back away from the curb toward his house. "The next thing that happened," she said, as her testimony is given in narrative form in the bill of exceptions, "was that he apparently changed his mind and dashed out to the curb, and at that time Betty's car was there right in front of the house when Allan Malloway darted out. The Hughes car I would say at that time was about half a car length toward the corner from the center of the house. Then just as quick as a flash the child turned around from the front of the house and went out and stepped off the curb, and Miss Hughes was driving close to the curb and he stepped right in front of the car, and Miss Hughes was very quick with the wheel, and she pulled the car around to the left and the child apparently followed the front of the car around. She was driving along this way and the child continued to follow the front of the car this way, and then he was hit—he was hit on this part of the street, and Miss Hughes turned to the left constantly and the child constantly being to the right of the car—to the right of the front bumper. I saw the child hit. I could not say that I saw the child actually run into the car but that was what happened. The child ran into the Hughes car. He ran into the right of the front bumper at that time. I would say that Betty Hughes' car was going about four or five miles an hour." And again on cross-examination she stated: "The first impression I got was he was going across with the children. Instead of that he ran back over toward the house, as quick as a flash he ran from the house to the street. He was darting all the time. He was in movement. Children run fast. He was traveling as fast as the automobile. I would say he was. The automobile was going slowly. Yes, he ran out in the street ahead of the automobile, right in front of it. In the direction the automobile was going. She turned her car. I stated he was running as fast as the automobile. He was naturally ahead of the automobile. He was, he was right—I would say that he stepped in front of the automobile and she pulled the car away. He was running when he came off the curb and he was ahead of the automobile. He hesitated for just an instant after he got off the curbing. * * * He was even with the front bumper, and I think the children were over here and I think he thought he could go around the front of the car. He was trying to beat it and get around it and get to the other side of the street. He ran out past the middle of Harriet Street, anyway, to get in front of this automobile. The automobile was turning to the left constantly. It was not going faster than the boy. It was creeping * * * and kept going slower and slower."

The following is the substance of the testimony given by the Turner boy: "I saw Allan Malloway before he was hit by the automobile. He was then right behind the chalkrock wall. Then he went across the street to Wishart's. He started from the corner of the curb near the corner where the two streets join. At that time I was standing in the street just going by Harriet Street. Allan was walking slow in a straight line across the street. He didn't get quite to the middle of the street. * * * I was watching him all the time, that he was going over across the street. I did not hear an automobile horn at the time. I heard the brakes before he was hit. I then saw the automobile. I have ridden in an automobile and watched the speedometer. I was in an automobile this morning when it was driven fifteen miles, twenty miles, thirty and forty miles an hour. I think the Packard automobile at the time it struck Allan Malloway was going about thirty-five miles. The car struck him on the side. That is on his side. The side of the bumper hit him. He was rolled over on the pavement." Afterwards, as a witness for defendants, he admitted having said immediately after the collision that "Betty was not going fast * * * not going very fast," meaning, so he said, that about fifty miles an hour would be fast.

A traffic officer arrived at the scene of the accident about forty minutes after it happened, and he observed the position of the Hughes car, with the right rear wheel against the curb and one or two or three pieces of split or broken spokes. He also saw skid marks leading up to the Hughes car. His testimony in this regard as it is set forth in narrative form in the record was as follows: "The first skid marks—this is the line of the curb extending across High Street, and there were two distinct skid marks starting about twenty-two feet from the line of this Harriet Street curb, back up and about twelve feet up from the High Street curb—two distinct skid marks. These skid marks extended down north on High Street, and at a point here, about even with the Harriet Street curb line, the left hand skid mark left just a few jump marks and just at the point where the car was sitting, was a small heavy skid mark for a short distance. The right hand skid mark was heavy all the way, over seventy-two feet. This skid mark was heavy clear over to this point. That was a distance of about seventy-two feet. It was measured by me. This skid mark here was twenty-two feet at this point and then the others were sort of jump marks—they didn't keep solid all the way through, until it got to the curb. Then there was twelve or fifteen feet of heavy skid marks, from the left hand wheel." He further testified that a Packard automobile (similar to the Hughes car) having two-wheel brakes, in good condition, running at fifteen miles an hour, could be stopped "in about thirty to thirty-five feet"; and that running at twenty miles an hour it would require forty to forty-five feet to bring it to a stop.

Mrs. Malloway and Mrs. Wishart were in their respective homes at the time the accident happened and did not see it, but they saw the boy immediately before it happened. They were looking through the windows of their houses and saw the boy as he stepped from the curb and was about to cross the street. They stated that at that time they heard no automobile approaching. They turned and walked away from the windows, and just a few seconds afterwards they heard the screech of brakes and Mrs. Wishart heard the automobile strike the curb. She went back to the window and the boy was then lying in the street. Mrs. Malloway was notified of the accident immediately after it happened. Testimony was introduced on the part of defendants to show that on an unpaved road, or where there is dust or gravel on a paved road, such as here, it requires more distance to stop an automobile after the brakes are applied than on a clean paved road. The above is substantially all of the evidence bearing upon the question of negligence.

[1-4] It is apparent from the foregoing that if the appeal herein were one taken from the judgment entered on the verdict in favor of defendants, it would be held that the evidence narrated would be legally sufficient to sustain such judgment. But that is not the situation. We are here dealing with an appeal from the order of the trial judge granting a new trial, and therefore on such an appeal in reviewing the evidence we are governed by an entirely different rule. As said in Moss v. Stubbs, 111 Cal. App. 359, 295 P. 572, 296 P. 86, the well-settled rule is that the matter of granting or refusal to grant a motion for a new trial is largely within the discretion of the trial court (Work v. Whittington, 61 Cal. App. 302, 214 P. 474); that in passing upon such motion the trial court is not bound by the rule of conflicting evidence as is the appellate tribunal (Huckaby v. Northam, 68 Cal. App. 83, 228 P. 717; Smith v. Royer, 181 Cal. 165, 183 P. 660); but must weigh and consider the evidence for both parties and determine for itself the just conclusion to be drawn from it (Green v. Soule, 145 Cal. 96, 78 P. 337; Rudin v. Luman, 53 Cal. App. 212, 199 P. 874); and if it is satisfied that the finding of the jury is contrary to the weight of the evidence it may grant a new trial. Gordon v. Roberts, 162 Cal. 506, 123 P. 288. Even where the evidence is not conflicting and all the proof seems to be favorable to one or the other of the parties litigant, the question of the probative force or the evidentiary value of the testimony is nevertheless within the determination of the trial court in a proceeding on motion for a new trial. Otten v. Spreckels, 24 Cal. App. 251, 141 P. 224; Roberts v. Southern Pac. Co., 54 Cal. App. 315, 201 P. 958. Therefore under the law as thus declared it is beyond the power of the reviewing court to interfere with the determination of the trial court unless a manifest abuse of discretion appears (Campanella v. Campanella, 204 Cal. 515, 269 P. 433; Buck v. Borchers, 203 Cal. 210, 263 P. 226), or there is no substantial conflict in the testimony on material issues and the evidence as a whole is insufficient as a matter of law to support a verdict in favor of the moving party. Springer v. Pacific Fruit Exchange, 92 Cal. App. 732, 268 P. 951; Wendling, etc., Co. v. Glenwood, etc., Co., 153 Cal. 411, 95 P. 1029; Empire Investment Co. v. Mort, 169 Cal. 732, 147 P. 960; Harvey v. Machtig, 73 Cal. App. 667, 239 P. 78.

The California Vehicle Act (section 113, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1436, § 30), as it stood at the time this accident happened, besides fixing a speed limitation of twenty miles an hour for driving automobiles in a residential district, provided that such vehicles should be driven at a careful and prudent speed not greater than is reasonable and proper, having due regard to the traffic, surface and width of the highway, and at such speed as would not endanger the life, limb or property of any person; and in holding that the evidence in this case did not justify the implied finding of the jury that the Hughes automobile was not negligently operated, the trial court must necessarily have refused to accept the testimony given by Betty Hughes and Mrs. Perrin as to the manner in which the accident happened, and based its conclusion that the automobile was negligently operated upon the admission of Betty Hughes that she saw the children some sixty feet away playing near the street, and upon the physical conditions found to exist after the accident, the screeching of the brakes and the testimony given by the Turner boy to the effect that the Malloway boy "was walking slow in a straight line across the street" when he was struck and that at that time the Hughes car was traveling about thirty-five miles an hour.

And in view of the broad powers vested in the trial judge on motion for new trial in determining the weight that shall be given to the evidence, we are not prepared to hold as a matter of law that the inference drawn by the trial court is wholly unsupported by the facts above mentioned.

[5] Appellants point out that according to the testimony given by Betty Hughes, as soon as she saw the children she sounded her horn and reduced her speed to less than eighteen miles an hour by taking her foot off the gas accelerator; and that she explained the marks in the street by saying that after the boy darted from the sidewalk into the automobile and she felt the slight thud she speeded up to avoid colliding with the oncoming Perrin car. Furthermore, as appellants point out, there are certain circumstances tending to show weakness in the testimony given by the Turner boy as to the speed of the Hughes car. In this regard it would appear from the map which was used at the trial that he was unable to see the movement of the Hughes car until almost immediately before the impact at the corner because according to his testimony he had just emerged from "behind the Malloway house from the rear" and was going toward Harriet street at the time the accident occurred, and it would seem, therefore, that not only did the Malloway house obstruct part of his view of High street, south of Harriet, but, as he testified, there was also a chalkrock wall "a little higher than" he was in front of the Malloway house on Harriet street, extending toward but not up to High street. Moreover, according to the record, his estimate of the speed the Hughes car was traveling was based upon the fact that on the morning of the trial, which took place some seven months after the accident, he was driven in an automobile at a speed of twenty, thirty, and forty miles an hour and he watched the speedometer. Whether or not he was driven along High street over the same course taken by Betty Hughes on the day of the accident, does not appear. However, as already shown, under the decisions above cited, on motion for new trial the matter of the credibility of the witnesses, the weight and the probative force that shall be given to their testimony, and the question of the evidentiary value of physical facts, are all within the determination of the trial court; and therefore in the present case we are not at liberty to interfere therewith on appeal.

[6] Appellants make the further point that contributory negligence was established as a matter of law. The point is based mainly upon the admitted fact that Mrs. Malloway saw the child playing in High street shortly before the accident and made no effort to get him off the street; and appellants argue therefrom that it was the height of contributory negligence on the part of the mother to permit her infant to play in a public street unattended on the morning of the 4th of July, when a parade was about to take place in the city and when she must have known of the increased dangers from excitement and traffic. It appears to be definitely settled in this state now, however, that where, as here, the action is brought by the infant in his own right for injuries sustained by him, and is not one filed by the parents to recover damages suffered by them as a result of their child's injuries, the negligence of the parents cannot be imputed to the child. Zarzana v. Neve Drug Co., 180 Cal. 32, 179 P. 203, 15 A. L. R. 401; Caraveo v. Pickwick Stages System, 113 Cal. App. 443, 298 P. 516. Therefore we find no merit in appellants' point.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

SCOVEL, Justice pro tem.

The complaint in this action sets up a promissory note executed by defendants to plaintiff alleging nonpayment of the same and praying for judgment thereon. Defendants' answer admitted liability on the note. Defendants filed a cross-complaint upon a quantum meruit for services rendered to the plaintiff and the Yosemite Portland Cement Company. The Yosemite Portland Cement Company was made a party to the action upon the filing of the cross-complaint and both cross-defendants filed an answer thereto in the nature of a general denial. At the trial of the matter, it was stipulated that judgment might be entered in favor of plaintiff in an agreed amount upon the complaint, the trial proceeding upon the cross-complaint.

It appears from the transcript that the plaintiff was a director and the treasurer of the Yosemite Portland Cement Company, a corporation. A conversation in regard to the sale of cement by the corporation was had between plaintiff and defendant, Alfred C. Root. According to plaintiff, the conversation merely related to business being done by the company and its prospects for future sales. He denied ever having made an agreement with defendant employing him to make sales of cement.

This defendant, Alfred C. Root, was called as a witness, and testified that in the conversation plaintiff employed him for the purpose of selling cement to the Valley Paving Company, and agreed the company would pay him ten cents per sack for all sacks of cement he might sell. This testimony was objected to on the ground that no proper foundation had been laid, in that it had not been shown that plaintiff was authorized to make such an employment contract on behalf of the corporation. A ruling was reserved, but at the close of the trial, upon motion of plaintiff, the evidence was stricken from the record.

J. C. Caldwell, president of the Valley Paving Company, testified that his company purchased the sacks of cement after solicitation by defendant, Alfred C. Root, and that, in a conversation with plaintiff Bourne regarding a discount to be allowed, Bourne stated the discount would be paid through defendant Alfred C. Root. A similar objection and motion to strike was made to this testimony, and at the close of the trial it also was stricken from the record. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff Bourne on the complaint in accordance with the stipulation and in favor of both cross-defendants on the cross-complaint. From the whole of this judgment cross-complainants appeal. No contention is made that that portion of the judgment in favor of plaintiff on the complaint is erroneous, from which it follows that that portion of the judgment must be affirmed.

[1, 2] Appellants' sole contention on their appeal from that portion of the judgment in favor of cross-defendants on the cross-complaint is that the court erred in striking from the record the testimony above set forth. As to cross-defendant Yosemite Portland Cement Company, they concede that no direct testimony showing authority in respondent Bourne sufficient to authorize the making of the agreement for employment was introduced, and that he had no such authority merely by reason of his position as director and treasurer of the company. See 6A Cal. Jur. 1164. Appellants contend, however, that the corporation having accepted the fruits of the contract through the sale of the cement thereby ratified the action of its agent and is bound thereby. Respondents concede the general rule that, where a principal accepts the benefits of an unauthorized contract made by its agent, it is bound by the contract but contend the rule only applies where it is shown that the principal had full knowledge of the acts which it is claimed were ratified; that, since it was not shown that the respondent corporation had any knowledge of the agreement to pay a commission, it cannot be held for such commission merely because it thereafter accepted the sales made thereunder, and that the evidence as to the terms of the contract providing for a commission was therefore properly stricken from the record.

We are of the opinion that the evidence was properly stricken from the record as to cross-defendant Yosemite Portland Cement Company. Civ. Code, § 1589, provides that the acceptance of the benefits of a transaction is equivalent to a consent to all the obligations arising therefrom so far as the facts are known or ought to be known to the person accepting.

In 14a Corpus Juris, 387–390, the rule that acceptance of the benefits of an unauthorized act constitutes a ratification is limited to such acceptance by the corporation with knowledge of the facts. The same principle is supported in 21 R. C. L. 928; 7 A. L. R. 1446. See, also, Huffman v. Knapp, 30 Cal. App. 759, 159 P. 456; Extension Gold Mining & Milling Company v. Skinner, 28 Colo. 237, 64 P. 198.

The record fails to show any knowledge whatsoever upon the part of the corporation as to the purported agreement to pay cross-complainant a commission other than the knowledge of cross-defendant Bourne.

[3] Knowledge of an agent, however, is not knowledge of the principal as to matters outside the scope of the agent's authority. 1 Cal. Jur. 849.

[4] A corporation not being chargeable with the knowledge of an officer or agent who has no authority to bind the corporation in the matter is not chargeable with the knowledge of the wrongdoing officer or agent. Wickersham Banking Company v. Nicholas, 2 Cal. App. 18, 82 P. 1124; 14a Cor. Jur. 375.

It follows that the evidence was properly stricken as to cross-defendant Yosemite Portland Cement Company.

[5] It seems elementary, however, that, in so far as the liability of respondent Bourne is concerned, the evidence stricken was admissible, the conversation being in the nature of admissions on his part.

[6] He contends, however, that in any event the judgment in his favor must stand, since in his testimony he denied having made any employment agreement with defendant Alfred C. Root, and that therefore the judgment was based on conflicting testimony and should not be disturbed on appeal. All of such conflicting testimony having been stricken from the record, there was at the time of judgment no conflict. We cannot on appeal assume that the court would have found in favor of plaintiff had the contradictory evidence not been stricken.

The judgment on the complaint is affirmed. That portion of the judgment in favor of the cross-defendant Yosemite Portland Cement Company upon the cross-complaint is affirmed. That portion of the judgment in favor of the cross-defendant Murray Bourne upon the cross-complaint is reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Leoluca Patello and Leonarda Florio were convicted of the crime of arson and the crime of burning insured property, and they appeal.

Judgment affirmed as to defendant Patello, and appeal of defendant Florio dismissed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John D. Richer, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Buron Fitts, Dist. Atty., and Hugh McIsaac, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J.

Defendants appeal from a judgment of conviction of the crime of arson and the crime of burning insured property.

The only point raised by them on their appeal is that the evidence adduced on the trial of the action was insufficient to sustain the judgment.

A consideration of the record herein discloses the following incriminatory circumstances, to wit: The defendants sustain the relation one toward the other of brother and sister. Together they lived as the sole occupants of a six-room, one-story building, of which, to the extent that it was being purchased on a contract of sale by the defendant Patello, and that at the time of the partial burning of the same he owed about $1,500 on the purchase price thereof, of which sum he was delinquent in approximately the amount of $300, defendant Patello was the owner. The "sound" value of the building at the time it was burned was $1,858, and its "replacement" value was $2,445; but, as appears from the evidence, the defendant carried an insurance policy on the building in the sum of $3,000. Defendant Florio was the owner of the furniture stored in the said building, on which, although its "sound" value was but $594.65, she carried an insurance policy in the sum of $1,500. At the time of the fire she was in poor health. She had no income, and her cousin and her brother had been advancing money to her for the purpose of paying doctor's bills which she had contracted. The evidence shows that on the day on which the fire occurred defendant Patello left the house in question at about 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon; and that the defendant Florio left the premises at about 7 o'clock p. m. of the same day. Defendant Patello was engaged in the fruit business, and was occupied in the conduct thereof from 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon until 11:30 o'clock on that night, at about which time he was arrested. On leaving her home, defendant Florio went to the house of a neighbor, which was directly across the street from the place of business of her brother Patello, at which former place she remained during the whole of the night on which the fire occurred. It appears that at her brother's place of business she had left word for him to call for her at the place at which she was visiting as soon as he completed his business transactions for the day or the night; but that, on his failure to call for her, defendant Florio spent the night with the neighbor as aforesaid. When arrested, defendant Patello stated in substance that "he absolutely did not know where she (his sister) could be reached."

The fire in the home of the defendants was discovered at approximately five minutes after 9 o'clock p. m. On arriving at the house, the firemen found the windows closed, the shades drawn, and the front and the rear doors of the house locked. On breaking into the house, fire was discovered in each of three different rooms thereof. The door leading from the kitchen to the living room was locked on the living room side, and each of such rooms was on fire. Hose was played on the fire, and it "flashed up." An odor of kerosene was present. In the kitchen a pasteboard carton about two-thirds full of a white substance with an odor similar to that of kerosene or coal oil was found, and connected with said carton was a streamer of cotton-batting which led "up over a chair and down on the floor." The appearance indicated that a quantity of oil, apparently the draining from a crank case of an automobile, had been poured on the floor. The bathroom floor was covered with oil with the odor of a petroleum product similar to crank-case drippings. Defendant Florio denied that there ever had been kept in the house any gasoline, coal oil, or cleaning fluids of the type that was found therein. In substance, defendant Patello stated that he did not know whether he had any insurance on the property; "* * * that he believed the insurance policy had lapsed and * * * didn't remember whether he had a renewal or not." As to the furniture in the house, defendant Florio stated that "she didn't recall whether she had it insured, or not."

With reference to the effect of circumstantial evidence of the guilt of a person accused of the commission of a criminal offense, the broad rule has been generally announced that to justify a verdict of guilty such evidence "must be not only consistent with the hypothesis of guilt, but inconsistent with any other rational hypothesis. The deduction to be drawn from these circumstances is, ordinarily, one for the jury, but where * * * every circumstance relied on as incriminating is equally compatible with innocence, there is a failure of proof necessary to sustain a conviction, and the question presented is one of law for the court. * * *" People v. Staples, 149 Cal. 405, 425, 86 P. 886, 894.

In substance, the appellants contend that none of the evidence adduced against them, or either of them, nor all of the several items of such evidence combined, neither is nor was inconsistent nor incompatible with their innocence.

[1-5] Taken literally and in its strict construction, it may not be denied that, if applied to the facts of the instant case, either piece by piece, or as an entirety, the principle of law announced in the Staples Case, supra, would indicate that purely from a legal standpoint the evidence was "compatible with innocence" of the accused. But it is common knowledge that in practically every criminal prosecution that is dependent for its success upon circumstantial evidence each fact adduced is not only susceptible of a "rational hypothesis" of innocence of the accused, but also is possibly as compatible with his innocence as it is with his guilt. As a homely illustration, let it be supposed that a negro is being prosecuted for stealing watermelons from a patch which lies across the road from a cemetery. The evidence shows that he was seen on the road just before he reached the watermelon patch, at which time he had no watermelons in his possession, but that, after he had passed the watermelon patch, he was seen running very rapidly, with a stolen watermelon under each arm. A "rational hypothesis * * * equally compatible with the innocence" of the negro might be that he found the watermelons in the road, and that he was running because he was afraid of ghosts. But in reliance upon the principle of law announced in the Staples Case, as applied to such facts, would the trial court be justified or authorized to declare that there was "a failure of proof necessary to sustain a conviction"? It is manifest that, if the answer must be in the affirmative, then must fail a very large majority of the prosecutions for the perpetration of crimes which are secretly committed, wherein the proof not only as to the corpus delicti, but as well of the criminal participation therein of the accused, must be presented, not by eyewitnesses, or by direct evidence of their commission, but perforce by facts which in their nature are wholly circumstantial. But as a legal proposition it is unthinkable that the language employed by the court in the Staples Case, to which attention has been directed, was ever intended by its author, or by the court as a whole, to have placed upon it such a construction as hereinbefore has been indicated. Rather was it intended and expected that, where the evidence as presented by relevant circumstances was reasonably inferentially capable of producing to a moral certainty a conclusion of guilt of the accused, the mere fact that, by assuming some fanciful position, or by adopting as true and correct some fantastic or absurd hypothesis favorable to the accused, his innocence might be indicated, presented no hard and fast or legally compelling situation which demanded an acquittal. Nor on appeal from a judgment of conviction is it to be understood from the mere fact that, even though it may appear to the appellate tribunal that, from its view of the cold record, all the incriminating circumstances are compatible with the innocence of the accused, and as a consequence thereof that a verdict of acquittal would have been amply justified, the evidence is sufficient in legal contemplation to require or to exact from the court an order of reversal of the judgment. The right to draw proper inferences from the evidence submitted is the function of the jury; and, as long as its conclusion does no violence to reason, an appellate court is not permitted to substitute its finding of the ultimate fact for that reached by the constitutional as well as the statutory arbiter thereof. On the ground here urged by the appellants an interference by the appellate court with a verdict of guilt of the accused is warranted only when the evidence, rightly considered, unmistakably leads to an inference of innocence; or, on the other hand, that the unquestioned and unquestionable evidence adduced on behalf of the defendant so largely preponderates in favor of the innocence of the accused, over that presented by the prosecution, that it clearly appears that the verdict was not the result of that deliberate and judicial action on the part of the jury which the administration of justice demands, but rather was induced by that sinister influence legally denominated as passion and prejudice.

In the case of People v. Muhly, 15 Cal. App. 416, 419, 114 P. 1017, 1018, where a situation similar to that here under consideration was before the appellate court, and in which the language employed by the court in the case of People v. Staples, 149 Cal. 405, 425, 86 P. 886, was construed, in part it was said: "We do not understand that case to hold that, where the circumstances are such as to reasonably justify the inference of guilt, the case will be taken from the jury because an inference of innocence might also reasonably have been drawn. Between these two inferences the jury must choose, and it is only where the evidence obviously does not warrant the inference of guilt that the court will interfere. This must be so, or the weight of the circumstantial evidence, and the inferences to be drawn from it in almost every case, must finally be determined by the appellate court, thus making the court the arbiter of both law and fact. In our judgment a verdict of a jury, and the judgment of conviction based upon circumstantial evidence, come to us as any other verdict and judgment, clothed with like presumption of support; and, unless we can say that the inference of guilt drawn from the evidence was wholly unwarranted, we cannot interfere."

Again, in People v. Martinez, 20 Cal. App. 343, 344, 128 P. 952, 953, wherein an analogous principle of law was the subject of discussion, the conclusion by the appellate court, as indicated by the following quotation, was identical with that reached in the case last cited, to wit: "Where the circumstances are such as to reasonably justify an inference of guilt, as found by the jury, the fact that an inference of innocence might likewise be reasonably drawn therefrom does not present a question of law for review by an appellate court any more than does a verdict based upon direct conflicting evidence. In neither case will the verdict be disturbed. We are not unmindful that the Supreme Court in People v. Staples, 149 Cal. 405, 86 P. 886, employs language seemingly inconsistent with this view, and upon which appellant claims that, if upon review this court is of the opinion that the circumstances are reasonably compatible with defendant's innocence, then, notwithstanding the fact that they reasonably justify the inference of guilt drawn therefrom by the jury, he is entitled to a reversal of the judgment. * * * In this case the circumstances established reasonably justified the conclusion of the jury as expressed in their verdict, and, even though this court were of the opinion that such circumstances might be reasonably reconciled with the innocence of defendant, such fact does not warrant interference with the determination of the jury."

Likewise in People v. Mitsunaga, 91 Cal. App. 298, 301, 266 P. 1020.

Bearing upon the question here at issue is the case of People v. Stine, 110 Cal. App. 156, 293 P. 907, 910. Among the authorities there cited is that of People v. Willard, 150 Cal. 543, 553, 89 P. 124. It is there announced: "This court cannot disturb a verdict unless there is no evidence to support it, or where the evidence relied on by the prosecution is apparently so improbable or false as to be incredible, or where it so clearly and unquestionably preponderates against the verdict as to convince this court that its return was the result of passion or prejudice on the part of the jury."

And so in the case of People v. Wong Chong Suey, 110 Cal. 117, 42 P. 420, 421, wherein it is said that the finding of the jury will not be disturbed "unless the evidence preponderates so greatly against the verdict as to make it manifest that the verdict is the result of passion or prejudice."

[6] Reverting to the undisputed facts which are disclosed by the evidence adduced on the trial of the action and as hereinbefore set forth, it becomes plain that they fairly warranted the inference of guilt of the defendants which was expressed by the judgment. People v. Scott, 13 Cal. App. 301, 109 P. 498; People v. Stern, 94 Cal. App. 85, 270 P. 706.

The incriminating circumstances were such that on consideration thereof, together with the judgment, not even the suggestion of passion or prejudice on the part of the trial court may rightly be indulged.

[7] With particular reference to the appeal of defendant Florio, the record discloses the fact that, following the rendition of the judgment, each of the defendants made application for probation. In that connection, the order of the trial court was "that proceedings as to defendant Leonarda Florio be suspended and said defendant granted probation for a period of three years," etc. Thereupon she appealed "from the judgment and sentence. * * *"

Section 1237 of the Penal Code provides that an appeal may be taken by a defendant "from a final judgment of conviction; * * * from any order made after judgment, affecting the substantial rights of the party."

Since it appears that no "final judgment of conviction" had been rendered, it follows that by statutory provision defendant Florio had no right of appeal. People v. Hartman, 23 Cal. App. 72, 74, 137 P. 611; People v. De Voe (Cal. App.) 11 P.(2d) 26; United States v. Lecato (C. C. A.) 29 F.(2d) 694, 695, where in support of the rule many authorities are cited.

It is ordered that as to defendant Patello the judgment be and it is affirmed. It is further ordered that as to defendant Florio her appeal herein be and it is dismissed.

PARKER v. BOARD OF DENTAL EXAMINERS OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA et al.

S. F. 14394.

Supreme Court of California.

Sept. 1, 1932.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 28, 1932.

1. Physicians and surgeons ⇐1.

Legislature could regulate practice of dentistry and limit right to practice to natural persons (Deering's Gen. Laws 1931, Act 2048, §§ 11–13).

2. Physicians and surgeons ⇐6(2).

Corporation or unlicensed person cannot manage or control so-called "business side" of practice of dentistry, since practice of dentistry is not divisible into departments (Deering's Gen. Laws 1931, Act 2048, §§ 11–13).

3. Physicians and surgeons ⇐11(3).

Finding of board of dental examiners that dentist aided and abetted unlicensed persons to practice dentistry held supported (Deering's Gen. Laws 1931, Act 2048, §§ 11–13, 15).

4. Physicians and surgeons ⇐11(3).

Finding of board of dental examiners that dentist unlawfully used fictitious name in conducting and engaging in practice of dentistry held supported (Deering's Gen. Laws 1931, Act 2048, §§ 11–13, 15).

5. Physicians and surgeons ⇐11(2).

Acts of dentist in aiding unlicensed person to practice dentistry and in unlawfully using fictitious name in practicing dentistry constituted "unprofessional conduct" within statute authorizing revocation or suspension of dentist's license (Deering's Gen. Laws 1931, Act 2048, §§ 11–13).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Unprofessional Conduct," see Words and Phrases.]

6. Statutes ⇐173.

Delayed action by those charged with execution of laws may be considered as reason for mitigation of punishment, but cannot annul law.

⇐For other cases see same topic and KEY NUMBER in all Key Number Digests and Indexes

7. Evidence ⇐154.

Testimony given by witnesses under promise of immunity made in reliance on repealed statute could be considered against dentist seeking to vacate order suspending him from practicing dentistry (Pen. Code, § 1324 [repealed by St. 1917, p. 291]).

Testimony could be considered since the dentist was not in a position to raise objection that testimony was obtained through mistaken belief that Pen. Code § 1324 was a subsisting act.

8. Evidence ⇐154.

Competency of evidence does not depend on means by which it is brought into court.

9. Evidence ⇐154.

Courts on mere question of admissibility of evidence will not take cognizance of mode of production unless defendant has been compelled to produce it.

10. Physicians and surgeons ⇐11(3).

Order of board of dental examiners suspending dentist for five years could not be modified by court on ground of excessiveness (Deering's Gen. Laws 1931, Act 2048, §§ 11–13, 15).

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Harry Keyser, of Boise, Idaho, and John C. Stevenson, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Jesse W. Carter, of Redding, and Annette Abbott Adams, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J.

This appeal is taken from a judgment entered by the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco in a certiorari proceeding wherein said superior court affirmed the order or judgment rendered by the board of dental examiners of this state on December 7, 1929, upon original proceedings taken and had by said board of dental examiners, suspending the license of said petitioner, Painless Parker, theretofore issued to him by said board, for a period of five years, commencing January 2, 1930. The matter is before us on an order transferring the cause to this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal, reversing the judgment of said superior court. 1 P.(2d) 501.

The provisions of the act regulating the practice of dentistry (Deering's Gen. Laws of California, 1931, title 157, Act 2048) which bear upon the questions presented are found in section 11 of said act, and are as follows: "Any person shall be understood to be practicing dentistry within the meaning of this act who shall (1) by card, circular, pamphlet, newspaper, or in any other way advertise himself as a dentist, or (2) who shall, for a fee, salary or reward, paid directly or indirectly either to himself or to some other person, perform an operation of any kind, or treat diseases or lesions of the human teeth or jaws, or correct malimposed positions thereof, or (3) in any way indicate that he will perform by himself or his agents or servants any operations upon the human teeth or jaws, or (4) make an examination of, with the intent to perform or cause to be performed any operation on the human teeth or jaws, or (5) who manages or conducts as manager, proprietor, conductor, lessor, or otherwise a place where dental operations are performed; but nothing in this act contained shall prohibit bona fide students of dentistry or dental hygienists from operating in the clinical departments of the laboratory of a reputable dental college, or an unlicensed person from performing merely mechanical work upon inert matter in a dental laboratory or a licensed physician from practicing oral surgery."

One of the penalties prescribed for the commission of the acts charged against the petitioner and appellant herein is the revocation or suspension of his license to practice dentistry in this state. Section 12 enumerates certain violations of the act which are punishable as misdemeanors, and certain other violations which are punishable either as misdemeanors or as felonies. It provides as follows: "Any person who * * * shall under any false, assumed or fictitious name, either as an individual, firm, corporation or otherwise or any name other than the name under which he is licensed, practice, advertise or in any other manner indicate that he is practicing or will practice dentistry, shall for the first offense be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punishable by a fine of not less than two hundred fifty dollars or more than one thousand five hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail for not to exceed six months, or both, and for the second or a subsequent offense shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than one thousand dollars nor more than three thousand dollars, or by imprisonment in the state prison for a term of not less than one year nor more than three years, or by both such fine and imprisonment. Nothing in this section shall be held to prohibit the conferring of degrees and the bestowing of diplomas by reputable dental colleges of this state which have been approved by the board of dental examiners of California."

Section 13 enumerates several grounds, any one of which is deemed sufficient cause for the revocation or suspension of a dentist's license. In the list the following appear: The rendition of a judgment by a court of competent jurisdiction finding him grossly unskillful or negligent in his practice; unprofessional conduct or gross ignorance or inefficiency in his profession. "Unprofessional conduct" is defined to consist of the employment of cappers or steerers to obtain business; aiding or abetting any unlicensed person to practice dentistry unlawfully; "the use of any false, assumed or fictitious name, either as an individual, firm, corporation or otherwise, or any practice, advertise or in any other manner indicate that he is practicing or will practice dentistry."

Section 15 of said act provides that the board of dental examiners, or any member thereof, may prefer a complaint "for violation of this act or any part thereof," and concludes with making it the duty of the district attorney to prosecute all violations of said act.

The accusation charges petitioner with unprofessional conduct in four counts. The first count charges that between August 4, 1915, and May 31, 1929, petitioner, Painless Parker, aided and abetted an unlicensed person to practice dentistry unlawfully. The gist of this accusation is that on August 4, 1915, petitioner caused to be formed and organized a corporation under the name of Painless Parker Dentist, for the purpose and with the object that said corporation should conduct, own, operate, and control dental offices throughout this state, the United States of America, and the Dominion of Canada, and thereafter, pursuant to said purpose and object, petitioner, Painless Parker, did aid and abet said corporation, Painless Parker Dentist, an unlicensed person, to practice dentistry in this state and to conduct, own, operate, and control dental offices throughout the state of California, where dental operations were performed and the practice of dentistry was carried on.

Count 2 charges that continuously between September 20, 1921, and January 22, 1929, said petitioner, Painless Parker, through the agency of said corporation, aided and abetted Ramona McShane, an unlicensed person, to participate in the profits of the dental offices so unlawfully operated, conducted, and controlled by said Painless Parker Dentist, corporation.

Count 3 charges that between the dates set forth in count 2 petitioner, Painless Parker, did willfully and unlawfully use a false, assumed, and fictitious name, to wit, Painless Parker Dentist, a corporation, in conducting and engaging in the practice of dentistry in the state of California, and during said period he did advertise and indicate that he was practicing dentistry under said false, assumed, and fictitious name.

Count 4 alleges that between September 21, 1921, and October 10, 1928, said Painless Parker did willfully and unlawfully carry on and conduct the practice of dentistry in this state under a false, assumed, and fictitious name, to wit, E. R. Parker System, which name was a name other than the name under which said Painless Parker was and is licensed to practice dentistry, and he did advertise and indicate that he was practicing dentistry under said false and fictitious name.

The board of dental examiners found against petitioner on each one of said counts.

It may be taken as conceded that the original or given name of petitioner was Edgar R. and that said original or given name was discarded and "Painless" was, under form of law, adopted in its stead as his first or given name. Prior thereto he had practiced dentistry under his original name, Edgar R. Parker, and his dental license was issued to him in that name. After he had changed his name to Painless Parker, he again reverted to the use of his abandoned name, E. R. Parker, and coupled it with a painless technique of dental operations and advertised that examinations and advice were obtainable at the dental offices of the E. R. Parker System.

On August 4, 1915, petitioner caused to be formed a corporation named "Painless Parker Dentist" for the purposes, among a long list of others, of conducting, owning, operating, and controlling dental offices throughout the state of California, the United States of America, and the Dominion of Canada. The other enumerated purposes, in addition to those already named, for which said corporation was formed, are many, including the manufacture, purchase, and sale of all kinds of dental creams and pastes; dental supplies of all and every kind; mechanical goods and apparatus; artificial teeth and crowns; anæsthetics; the purchase and sale of gold necessary for use in the practice of dentistry; the manufacture, importation, and exportation of dental articles of all kinds; buying, selling, and dealing in and with all things, solids, and liquids, necessary in the practice of dentistry; purchasing, owning, selling, leasing, and dealing in real property of every description, and buying, selling, owning, leasing, and dealing in personal property of all kinds; purchasing, owning, selling, and dealing in shares of stock, bonds, and obligations of private and public corporations; buying, dealing in, and selling merchandise of all kinds; employing, engaging, and hiring any and all necessary persons in the proper performance of dental offices, in which mechanical and operative dentistry shall be carried on where such persons are needed; and finally for the purpose of carrying on and transacting any and all kinds of businesses in which natural persons may lawfully engage.

The amount of the capital stock of said corporation was fixed at $5,000, divided into 500 shares of the par value of $10 per share. The number of shares of stock actually subscribed was three; one, respectively, by E. R. Parker, B. T. Mohney, and Harry Morgan, who were appointed directors.

On August 27, 1915, the Associated Dental Supply Company was incorporated by Frances E. Parker, wife of Painless Parker, and Chalmers S. Baird and Frank D. French, each of whom subscribed to one share of its capital stock of the par value of $100 per share. The amount of the capital stock was fixed at $100,000. The three persons above named constituted the board of directors. The purposes for which said corporation was formed included all of those purposes set forth in the Painless Parker Dentist articles of incorporation and others not named in said articles of incorporation, and to which may be added the purposes of engaging in printing, publishing, bookbinding, advertising, publicity work, chartering, constructing, owning, leasing, and operating steam and other craft and vessels; owning, leasing, and holding property for mining purposes; to acquire by purchase trade-marks, trade-names, and the good will of any business whatever; to make and enter into contracts of every kind and character with firms, associations, and corporations, municipalities, bodies politic, including the government of the United States of America and of any state or territory.

The purposes for which the corporations Painless Parker Dentist and Associated Dental Supply Company, respectively, are formed and the powers which they assume to exercise are both multifarious and heterogeneous. While many of the purposes set out in the articles of incorporation have a connection with some of the various forms and kindred branches of dentistry, others have no relevancy whatsoever to the subject.

Said corporations, associations, or entities which Painless Parker claims as his legitimate offspring begotten of rights conferred upon him by his license to practice dentistry are: Painless Parker Dentist, in his individual capacity; Painless Parker Dentist, in his corporate capacity; Associated Dental Supply Company, a California corporation; Parker Dental System Company, a Delaware corporation; the E. R. Parker Dental System Employees' Cooperative Plan. Several of the associates of petitioner and employees of the corporation and its subsidiaries were called as witnesses by respondents for the purpose of explaining the functions of said corporations and allied bodies, but nothing was adduced to explain the rationale of the system, if it can be so called. Certainly the many appendages attached to the corporate bodies are not conducive to the conduct of the practice of dentistry in a lawful manner, but, on the contrary, they provide a means of circumventing the spirit and the letter of the law regulating the practice of dentistry. Examined strictly from a business viewpoint, they seem unnecessary and in many instances are overlapping and conglomerate. Corporation Painless Parker Dentist was incorporated by Painless Parker, the individual dentist, in 1915. He, together with his assistant or employee, B. T. Mohney, a licensed dentist, and Harry A. Morgan, a layman, constituted the board of directors.

All of the witnesses who testified on material matters in the proceedings were either assistants of petitioner or employees of the corporations which he unquestionably dominated.

Mr. Frank W. French, president of the Associated Dental Supply Company, testified that said corporation was formed in 1915, and he had been connected with it for approximately fourteen years. Frances E. Parker, wife of Painless Parker, Chalmers E. Baird, and Frank W. French were the directors. The latter had also been business manager of Painless Parker Dentist during the same period of time. None of the directors of Associated Dental Supply Company were licensed dentists. The working plan, as explained by the witnesses, between Painless Parker Dentist and Associated Dental Supply Company, the purposes of the incorporation of each being fully heretofore set out, was that Painless Parker, dentist, was general manager of Painless Parker Dentist, corporation, and the corporation leased its various offices conducted in several cities throughout the state, together with office equipment, from Associated Dental Supply Company, a California corporation. Painless Parker Dentist purchased all dental supplies used by it from Associated Dental Supply Company. All moneys collected by the several dental offices operated by Painless Parker Dentist were remitted to the Associated Dental Supply Company, which in turn paid all rentals, salaries of dentists, and operative expenses of Painless Parker Dentist. Whatever surplus remained was the property of Associated Dental Supply Company, a corporation, or the Parker Dental System Company, a Delaware corporation. The latter was incorporated some years after the former, and while both were granted substantially the same corporate powers, both continued to exist. Managers of the several dental offices seemed to have exercised their pleasure as to which they should forward their earnings. Moneys earned by Painless Parker Dentist from the actual practice of dentistry were deposited in bank to the order of one or the other of said corporations. Painless Parker received an annual salary of $20,000 for his services, Painless Parker Dentist paying $15,000 of said sum and Associated Dental Supply company paying the remaining $5,000. His office was denominated chief surgeon and general manager for Painless Parker Dentist. Frances E. Parker is a controlling stockholder of the Associated Dental Supply Company, and her husband, Painless Parker, is a director of Parker Dental System Company. He makes irregular visits to the several dental offices. He holds the authority of general manager, but the employment of the help is delegated by him to an agent. The dentists in charge of the several dental offices are given wide administrative powers but are subject to the orders of petitioner. The Oakland office, in charge of Dr. Saul Robert Jacobs, employs sixteen or eighteen persons, of whom five are licensed dentists. Dr. Jacobs has been working in the employ of the Painless Parker Dentist since 1918. He is a director and vice president of the Parker Dental System Company. All moneys earned by Painless Parker Dentist in the practice of dentistry are remitted to the Associated Dental Supply Company and the sum to meet the expenses of conducting the office is returned. He, with A. W. Gage and B. T. Mohney, all licensed dentists, were trustees of a trust project known as "The Million Dollar Profit Sharing Plan," entered into by and between Associated Dental Supply Company, a corporation, Painless Parker Dentist, a corporation, and Painless Parker, guarantors, whereby the guarantors guaranteed trustee certificates and trustee participating certificates issued under and by the E. R. Parker Dental System Employees Cooperative Plan. Subscriptions were open to the public at $50 per certificate. The fund raised upon the issue—as explained by Mr. French—was for the benefit of the capital stock of the Associated Dental Supply Company and the certificate method was adopted to avoid the necessity of sales of stock of said association. The trust was ultimately dissolved. The subscribers of certificates shared in the net earnings of the venture rather than receiving fixed rates of interest on their loans. The E. R. Parker System also served as an advertising bureau for Painless Parker Dentist and other Parker organizations by circular and newspaper methods of publicity. It issued books and pamphlets treating of the introduction of economic methods as to the saving of time and money in the practice of dentistry; painless methods of treatment of teeth; instructions for dental cashiers, receptionists, dental mechanics, and janitors. It purported to give general instructions in the operation and conduct of dental offices, and treated of special dental operations which are not taught in the curriculum of the ordinary colleges.

Considerable literature in the nature of letters written by the Parker organizations and in the form of advertisements, calling attention to the "painless technique in all of E. R. Parker dental operations," is to be found in the record.

It will be seen from the above summary that the Parker organizations, of which Painless Parker is the director in chief, are interlinked in the multifarious dental projects herein mentioned.

[1] That the regulation of the practice of dentistry comes as legitimately within the powers of the Legislature as does the practice of medicine, or any other of the professions which require special scientific knowledge on the part of the practitioner, there can be no doubt. It must be conceded that the Legislature has power to regulate the practice of dentistry not only on the ground that it concerns public health, but also on the ground that it is the state's duty to enact laws which will afford protection to public morals. There is no profession, except the practice of medicine, where the patient passes so completely within the power and control of the operator as does the dental patient. Not infrequently does the operator perform his work upon the patient in the privacy of his office. The right to administer anaesthetics which produce local or general insensibility to pain, or drugs which may produce total or semi unconsciousness, or otherwise affect the nervous system, should be withheld not only from all persons who are not highly skilled in the knowledge of and the use of said drugs, but also from persons who cannot produce evidence of good moral character. Good moral character and "fitness" to practice dentistry are statutory requirements. Dentistry is referred to in the Dental Act (section 13, subd. 3) as a profession. The letter of the statute authorizes persons only to engage in the practice of dentistry. The underlying theory upon which the whole system of dental laws is framed is that the state's licensee shall possess consciousness, learning, skill, and good moral character, all of which are individual characteristics, and none of which is an attribute of an artificial entity. Surely the state, for the better regulation of the practice of dentistry, and as a means of preventing evasions of the law, and with the object of more readily fixing statutory responsibility, has the power to limit such practice to natural persons.

[2] Appellant claims that there is a distinction between the practice of dentistry which the statute undertakes to regulate and the purely business side of the practice; that the first requires skill and learning, while the latter requires only training in business transactions, and if the management or conduct of the "business side" by a layman is inhibited by statute, then the inhibitions of the statute are beyond the scope of the police power of the state, and are void as being unconstitutional, citing State v. Brown, 37 Wash. 97, 79 P. 635, 638, 68 L. R. A. 889, 107 Am. St. Rep. 798; Liggett Company v. Baldridge, 278 U. S. 105, 113, 49 S. Ct. 57, 73 L. Ed. 204; Messner v. Board of Dental Examiners, 87 Cal. App. 199, 262 P. 58. If the statute should be so construed there would still remain other sustained accusations of unprofessional conduct of sufficient gravity to sustain the action of the board of dental examiners. But we are not prepared to hold with the contention that a corporation or an unlicensed person may not be prevented from managing, conducting, or controlling what petitioner terms the "business side" of the practice of dentistry. The law does not assume to divide the practice of dentistry into that kind of departments. Either one may extend into the domain of the other in respects that would make such a division impractical if not impossible. The subject is treated as a whole. If the contention of appellant be sound, then the proprietor of the business may be guilty of gross misconduct in its management and violate all standards which a licensed dentist would be required to respect and stand immune from any regulatory supervision whatsoever. His employee, the licensed dentist, would also be immune from discipline upon the ground that he was but a mere employee and was not responsible for his employer's misconduct, whether the employer be a corporation or a natural person. On grounds of public policy such a condition could not be countenanced. The logical deduction from such a proposition would render the act impotent to accomplish the purpose it was intended to serve, and it would defeat the object of the legislation, which is well stated in Ex parte Whitley, 144 Cal. 167, 77 P. 879, 884, 1 Ann. Cas. 13, in the following language: "But it must be remembered that the act regulating the practice of dentistry and similar acts are not passed to promote the personal ends of individuals, but as salutary enactments in the exercise of the police power of the state to legislate for the safety, health, and welfare of the people." This end cannot be attained if the Dental Act is to be weakened or defeated by subterfuge or circumvented by devious methods. The right of a person merely to own a dental office is not involved in this proceeding. No one would dispute the right of any person to own a dental office or dental equipment. The question most appropriate here is whether the thing owned is used for a given purpose by a person lawfully entitled to so use it. Ownership is not the absolute test of the right of use. It may be conceded that a licensed dentist would have the right to employ unlicensed persons to perform various kinds of services. In such cases the employer is responsible to and for the acts of his employees. But the converse of the proposition is not always true. In the instant case Painless Parker Dentist, a corporation, and the Associated Dental Supply Company, a corporation, are the employers of Painless Parker, the licensed dentist. If the employment is bona fide, as the uncontradicted evidence tends to prove, the corporations which are purely commercial enterprises, none of whose directors need be licensed dentists, are the masters of the situation, and may with or against the wish of Painless Parker, the dentist, employ such licensed persons as may be to their commercial advantage, having less regard for the skill or fitness of the persons so employed than would a licensed proprietor who is solemnly charged by the obligation he assumes to the state to respect the salutary enactments passed in the exercise of the police power for the safety, health, and welfare of the public. Ex parte Whitley, supra.

To whom do the licensed dentists employed by the corporations owe their statutory duty, to Painless Parker or to the commercial institutions which pay them, or to the patient assigned them to serve? If they owed their first allegiance to their employer, the corporation, as was held in People v. Merchants' Pro. Corp., 189 Cal. 531, 209 P. 363, a case involving the duty of an attorney to his client, then they owed but a secondary and divided loyalty to the patient. This was denounced as not within the intendments of the law and practice. The practice of dentistry, like the practice of the law, has long had a sufficiently definite meaning throughout this country. Legislative bodies have accepted this common understanding of the people and enacted laws consistent therewith. The methods of petitioner and his corporate associates cannot be consistently adjusted to such common understanding which is reflected in our statutes.

The practice of dentistry is not open to commercial exploitation. Such would be its fate if the methods adopted by petitioner should become general. That a corporation may not engage in the practice of the law, medicine, or dentistry is a settled question in this state. None of those professions which involves a relationship of a personal as well as a professional character, which has to do with personal privacy, can be placed in the same category as druggists, architects, or other vocations where no such relationship exists. The question here is whether the practices as jointly carried on by petitioner and his corporate associates and entities justify the inference that all are, as a matter of fact, mutually engaged in the practice of dentistry, or do the particular methods employed sustain the accusations, or any of them, charging petitioner with unprofessional conduct. The record speaks for itself, and further particularization is not necessary.

Petitioner has not shown that a greater or better public good has been promoted by the formation of the corporations and subsidiary associations by and through which he has conducted the practice of dentistry than that which has accrued to the long-established ethical standards which are founded upon experience, investigation and research, and which have so universally met with the approval of the public's conception and understanding of the legal and ethical proprieties as to have become codified into the laws of this state and practically into the laws of many of the countries of the civilized world.

[3, 4] Considering the letter and spirit of the Dental Act founded upon the universal method of practicing dentistry which has prevailed in this state for many years, we are of the view that the findings of the board of dental examiners are supported by the evidence. Especially is this true as to count I, which charges Painless Parker with aiding and abetting Painless Parker Dentist, a corporation, in the practice of dentistry. The word "person" includes a corporation as well. Section 17, Code Civ. Proc. We are further of the view that count II is included or merged in the other counts and should not be included in a separate count. Count III is sustained upon the use of the name "Painless Parker Dentist," a corporation, which was used interchangeably with the name "Painless Parker, Dentist," the adopted name of petitioner. We are of the view further that there is evidence in the record sufficient to sustain the finding that petitioner, through his associations with the Parker organizations, was using and permitting to be used the fictitious name E. R. Parker System, suggesting and indicating that E. R. Parker was engaged in the practice of dentistry. E. R. Parker was a name discarded by petitioner and so far as he was concerned it became fictitious after he voluntarily caused his name to be changed to Painless Parker. The real object, purpose, and motive of petitioner in changing his name in the first instance to "Painless" Parker, and secondly in organizing the corporation Painless Parker Dentist, which corresponded precisely to his adopted name when he placed the word dentist thereafter, which he had the right to do under the statute, and thirdly in the retention of his original name "E. R. Parker" under which he had practiced dentistry, were proper matters for the consideration of the board of dental examiners in connection with all the other evidence in the record.

[5] The only question presented by this appeal is one of jurisdiction. We are of the opinion that the acts complained against bring petitioner within the purview of the acts defining unprofessional conduct as herein set forth.

[6-10] It is insisted that the long period of time over which petitioner has operated, and the interpretation that the board and its legal adviser have placed upon said act is entitled to weight in the proceeding. For a period of some fourteen years the board and petitioner have had frequent controversies as to the legality and professional propriety of petitioner's methods employed in the practice of dentistry. At no time was the subject set at rest. Delayed action on the part of those who are charged with the execution of laws will not be permitted to annul the law. It may be considered by the court as a reason for the mitigation of punishment, but the judicial department is not absolutely bound to regard it. Several of the witnesses who were employees of the Parker organization upon being called to the stand were advised by their attorneys that they might claim their privilege and decline to testify on the ground that they were not required to give testimony against themselves. The board thereupon promised them immunity from prosecution if they would testify under the provisions of section 1324, Penal Code, which section had been repealed some fourteen years prior to the day of the hearing (see St. 1917, p. 291). Said witnesses testified and petitioner claims that this evidence was improperly admitted and cannot be considered, on the ground that it was obtained through mistake as to section 1324 being a subsisting act. There is no merit in this contention. Said witnesses, if a prosecution should be instituted aaginst them, may have urged the point, but petitioner cannot raise such an objection in a proceeding instituted against him only. The competency of evidence does not in any way depend upon the means by which it is brought into court, where it is offered in evidence. The courts upon the mere question of admittance or rejection of evidence will not take cognizance of the mode of production unless it is shown the defendant himself has been compelled to give or produce it. People v. Mayen, 188 Cal. 237, 205 P. 435, 24 A. L. R. 1383, which is the leading case on the subject, leaves no doubt as to the rule in this state. It is earnestly insisted that the suspension for a period of five years from the practice of dentistry imposed by the board of dental examiners is excessive. We may agree with petitioner that it does appear rather severe, considering the age of petitioner and the circumstances of the controversies which have been waged between him and the board of dental examiners. As above remarked, we have no power to modify it. The board that imposed the penalty has the power at any time to modify or revoke it as may appear to them to be just.

Judgment affirmed.

LANGDON, J.

I dissent and adopt the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division 2, as an expression of my views. 1 P.(2d) 501, 502. The opinion of that court, written by Mr. Presiding Justice Nourse, is as follows:

This is an appeal from a judgment affirming an order of the dental board suspending petitioner's license to practice dentistry.

The petitioner was tried by the dental board upon an information framed in four counts charging unprofessional conduct. The first count charged petitioner with aiding and abetting the corporation Painless Parker Dentist to practice dentistry unlawfully. The second count charged him with aiding and abetting an unlicensed person to participate in the profits of dental offices. The third count charged the use of an assumed and fictitious name—"Painless Parker Dentist," a corporation. The fourth count charged the use of an assumed and fictitious name—"E. R. Parker System." The dental board found petitioner guilty on all four counts and suspended his license to practice for a period of five years.

"Painless Parker Dentist" was incorporated by articles filed with the secretary of state August 4, 1915. The amount of the subscribed corporate stock was $30 divided into three shares of $10 each. Its designated purposes were "to conduct, own, operate and control dental offices" to manufacture, buy, and sell dental creams, dental apparatus and supplies. E. R. Parker, one of the incorporators, changed his name to "Painless Parker" by decree of court and served as manager and chief surgeon of this corporation. Associated Dental Supply Company was incorporated by articles filed September 1, 1915. The general purposes of this corporation seem to have been the dealing in all kinds of dental supplies and similar merchandise. The petitioner was not a stockholder or incorporator of this corporation. The conduct of the business down to the date of the hearing before the dental board in August, 1929, has been a gradual lessening of the functions of the former corporation and a consequent increase in the functions of Associated Dental Supply Company until the latter secured practically full control of the business and financial operations. Fourteen dental offices were operated in this state by "dentists using the E. R. Parker System." These offices were owned, or leased, by the Associated Dental Supply Company, which in turn had some arrangement with the Painless Parker Dentist Corporation whereby these offices were "leased" to the latter but all the money taken in by these offices was paid directly to the Associated Dental Supply Company. Throughout this period (or at least for the last eight or ten years before the hearing) the Associated Dental Supply Company dealt directly with the managers of the local offices, who in turn deposited all their receipts to the credit of that corporation. The Painless Parker Dentist Corporation has never paid a dividend, has no assets, and no funds on hand. So far as we can ascertain from the record, it has never organized or operated as a corporation, has not, either directly or indirectly, assumed or exercised any control over any of the offices operated by the petitioner or over any of the licensed dentists employed therein; but has simply been used by Painless Parker the individual as his "alter ego" in his conduct of these dental offices, the principal use made of the corporation being the use of the term "Painless Parker Dentist" upon the doors, windows, and letterheads of the petitioner. When this practice was discontinued and the term "Dentists using E. R. Parker System" was adopted does not appear from the evidence. But it does appear without any contradiction that the corporation, as such, has not functioned in the direct management or control of any of these dental offices and has not represented itself as a corporation practicing dentistry but has confined its activities to the appointment of petitioner as its manager, who, in turn, did manage the offices for the benefit of the Associated Dental Supply Company.

In the first count it was alleged that "between the 4th day of August, 1915, and the 31st day of May, 1929," the petitioner did aid and abet an unlicensed person to practice dentistry "by permitting, allowing and authorizing said corporation (Painless Parker Dentist), to conduct, own, operate, and control dental offices throughout the state of California, where dental operations were performed, and carry on the practice of dentistry therein." The basis of the charge is found in the provisions of section 11 of the Dental Act (Deering's General Laws 1923, Act 2048), which declare the practice of dentistry to include one "(5) who manages or conducts as manager, proprietor, conductor, or otherwise a place where dental operations are performed." By section 13 of the act unprofessional conduct is defined to include "aiding or abetting any unlicensed person to practice dentistry unlawfully."

In support of the judgment the respondents argue that any transaction within the purview of subdivision 5 of section 11 of the act constitutes the practice of dentistry; that a corporation may not be licensed to practice dentistry; that any licensed dentist who aids a corporation in the performance of any of the acts mentioned in subdivision 5 is aiding an "unlicensed person" to practice. The appellant argues that the provisions of that subdivision are unconstitutional in so far as they purport to prohibit an unlicensed person from managing the purely business or economic affairs of a dental office, and that the term "unlicensed" dentist refers only to a natural person who might be licensed under the act and not to a corporation owning or operating a dental office.

Bearing in mind that "the ultimate purpose of the Dental Act is to bring about and insure skill and proficiency in the practice of the profession" (Jacobs v. Board of Dental Examiners, 189 Cal. 709, 714, 209 P. 1006, 1008), it must be manifest that, if the quoted provisions of the act mean what the respondents contend that they mean, they are unconstitutional as placing unreasonable restrictions upon the conduct of a lawful business—restrictions which are not referable to the regulatory police powers of the state. State v. Brown, 37 Wash. 97, 79 P. 635, 637, 68 L. R. A. 889, 107 Am. St. Rep. 798; Liggett Co. v. Baldridge, 278 U. S. 105, 49 S. Ct. 57, 73 L. Ed. 204. In the Brown Case the Supreme Court of Washington had under consideration the provisions of section 8 of the dental act of that state (Laws 1901, p. 317), which declared it to be a misdemeanor to "own, run, operate or cause to be operated, or manage a dental office." In holding that portion of the act unconstitutional the Washington court said that "to own and manage property is a natural right, and one which may be restricted only for reasons of public policy, clearly discernible." "But," said the court, "we are unable to say or perceive that the health, moral, or physical welfare of the public, or any of the personal or property rights of its individuals, are endangered by the ownership and management of a dental office, so long as those employed therein to do the actual dentistry work are qualified and licensed as by law required."

In the Brown Case the court gave the illustration of the widow of a licensed dentist who assumed control and management of the business of the office, and who, though she employed none but licensed dentists to perform the dental work, would be chargeable under the strict terms of the act. Other illustrations might be added. Thus the administrator, trustee, or receiver duly appointed to manage the estate of a licensed dentist would, under our statute, be guilty of a misdemeanor. Section 12. The manager or proprietor of "a place where dental operations are performed" would include the manager and owner of every hospital and clinic permitting such operations, the many charitable agencies maintaining clinics, the infirmaries and guilds maintained and operated by the students in the universities and colleges, the many dental clinics maintained by parents' organizations for the benefit of school children, as well as the owners and managers of buildings where such operations are performed.

Closely resembling the case at hand is Messner v. Board of Dental Examiners, 87 Cal. App. 199, 262 P. 58, 60, where the court of the Third Appellate District annulled an order suspending the license of a dentist on the charge that an unlicensed person was the "manager" of his office. The court said that "Cohn had charge of the purely business end of the dental office, * * * but there is no evidence that he had or exercised the slightest control or direction of the professional work performed in such office." In referring to the provisions of subdivision 5, the court said: "A reasonable construction of the quoted provisions of the statute appears to be that, to come within the terms thereof, one must in some manner, to some extent, directly or indirectly, control or direct some professional service of the kind that dentists are licensed to render."

This is about the same interpretation which was given the quoted portion of the section by the Attorney General of the state as early as 1918 when he advised the dental board that "so much of the business relating to his practice as does not concern the public may * * * be operated through the medium of a corporation. It is the evident intent of the act that the licensed dentist in his dealings with the public shall operate in his own name and that that name shall be the one under which he is licensed, but under the statute it is apparently not made of any concern to the public whether the business of the dentist other than as the public comes in contact therewith, is operated by the dentist himself or by a corporation to which he is responsible in connection therewith, or which may have an interest in the facilities employed or receipts from his practice."

The appellant insists that the foregoing interpretation was made at his request and that he has frequently informed the respondent board of his desire to conform to the law in this respect and has frequently requested the board to inform him of its desires and demands in that respect. In view of the uncertainty of the act, and in view of the fact that petitioner was charged with a violation of its terms over a period of fourteen years, we are inclined to petitioner's view of contemporaneous construction growing out of the interpretations of the board and of its legal adviser and the conduct of the board over that period of time. The ambiguity of the quoted portion of the statute is evident, and, whether we agree with the interpretation of the dental board and the attorney-general, that interpretation, employed over a long period of years, is nevertheless entitled to weight in this proceeding. Thus, in The Pocket Veto Case, 279 U. S. 655, 690, 49 S. Ct. 463, 470, 73 L. Ed. 894, the Supreme Court said: "that a practice of at least twenty years duration 'on the part of the executive department, acquiesced in by the legislative department, while not absolutely binding on the judicial department, is entitled to great regard in determining the true construction of a constitutional provision the phraseology of which is in any respect of doubtful meaning.'" Quotation is from State v. South Norwalk, 77 Conn. 257, 264, 58 A. 759. This principle is more liberally applied to the construction of statutes than to the provisions of a constitution. 6 R. C. L., p. 63, where many cases on the general principle stated in the Connecticut case are cited.

Applying the doctrine to the case at hand, we find, first, that the statute is uncertain where it refers to one who "conducts as * * * proprietor * * * or otherwise a place where dental operations are performed" because if this language includes an owner of a dental office who merely controls the purely business side of the place it is unconstitutional (State v. Brown, 37 Wash. 97, 79 P. 635, 638, 68 L. R. A. 889, 107 Am. St. Rep. 798; Liggett Company v. Baldridge, 278 U. S. 105, 113, 49 S. Ct. 57, 73 L. Ed. 204); and if the words "manage or conduct" cover such functions as do not "call for any of the professional skill required of a dentist but rather that of one trained in business transactions" (Messner v. Board, supra), then the inhibitions of the statute are beyond the scope of the police power of the state; and, second, the statute being uncertain in this respect, the petitioner was entitled to assume from the language of the information that he was required to answer that charge in the light of the interpretation placed upon the statute by the dental board and its legal adviser. For these reasons the demurrer to the first count of the information should have been sustained upon the grounds of uncertainty.

The evidence taken in support of the allegations of the first count does not aid the pleading as it merely tends to prove that, after the incorporation of Painless Parker Dentist, the petitioner became its manager. (Here it should be added that, though the charge in the information covered a period of fourteen years, none of the evidence was tied to that period and much of it was not laid in the state of California whereas it appears that the petitioner was operating during that period in other states.) Upon this charge and evidence he was convicted of aiding and abetting an "unlicensed person to practice dentistry unlawfully." In Ex parte Whitley, 144 Cal. 167, 180, 77 P. 879, 884, 1 Ann. Cas. 13, the Supreme Court, referring to a similar statute, said: "But it must be remembered that the act regulating the practice of dentistry and similar acts are not passed to promote the personal ends of individuals, but as salutary enactments in the exercise of the police power of the state to legislate for the safety, health, and welfare of the people." To reach this end the dental act has prescribed the method by which a person may obtain a license to practice dentistry, and from the language of the act, a license could be granted to a human being only and not to an artificial creation such as a corporation. The terms of the act, in so far as they relate to the licensing of individuals and to the practice of dentistry, show clearly that they were directed to persons as distinguished from corporations. Similar interpretations have been given to the act regulating the practice of architecture in Binford v. Boyd, 178 Cal. 458, 462, 174 P. 56; People v. Allied Architects' Ass'n, 201 Cal. 428, 435, 257 P. 511; the State Medical Act in Pilger v. City of Paris D. G. Co., 86 Cal. App. 277, 281, 261 P. 328; and the Nebraska Medical Act in State Electro-Med. Inst. v. State, 74 Neb. 40, 103 N. W. 1078, 12 Ann. Cas. 673. In the latter case the Nebraska court said (page 1079 of 103 N. W.): "There was no necessity of legislation to prohibit corporations, as such, from practicing medicine. It is impossible to conceive of an impersonal entity 'judging the nature, character and symptoms of the disease,' or 'determining the proper remedy,' or giving or prescribing the application of the remedy to the disease. Members of the corporation, or persons in its employ, might do these things, but the corporation itself is incapable to do them. The qualification of a medical practitioner is personal to himself. The intention of the law is that one who undertakes to judge the nature of a disease or to determine the proper remedy therefor, or to apply the remedy, must have certain personal qualifications; and, if he does these things without having complied with the law, he is subject to its penalties. Making contracts is not practicing medicine. Collecting the compensation therefor is not practicing medicine, within the meaning of this statute. No professional qualifications are requisite for doing these things."

In view of these authorities it would seem to follow that when the Legislature declared it to be unprofessional for a licensed dentist to aid an "unlicensed person" to practice dentistry it had in mind the practice of dentistry which a licensed person might carry on —"some professional service of the kind that dentists are licensed to render" (Messner v. Board, supra), and did not contemplate a corporation which could not become licensed under the act and which could do no more than conduct the business side of the office.

Putting it in a different form, the evidence discloses that some fourteen years prior to the filing of the information the Painless Parker Dentist Corporation, in some manner not made to appear, appointed the petitioner as its general manager and then ceased to function as a corporation. The petitioner had complete control and management of all the dental offices, employed licensed dentists as local managers of each office, who in turn employed licensed dentists to perform all the dental operations performed therein. If we could treat the corporation as the employer under this evidence, we would still be forced to the conclusion that it was not practicing dentistry under the true meaning of the statute. In this respect the case is the same, except as to the number of operations performed, as Renwick v. Phillips, 204 Cal. 349, 350, 268 P. 368, 369, where the Supreme Court, in affirming a judgment annulling an order of the medical board revoking Renwick's license to practice medicine and surgery, said: "The petitioner was a licensed chiropodist. The said Roy Finney conducted a chiropodist parlor, equipped with a variety of foot remedies and appliances which he prepared and sold there. He employed the petitioner and respondent herein to act as a chiropodist in connection with his said establishment and to give such treatment and perform such operations as only could be done by the holder of a regular chiropodist's license so to do. In so far there was nothing illegal or unprofessional in the relations or conduct of Dr. Renwick in his connection with said Finney at the latter's place of business."

There is a clear distinction between this principle and that involved in the cases cited by respondent. People v. California Pro. Corp., 76 Cal. App. 354, 244 P. 1089, and People v. Merchants' Pro. Corp., 189 Cal. 531, 209 P. 363, were quo warranto proceedings to oust the corporations from the practice of law. The principle is stated in the latter case at page 538 of 189 Cal., 209 P. 363, 366, where the court said: "The essential relation of trust and confidence between attorney and client cannot be said to arise where the attorney is employed, not by the client, but by some corporation which has undertaken to furnish its members with legal advice, counsel, and professional services. The attorney in such a case owes his first allegiance to his immediate employer, the corporation, and owes, at most, but an incidental, secondary, and divided loyalty to the clientele of the corporation." To the same effect is Midland Credit Adjustment Co. et al. v. Donnelley, 219 Ill. App. 271. People v. Painless Parker Dentist, 85 Colo. 304, 275 P. 928, was also a quo warranto proceeding heard on a demurrer to a petition which alleged that the corporation was practicing dentistry and advertised to that effect. These allegations being admitted on the demurrer, the Supreme Court of Colorado held that the corporation was employed in an illegal practice as no corporation could be licensed to practice dentistry. People v. State Board, etc., 85 Colo. 321, 275 P. 933, was a proceeding in prohibition which was heard and determined on the record in the former case. As this record disclosed that the corporation was practicing dentistry the supreme court correctly denied the petition for prohibition to restrain the dental board from trying petitioner on a charge that he was aiding the corporation to practice illegally. Pilger v. City of Paris, etc., Co., 86 Cal. App. 277, 261 P. 328, merely holds that the corporation was not liable for the negligence of its employees in a chiropody department maintained by the corporation in its store because the corporation could not practice chiropody.

The cases cited follow the general rule of the authorities which is that the true purpose and intent of regulatory statutes of this character is that one who undertakes to judge the nature of a disease or other bodily ailment, or to determine the proper remedy, must have certain personal qualifications, and that, from the nature of these required qualifications a corporation may not be licensed to practice the profession. Adopting this rule the authorities then hold that when the regulatory statute refers to the licensing of "persons" it intends natural and not artificial persons. Pharmaceutical Soc. v. London and Prov. Suppl. Ass'n, Ltd., 5 L. R. (Appeal Cases) 857.

The second count charged the petitioner with unprofessional conduct in that he aided an unlicensed person named Ramona McShane to practice dentistry unlawfully in that he permitted her to participate in the profits of the dental office owned and operated by "Painless Parker Dentist, a corporation." The evidence in support of the charge was that in 1920 the Associated Dental Supply Company was in need of funds and for that reason executed a trust agreement selling trust certificates in small denominations. Ramona McShane purchased 151 shares at $1 a share. Interest in the nature of dividends was paid to each certificate holder until 1929 when the loan was repaid and the trust dissolved. As the Painless Parker Dentist Corporation leased dental offices from the Associated Dental Supply Company, the respondents found that Ramona McShane participated in the profits of the Painless Parker Corporation, that she therefore practiced dentistry unlawfully, and that the petitioner aided and abetted her in so doing. It would be just as reasonable to say that every stockholder of a bank which has loaned money to the owner of a building in which some dentist has practiced without a license is an aider and abetter in the unlawful practice of dentistry. To interpret the statute as contended for by respondents would make it unconstitutional for the reasons heretofore given, whereas, if the statute is given a reasonable and constitutional interpretation the information and the evidence both demonstrate that Ramona McShane was not practicing dentistry within any sound construction of the act.

The third count purported to charge petitioner with practicing under an assumed or fictitious name in the use of the term "Painless Parker Dentist," and the fourth count charged a similar breach of the act in the use of the term "E. R. Parker System." The evidence was that petitioner, by decree of court, changed his name to "Painless Parker." This name was used by him in his practice of dentistry. The name Painless Parker Dentist was not fictitious. Spreckels v. Grace Darling Hosp. Ass'n, 28 Cal. App. 646, 648, 153 P. 718; Wetenhall v. Mabrey (Cal. Sup.) 286 P. 1015; Andrews v. Glick, 205 Cal. 699, 701, 272 P. 587. There is no evidence in the record to sustain the allegations of this count. All the evidence shows without conflict that petitioner was practicing under the name given him by decree of court which was the name under which he was licensed to practice by respondents.

The fourth count purported to charge petitioner with the practice of dentistry under the false and fictitious name of "E. R. Parker System." E. R. Parker is the name under which petitioner was engaged in business prior to the decree changing his name to "Painless Parker." Under that name he promulgated the system of studying and teaching the practice of dentistry including both the business details and technical matters of the profession. For this purpose manuals and other printed documents were prepared and circulated for the use of those engaged in the dental practice and in many of the offices maintained by petitioner the words "dentists using the E. R. Parker System" were prominently displayed. In support of the allegations of this count the evidence showed no more than that the petitioner used the expression in the teaching of the practice of dentistry. Under no possible theory could the transactions detailed be treated as the practice of dentistry.

Finally it is argued that the respondents usurped their authority in this proceeding when they compelled the witnesses French, Jacobs, and Cage to appear before them and give testimony against the petitioner. The argument is that because of section 12 of the Dental Act these witnesses were each guilty of a misdemeanor if the charges contained in the information against the petitioner were true, and that they were, therefore, entitled to be excused from giving testimony against themselves under the provisions of section 13, article 1 of the Constitution.

When the witnesses were called they were advised by their attorneys that they need not testify upon the ground that their testimony might incriminate them, but the respondents refused to heed their objections and ordered them to testify after counsel for the dental board had read to the witnesses the provisions of section 1324, Penal Code, and pretending to act in accord therewith, undertook to grant them immunity from prosecution if they would so testify. This section of the Penal Code had been repealed in 1917 (St. 1917, p. 291), and hence was not available at the time of the hearing which was in September, 1929. There can be no doubt that these witnesses were led into a false sense of security by the pretended reliance of respondents upon the repealed section and by the pretended assurance of immunity to them which neither the respondents nor their counsel had any possible right to grant. This action of the board is not defended on this appeal, and in view of the rule of Ex parte Clarke, 103 Cal. 352, 37 P. 230, and Hickman v. London Assurance Corp., 184 Cal. 524, 531, 195 P. 45, 18 A. L. R. 742, we cannot see how it could be defended. If this evidence is to be disregarded, there is no evidence to support any charge in the information as the case presented by the dental board rests (with certain exceptions which are immaterial) upon the evidence which the board compelled these witnesses to give in disregard of their constitutional rights. The great weight of the authorities is to the effect that evidence so taken must be treated as no evidence, while on the other hand authorities may be found holding that evidence, no matter how illegally obtained, must be given its full weight. We do not need to decide that question here because we are satisfied from a review of the entire record that all the evidence, including that illegally obtained, wholly fails to support any charge in the information.

The judgment should be reversed, with instructions to the trial court to enter its order annulling the order under review.

Action by the United States National Bank of Los Angeles against William Stiller and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

E. A. Miller (of Miller & Patterson), Louis L. Swarthe (of Wolfson & Swarthe), Oliver O. Clark, and Charles R. Nelson, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Patterson, Bailey & Montgomery and Charles C. Montgomery, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CURTIS, J.

The appellants were stockholders in the Pacific Cotton & Finance Corporation, a corporation organized under the laws of this state. This action was instituted against them upon their liability as stockholders in said company. Three causes of action were contained in the complaint, but as no point is raised as to the correctness of the judgment based upon the third cause of action, it will be necessary for us to devote attention only to the first and second causes of action.

The first cause of action was based upon an indebtedness originally created by a loan of $22,625 by the plaintiff to the Pacific Cotton & Finance Corporation on July 8, 1925, evidenced by a promissory note of that date, executed by said corporation in said sum of $22,625. The second cause of action arose out of an indebtedness originally created by a loan of $15,000 by the plaintiff to said corporation on May 4, 1925, which was also evidenced by a promissory note bearing date May 4, 1925, executed by said corporation in said sum of $15,000. Each of said notes was in plaintiff's favor and bore interest.

The court found that on July 8, 1925, the date on which the note for $22,625 was executed, the total amount of the capital stock of said Pacific Cotton & Finance Corporation issued and outstanding was 6,305 shares, and that each of the three appellants on said date owned 1,051 shares, or one-sixth of the total capital stock of said corporation, and directed judgment to be entered against each of them for one-sixth of the total amount found due on said indebtedness. The court also found that on May 4, 1925, the date on which the note for $15,000 was executed, the total amount of the capital stock of Pacific Cotton & Finance Corporation issued and outstanding was 4,000 shares; that on said date appellant Stiller was the owner of one-third of said issued and outstanding capital stock and that appellant Kay was the owner of 100 shares of said capital stock, but that appellant Cohn was not a stockholder of said corporation on said date. Appellants claim that these findings, with the exception of the one last mentioned to the effect that the appellant Kay was the owner of 100 shares and appellant Cohn was not a stockholder of said corporation on May 4, 1925, the date the note for $15,000 was executed, are not supported by the evidence. Appellants contend that on the respective dates when said indebtednesses were created, that is, on May 4, 1925, and July 8, 1925, the appellants Stiller and Kay were each the owner of only 100 shares of the capital stock of said corporation, and that the total issued and outstanding stock therein was 4,000 shares, and that appellant Cohn was not the owner of any of said stock on either of said dates.

We will first devote our attention to the transaction of May 4, 1925, when $15,000 was borrowed of the plaintiff by the Pacific Cotton & Finance Corporation, being the second cause of action set out in the complaint. At that time there were actually standing on the books of said corporation, 100 shares of its capital stock in the name of appellant Stiller and a like number of shares of stock in the name of appellant Kay. Stiller had been elected president and Kay secretary of the corporation. The corporation desired a loan of $15,000. Evidently Stiller and Kay had never done business with the plaintiff bank up to this time. They were introduced to the bank officials by Cohn. The loan was arranged, but before making it the bank required a financial statement of the Pacific Cotton & Finance Corporation and also a like statement from Stiller, the president. These statements were prepared and presented to the bank by Stiller, and upon the strength of them the loan of $15,000 was made by the bank to the corporation. The statement of the corporation showed as follows:

Capital stock paid in		$60,300
That is made up of the Outstanding stock	$40,000
Plus the stock to be issued to the new stockholders	15,000
Plus the amount the books show the corporation owed Mr. Rosenstein on April 27th	5,300
		$60,300

The statement of appellant Stiller, as presented to the bank at the time this loan was secured, showed, among other things, that he was the owner of "⅓ interest—Pacific Cotton and Finance Corporation, $20,100.00." In explanation of the reason why the statement of Stiller, the president of the corporation, was required by the bank officials, Mr. Heim, one of the vice presidents of the bank, and the official who conducted the negotiations preliminary to the making of the loan testified: "We relied [on making the loan] on the financial statement of the Pacific Cotton and Finance Company with the information we had of the principal stockholder and president of the corporation. We feel a corporation is just as good as the president of the corporation who manages the corporation."

[1, 2] The sole controversy involved under the second cause of action is whether appellant Stiller should be held under his stockholder's liability on his 100 shares only, or whether he should be held liable as the owner of one-third of the stock of the Pacific Cotton & Finance Corporation, as shown by the financial statement made by him at the bank at the time the loan was procured. Appellant Stiller contends that his liability for the indebtedness incurred by reason of the borrowing of said sum of $15,000 was and is fixed by the actual number of shares owned by him and standing in his name on the corporation's books at the date of the incurring of said indebtedness. On the other hand, the respondent contends that, as the loan was made on the strength of Stiller's written statement that he was the owner of one-third interest in the corporation, he is now estopped from asserting that he was in fact the owner of a less number of shares than that stated in his financial statement. Respondent further contends that under the facts proven in this case the appellant Stiller was on the date said indebtedness was incurred in fact the owner, either legal or equitable, of one third of the capital stock of said corporation. As this question involves both causes of action, we will give it first consideration.

While the evidence in many of its features is not as clear as we might wish, we think it is sufficient to warrant the statement that it shows the existence of the following series of facts: In April, 1925, the issued capital stock of the Pacific Cotton & Finance Corporation was owned by Mr. and Mrs. Levinson and a Mr. Rosenstein. These three in that month made an agreement with the three appellants, whereby the latter would advance to the corporation the sum of $15,000 in consideration of which there would be issued to them upon the receipt of a permit from the corporation commissioner to sell the unissued stock of said corporation, 1,500 shares of the treasury stock of said corporation, and in addition thereto the Levinsons and Rosenstein agreed to transfer a sufficient amount of their personally owned stock in said corporation to appellants so that there would then be 6,300 shares of stock of the said corporation issued and outstanding, which shares of stock would be owned in the following amounts: The Levinsons and Rosenstein would own one-third of said stock or 2,100 shares, appellant Stiller would own 2,100 shares, and the two appellants Cohn and Kay would together own the remaining one-third. In pursuance of this agreement, and on or about April 20, 1925, the appellants paid into the treasury of the corporation the sum of $15,000, and Mr. Rosenstein, who owned all of the stock outstanding, except qualifying shares to directors, amounting to 4,000 shares, resigned as a director of the corporation, and indorsed all his certificates of stock and delivered them to the attorney of appellants. Thereupon 100 shares were issued to each of the appellants Stiller and Kay, and Stiller was then elected president and Kay secretary of the corporation. At a later meeting of the board of directors held on April 20, 1925, an application was made to the corporation commissioner for permission to sell all unissued stock to the directors for cash. It was at this stage of the proceedings that negotiations were begun for a loan from the plaintiff bank which resulted in the bank loaning said corporation said sum of $15,000 upon the promissory note of the corporation after appellant Stiller had furnished the bank the corporation's and his own financial statements. It thus appears that, at the time this indebtedness was incurred, although only 100 shares of the stock stood in Stiller's name on the books of the company, Stiller in fact owned his portion of the stock indorsed by Rosenstein and delivered to Stiller's attorney, besides an interest in one-third of the stock for which he had paid and which was to be issued by the corporation as soon as the permit was received from the corporation commissioner. These three lots of stock amount to one-third of the stock of said corporation. The permit to sell said stock was not issued by the corporation commissioner until three days later, May 7th, and none of the stock, except the 100 shares, was actually issued in Stiller's name until July 21, 1925. Under this statement of facts, the respondent bank does not have to rely wholly upon the doctrine of estoppel in order to hold Stiller on his liability as the owner of one-third of the capital stock of said corporation. To all intents and purposes, Stiller was on May 4, 1925, the owner of one-third of the stock of said corporation, although only 100 shares of stock stood in his name on the books of the corporation. Possibly it might be necessary on account of the strict language of the corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673, as amended) to eliminate from this calculation the unissued stock which was to be issued after the permit was received from the corporation commissioner. Even if this is done, practically the same result is obtained. At the beginning of the negotiations between appellants and Rosenstein and the Levinsons, with the exception of possibly 2 or 3 shares of stock issued to the Levinsons to qualify them to act as directors, Rosenstein was the owner of the entire outstanding stock of said corporation consisting of 4,000 shares. He indorsed and delivered to appellants' attorney certificates representing this entire block of stock. He had agreed with appellants to sell to them, either from his own stock or from the unissued stock, or from both sources, a sufficient number of shares so that the stock of said corporation would be held one-third thereof by himself and the Levinsons, one-third by Stiller, and one-third by Kay and Cohn. Had the permit never been issued by the corporation commissioner, and had no further stock been issued by the corporation, Stiller and his associates Kay and Cohn would undoubtedly have received out of the 4,000 shares in the hands of their attorney the shares of stock to which they were entitled under their agreement with Rosenstein. The evidence does not directly show the reasons why Rosenstein turned over to appellants' attorney the 4,000 shares, when by the strict letter of his agreement he was only required to deliver to them a less number of shares—2,700, as we construe their agreement. It may reasonably be inferred from his act of indorsing and delivering this excessive amount of stock to the attorney that he intended, should any slip occur in their plan to issue the new stock, the appellants would be amply protected by the deposit of the 4,000 shares with the attorney. In either event, the appellant Stiller would receive the amount of stock which Rosenstein had agreed to sell and for which Stiller had paid, and he would thus own a one-third interest in the Pacific Cotton & Finance Corporation. It is true that only 100 shares of this stock stood in Stiller's name on the books of the corporation.

Under section 322 of the Civil Code as it stood at the time of this transaction, a stockholder is liable for his proportionate amount of the indebtedness of the corporation not only for the stock standing in his name on the books of the company, but also for all stock owned by him which stands on the books in the name of another. Duke v. Huntington, 130 Cal. 272, 62 P. 510; Hughes Mfg., etc., Co. v. Wilcox, 13 Cal. App. 22, 27, 108 P. 871, 873; 6 Cal. Jur., § 384, p. 1004. Stiller's liability, therefore, extended to his entire ownership of stock in the corporation which, as we have seen, was one-third of the entire stock outstanding.

[3] Furthermore, under the theory of estoppel, we think the judgment against Stiller must be sustained. The respondent bank before it would agree to make the loan to the Pacific Cotton & Finance Corporation required of Stiller, its president, a statement showing his own financial condition. Undoubtedly one purpose of this requirement was to ascertain not only the financial standing of Stiller, but also the amount of his interest in the corporation of which he was president. The statement presented by Stiller showed that he was possessed of considerable means in his own right and was also the owner of one-third of the capital stock of the corporation. Unquestionably this statement had a material bearing upon the decision of the bank officials in making the loan to Stiller's corporation. It is reasonable to suppose that had the statement shown that Stiller was the owner of only a small amount of property, or that he was possessed of only a nominal interest in the corporation, the loan might not have been made. It has been held that where the holder of the record title is not the owner of the stock, his liability to creditors is based, not upon ownership, but upon estoppel. Hughes Mfg., etc., Co. v. Wilcox, 13 Cal. App. 22, 108 P. 871. If one, not an owner of stock, can be held liable by estoppel by permitting the stock to stand in his name on the books of the company, we think the same rule should apply when a person, even though not the owner of stock, makes a positive and definite statement that he is such owner, and by the means of such a statement obtains property or credit for himself or for his company. Appellants have cited us to no authority to the contrary, but content themselves with the statement that respondent is barred from relying upon the claim of estoppel by reason of its failure to inform itself by an investigation of the books of the corporation of the extent of Stiller's ownership of stock. Under the circumstances shown in this case, we think this contention is without merit. "Every contracting party has an absolute right to rely on the express statement of an existing fact, the truth of which is known to the opposite party and unknown to him, as the basis of a mutual agreement; and he is under no obligation to investigate and verify statements to the truth of which the other party to the contract, with full means of knowledge, has deliberately pledged his faith."

"Where one is justified in relying, and in fact does rely, upon false representations, his right of action is not destroyed because means of knowledge were open to him. In such a case no duty rests upon him to employ such means of knowledge. * * * It is said not to be just that a man who deceives another should be permitted to say to him, 'You ought not to believe or trust me,' or 'You are yourself guilty of negligence.'" 12 Cal. Jur. § 34, p. 758.

[4, 5] This disposes of the transaction of the loan made on May 4, 1925, as set forth in plaintiff's second cause of action.

The next transaction was that occurring on July 8, 1925, and is contained in plaintiff's first cause of action. On that date, as we have previously observed, the Pacific Cotton & Finance Corporation borrowed of the respondent bank the sum of $22,625 and gave its promissory note for that amount. This note was renewed on October 6, 1925, but as the original indebtedness was created on July 8, 1925, this date must be used in fixing the liability of the several stockholders for their proportion of this indebtedness. This indebtedness at the time of the commencement of the action had been reduced to something slightly over $6,000. As stated above, the permit of the corporation commissioner to sell the unissued stock for cash had been issued on May 7, 1925, some two months before this second loan was made. This was the date fixed by the original agreement between Rosenstein and the Levinsons on the one hand and the appellants on the other when the stock purchased by appellants should be issued and transferred. On this date, therefore, the appellants became the legal owner of the stock purchased by them under their agreement with Rosenstein and the Levinsons even though the actual issuance and transfer of this stock was not made until July 21, 1925. There was no change in the ownership of the stock between May 4, and July 8, 1925, in so far as the appellants were concerned, except that there was evidence, which the court evidently accepted and acted upon, that appellant Stiller had transferred one-half of his stock to his son, Marvin Stiller. Appellant Stiller under the agreement made with Rosenstein and the Levinsons bought one-third of the stock and appellants Kay and Cohn bought one-third between them, or one-sixth each. As Stiller conveyed one-half of his third of the stock to his son, this left him with one-sixth of the stock. The court accordingly found that each of these three appellants was liable for one-sixth of the remaining amount due on the indebtedness created on July 8, 1925. The same character of defense is made by these three appellants as was made by the appellant Stiller in reference to his liability under the previous indebtedness. Stiller and Kay contend that as only 100 shares of stock stood of record in their names and as the total outstanding stock of the corporation at that date was 6,300 shares, their proportion of said indebtedness would only be 1/63 of the same, while Cohn contends that as no stock stood of record in his name, he was not liable for any part of said indebtedness. Under the authorities heretofore cited, the appellants are liable as stockholders for the proportionate amount of said indebtedness upon all stock owned by them respectively whether the same stood upon the record of the books of the corporation or not. As the appellants had previously bought and paid for their stock, they became the legal owners thereof at the date of said purchase, at least as to a part of said stock, and as to the balance thereof at the date the permit was issued by the corporation commissioner, and as they remained such owners, except as to the stock transferred by Stiller to his son, up to and at the time the indebtedness of July 8, 1925, was incurred, they are liable for said indebtedness as found by the trial court.

[6] There is no merit in appellant Stiller's contention that the court erred in admitting in evidence the two financial statements presented to the plaintiff by appellant Stiller, at the time the loan of $15,000 was made on May 4, 1925. Appellant particularly objects to the admission in evidence of his own personal financial statement claiming the same was not material to any issue in the case and that the trial court was misled thereby. The admission of this statement was proper in view of the evidence given by Mr. Heim, who testified to the effect that the loan was made, in part at least, upon the strength of Stiller's financial statement.

We find no error in the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

WASTE, C. J.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of dismissal entered upon the sustaining of a general demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend.

The action is one to annul and set aside an interlocutory decree of divorce alleged to have been obtained by reason of the threats, coercion, and duress of the defendant. It appears from the complaint herein that in March, 1925, the defendant brought suit for divorce in the state of New York charging plaintiff with having committed adultery. In July of the same year the plaintiff instituted an action in California for maintenance. The defendant visited the plaintiff in California the following October and offered to dismiss the New York action if plaintiff would abandon her maintenance suit and, instead, bring an action for divorce charging the defendant with desertion. Upon this occasion and at divers other times during the ensuing years, the defendant is alleged to have stated that he had sworn confessions of certain named persons that each of them had committed adultery with plaintiff; that he would disgrace and degrade plaintiff; that her child would be taken from her by the court and that she would never be allowed to see the child again; and that he would secretly take the child from her unless she agreed to his demands. In 1925 the plaintiff apparently "partially consented," but nevertheless neglected to commence the divorce action until 1927. The matter then remained dormant until November, 1928, at which time an answer was filed and a stipulation signed by the respective attorneys that the divorce action should be tried as a default. Thereafter the interlocutory decree which it is here sought to have set aside was entered. The complaint in the present action then alleges that subsequent to the entry of said decree and between December, 1928, and April, 1929, the plaintiff for the first time ascertained that the statements and threats of the defendant were false and untrue and made solely for the purpose of intimidating and compelling plaintiff to bring the suit in divorce against her will and for the purpose of freeing the defendant from his marital obligations to plaintiff and their child.

[1-5] We find no error in the trial court's ruling sustaining the demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend. Equity will not vacate a judgment obtained through the collusive connivance of the parties to the action. To warrant such relief there must be a showing of coercion, imposition, or fraud upon the party complaining. Bancroft v. Bancroft, 178 Cal. 359, 362, 173 P. 579, L. R. A. 1918E, 1029; Lanktree v. Lanktree, 42 Cal. App. 648, 651, 183 P. 954. However, the fraud or the means of coercion must be extrinsic or collateral to the subject of dispute in the action wherein the order or judgment complained of was entered. If a judgment or order is the creature of extrinsic fraud, it may be vacated. Where, however, evidence of the coercion or duress or the fraud could have been presented to the court or to an attorney of the complainant's own choosing during the pendency of the action so that full examination of the facts could be made and full protection given to the rights of the parties, equity will not interfere but will leave the parties to the fraudulent transactions where they have placed themselves. Mitchell v. Cline, 84 Cal. 409, 416, 24 P. 164.

[6] The alleged threats to blacken the plaintiff's reputation, the charges of adultery, and the threats to deprive plaintiff of the custody of her child by court order or other means, were matters over which the plaintiff herein could have had a thorough hearing during the pendency of the divorce action. The court before whom that action was pending was in a position to determine all issues pertinent thereto, including any question as to the custody of the minor child of the parties. It also possessed the necessary vitality to compel obedience to its decrees. Plaintiff should have informed her attorney in the divorce action of all the facts here alleged, and she would have received the protection of the court in all of her marital rights. Failing to seasonably do this, it is now too late to seek relief on the grounds here urged. There is nothing in the record to indicate that the attorney representing plaintiff in the divorce action was in fact the attorney for the defendant or that he was inimical in any respect to the best interests of the plaintiff. Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 129, 133, 25 P. 970, 27 P. 537, 13 L. R. A. 336, 25 Am. St. Rep. 159. The allegations of the complaint disclose, at best, intrinsic fraud and coercion, and plaintiff is therefore concluded by the interlocutory decree of divorce procured through the collusion of the parties litigant, which decree has long since become final. It is our conclusion, therefore, that the complaint fails to present a case of equitable cognizance.

The judgment is affirmed.

CURTIS, J.

The defendant the Shere Metal Products Corporation, in a letter written to plaintiff on August 25, 1924, agreed to pay plaintiff a commission if the latter were instrumental in placing with a suitable firm certain products manufactured by said defendant, either on a royalty or straight sales basis. Thereafter plaintiff endeavored to interest the Stewart-Warner Company in these products, but without any definite results. Some three years after the date of said letter a contract was entered into under circumstances not necessary to state here between the Gat-Gun Lubricating Corporation, the successor in interest to the Shere Metal Products Corporation, and the Bassick Manufacturing Company, a subsidiary corporation of the Stewart-Warner Company, whereby the Bassick Manufacturing Company agreed on a royalty basis to manufacture and handle the products of the defendant the Gat-Gun Lubricating Company. The products referred to consisted of certain lubricating equipment which had theretofore been manufactured by the two defendant companies and for the manufacture of which they held patents issued by the government of the United States. Upon learning of the contract between the Gat-Gun Lubricating Corporation and the Bassick Manufacturing Company, the plaintiff instituted this action claiming that he was instrumental in bringing together said parties to the contract, and in their later execution of said contract. The trial court held against the plaintiff, and rendered a judgment in favor of the defendants.

On the appeal practically the sole question presented is whether the evidence is sufficient to support the findings. We have read with care the briefs of plaintiff, which are devoted almost wholly to a discussion of the evidence, and have examined the entire record before us. Our conclusion is that there is ample evidence in the record to support the findings of the trial court. It would serve no useful purpose whatever to set forth this evidence or to analyze it with reference to the issue presented. The length of time intervening between the efforts put forth by the plaintiff in his endeavor to interest the Stewart-Warner people, and the time when the contract was executed with its subsidiary corporation, and the unusual circumstances which existed just prior to the execution of said contract which were the real and effective cause of the execution thereof, indicate most strongly that plaintiff's efforts were without avail, and that plaintiff was not in any way instrumental in bringing about said contract.

The only legal question which might be involved in the case was whether the defendant the Gat-Gun Lubricating Corporation was liable on the contract entered into with the plaintiff by the Shere Metal Products Corporation, but, as the court has held that the latter corporation was in no way liable to the plaintiff, this legal question fades out of the case. In our opinion, the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

PER CURIAM.

This is an action to recover on a note secured by a deed of trust. The instruments were executed on February 14, 1923. On February 11, 1928, three days before the expiration of the four-year statute of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 337) applicable to the note, notice of breach was filed and plaintiff sued to recover thereon. Subsequently, on June 8, 1928, a sale of the property was held under the terms of the deed of trust, the proceeds were applied to the indebtedness, and an amended complaint was filed, seeking judgment for the balance remaining due. The action was not brought to recover a deficiency, and no allegation was made that the security was valueless. The lower court gave judgment for defendants on the theory that no independent suit could be maintained upon the note, but that the security must first be exhausted by the appropriate remedy under the deed of trust, and an action brought thereafter for any deficiency.

[1] The question presented by these facts is, therefore, whether it is possible to sue on a promissory note secured by a deed of trust without first exhausting the security or showing that it is valueless. This question is of great importance, and strangely enough has never been definitely settled in California. It has, however, been frequently mentioned in our decisions and discussed in the reviews. See Herbert Kraft Co. v. Bryan, 140 Cal. 73, 73 P. 745; Smiley v. Watson, 23 Cal. App. 409, 138 P. 367; Pitzel v. Maier Brewing Co., 20 Cal. App. 737, 130 P. 705, 706; Powell v. It should be made clear at the outset that the answer to this question depends solely upon the provisions of section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The common-law rule, and the general rule to-day in the absence of statute, is that upon default of the mortgagor, the mortgagee is not confined to his remedy of foreclosure, but may in addition bring suit upon the personal obligation. The above-mentioned section was designed to change this rule, and to make the mortgaged property the primary fund, to be exhausted before any other remedy could be had against the debtor. See Martin v. Becker, 169 Cal. 301, 146 P. 665, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 171; Fleming v. Fairmont & M. R. Co., 72 W. Va. 835, 79 S. E. 826, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 155, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 978; 41 C. J. 839.

[2] An examination of section 726 and of the cases which have construed it leaves no doubt as to its meaning in this connection. The statute reads in part: "There can be but one action for the recovery of any debt, or the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage upon real or personal property, which action must be in accordance with the provisions of this chapter." It will be observed that there is no statement that before any remedy can be had on a secured obligation, the security must first be exhausted. There is no general reference to "security" as such. The statute deals with mortgages, and with no other type of security. It has accordingly been held that where a pledge of property is made to secure a debt the pledgee may disregard the security and sue on the personal debt (Ehrlich v. Ewald, 66 Cal. 97, 4 P. 1062; Jones v. Evans, 6 Cal. App. 88, 91 P. 532; Commercial Savings Bank v. Hornberger, 140 Cal. 16, 73 P. 625; Marble Co. v. Merchants' National Bank, 15 Cal. App. 347, 115 P. 59; Schwartz v. Mead, 116 Cal. App. 606, 3 P.(2d) 48); where a vendor has a lien as security for the money due under the contract of sale, he may disregard it and bring a personal action against the purchaser (Samuel v. Allen, 98 Cal. 406, 33 P. 273); and where a seller reserves title to goods sold under a conditional sale as security for the price, he is not required to proceed first to exhaust the security (People's Bank v. Porter, 58 Cal. App. 41, 208 P. 200).

It must be considered as thoroughly settled in California that a deed of trust is not a mortgage. Substantial differences between the two types of security have been recognized, and statutes applicable to mortgages have generally been held inapplicable to deeds of trust. See Bayer v. Hoagland, 95 Cal. App. 403, 273 P. 58; Weber v. McCleverty, 149 Cal. 316, 86 P. 706; Bateman v. Burr, 57 Cal. 480; More v. Calkins, 95 Cal. 435, 30 P. 583, 29 Am. St. Rep. 128; Penryn Fruit Co. v. Sherman-Worrell Fruit Co., 142 Cal. 643, 76 P. 484, 100 Am. St. Rep. 150; Stockwell v. Barnum, 7 Cal. App. 413, 94 P. 400; McDonald v. Smoke Creek Live Stock Co., 209 Cal. 231, 286 P. 693; Kidd, supra, 3 Cal. L. Rev. 381; note, 12 Cal. L. Rev. 307. It necessarily follows that the deed of trust does not come within the terms of section 726, Code of Civil Procedure. Nor do any of the California cases support a contrary conclusion. Thus, Powell v. Patison, supra, the one upon which the greatest reliance is placed by defendants, was concerned with an instrument not included in the record, and the court had no means of determining whether it was a deed of trust or a mortgage. Moreover, as pointed out in Herbert Kraft Co. v. Bryan, supra, page 81 of 140 Cal., 73 P. 745, 747, the decisions cited by the court in the Powell Case were all mortgage cases. Pitzel v. Maier Brewing Co., supra, is another decision in which the nature of the instrument was uncertain, and the language of the court's opinion shows a clear understanding of the distinction between the two forms of security.

[3] The conclusion that a deed of trust does not come within the terms of section 726, Code of Civil Procedure, is made necessary not only by the express reference therein to mortgage, but also by the rest of its provisions. It is provided that there can be but one action, and that this action "must be in accordance with the provisions of this chapter." The chapter provides for the action of foreclosure by a judicial sale. If the limitations of this section are applied to deeds of trust, its benefits must also be made available. But it has been definitely determined that in the absence of unusual circumstances justifying special equitable relief, the creditor cannot "foreclose" an ordinary deed of trust, i. e., he cannot, in lieu of a trustee's sale, have a judicial sale. Bayer v. Hoagland, supra; Galusha v. Meserve, 58 Cal. App. 174, 208 P. 348.

[4] It is said that such a result as we have reached would be unreasonable, being based upon the form of the instrument, rather than the spirit of the Code. The same has been said of the entire anomalous distinction between deeds of trust and mortgages. See Hodgkins v. Wright, 127 Cal. 688, 692, 60 P. 431; Sacramento Bank v. Alcorn, 121 Cal. 379, 382, 53 P. 813; Kidd, supra, 3 Cal. L. Rev. 381. But the distinction and its incidents have survived for so long a period as to render them safe from judicial attack. The remedy for the evils attending the use of deeds of trust, if there are such, must be legislative. Any disturbance by this court of these settled rules of property would cause endless confusion and great hardship.

The judgment is reversed.

For prior opinion, see 12 P.(2d) 975.

Hickcox & Trude, of El Centro, for appellant.

Frank Birkhauser, of El Centro, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

The petition for hearing in this matter was granted in order that this court might amend the judgment entered by the District Court of Appeal of the Fourth Appellate District, otherwise the opinion written by Mr. Presiding Justice Barnard and concurred in by Associate Justice Jennings and Associate Justice Scovel, sitting pro tempore, is adopted.

This is an action on a promissory note given for $487; the complaint being in the usual form. The answer admits the execution of the note; alleges that the same was obtained from the defendant by the plaintiff by means of false and fraudulent representations; and alleges that there was no consideration therefor. The court found that all of the allegations of the complaint are true, except only the allegations that the note was given for a valuable consideration and "that same is due and owing from defendant to plaintiff"; that no false or fraudulent representations were made by the plaintiff or its agents; and that there was no consideration for the note. Judgment was entered for the defendant, followed by this appeal.

The appellant argues that the findings to the effect that the note in question was given without consideration are mere legal conclusions and not properly findings at all. While the findings upon the subject are open to criticism, we will, for the purpose of this opinion, take them as sufficient and consider the main point presented, which is that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain any such finding or conclusion, which contention we think must be sustained.

It appears from the evidence that one Jackson was in possession of certain real property in Imperial county under a lease dated April 15, 1926, and expiring February 1, 1927, upon which land he raised a crop of cotton during the year 1926. While the lease was not introduced in evidence, being only marked for identification, it appears from other evidence that appellant was to receive one-fourth of the crop produced, in return for the use of the land. The respondent made certain advances to Jackson and took a crop mortgage covering this crop of cotton. After harvesting of the crop had started, an agent of the appellant, who had heard that the crop was being delivered to the respondent, called upon him and asked him about the landlord's share. This agent testified that at that time it was agreed between them that the respondent should go ahead and sell the crop and turn in one-fourth of the proceeds to the appellant. While the respondent testified he could not remember whether such an agreement was made, it is undisputed that he then said that he would come in as soon as the crop was sold and "make return." The harvesting of the crop continued through the fall of 1926 and the early part of 1927, and at its conclusion the respondent came in and reported to appellant's agent the amount of the proceeds. At that time respondent and appellant's agent took these returns and figured out "what the one quarter share would be." The money was not paid, and on September 24, and again on September 29, 1927, the appellant's agent wrote to the respondent demanding immediate payment of the money, and threatening suit. On October 1, 1927, the respondent replied as follows:

"Your letter of Sept. 29th received and note what you have to say regarding Jackson-Polle rent.

"I am sorry to say I cannot pay this at this time, as things have been very bad this year, however, if it is satisfactory I will give you my personal note if you or your people will wait until the harvesting of the barley crop as that will be the only chance I have of collecting the money. Jackson has no money at all so if it will be satisfactory I will make you a note at 6% interest payable June 15th, 1928. * * * Please let me know if this will be satisfactory as it is all I can do at this time."

On October 19, 1927, the appellant's agent wrote the respondent that they would take his note for the amount due, being $457, if he would include interest from the preceding December, "about the time the money was due," and inclosing a note for $487, which was signed and returned. The respondent testified that this note represented one-quarter of the proceeds of the crop sold plus "some interest." He also testified that at the time he considered that the appellant "was entitled to its rent," that the appellant had threatened to sue him, and that he gave the note because he could not afford to be sued at that time. While there is some conflict in the testimony, there is no conflict on the essential facts.

[1, 2] Under well-settled rules the crop mortgage held by the respondent covered only Jackson's interest in the crop and did not cover the one-fourth share in the same to which the appellant was entitled. Sunol v. Molloy, 63 Cal. 369; Woodsend v. Chatom, 191 Cal. 72, 214 P. 965. While we think the evidence shows an agreement on the part of the respondent to sell the crop and turn over one-fourth of the proceeds to the appellant, regardless of whether or not such an agreement was made, respondent was obligated to turn over to appellant one-fourth of such proceeds, since he had sold that part of the crop to which he had no right and which belonged to the appellant. In such a situation he offered to give the note if he were given time to pay, which offer was accepted. It also appears that he gave the note to avoid being sued, which, as he says, he could not afford to have happen at that time. It not only appears that there was ample consideration for the note, but the record is without any evidence to sustain a finding and conclusion to the contrary. The respondent points out that he answered "None whatsoever" to a question as to whether there was any consideration for his signature to this note. This conclusion, of course, is not evidence.

Some contention is made by the respondent that the evidence shows that the note was given upon a representation that the appellant would let the same tenant have the land to put into a crop of barley the succeeding year. While respondent's letter of October 1, 1927, indicates that he hoped to get some money from a barley crop, it falls far short of making the note conditional upon such an event. If this contention could be sustained, it would not establish an absence of consideration; there being ample consideration, otherwise, for the note. Had such a promise been made by the appellant, it would appear to be without consideration, since the amount of the note was due from the respondent anyway. If such a representation had been made, it might have been material to a defense of misrepresentation, but the court found that no misrepresentations were, in fact, made. Furthermore, the evidence does not show a misrepresentation in this respect. When asked if the appellant or any of its agents had ever told him that either he or Jackson could have the land for the purpose of putting in a barley crop, the respondent replied that he did not remember, but that he thought one of these agents said "he would help us out." Not only is there no satisfactory evidence that such a representation was made, but there is no evidence that, if made, the appellant did not do all within its power to comply therewith. When asked how he happened to execute this note, the respondent answered: "Because when Jackson and Polle had failed that $420.00 of paying me what they owed me, I thought possibly if we could get Jackson to put this barley in, his partner had died, he got killed accidentally while this transaction was pending, to put this same piece of ground into barley, we could get the rent for the Acme Investment Corporation and I could get my $420.00, which I was in the hole on the cotton crop previous. That was my idea in signing this note and sending it to them, and Jackson failed to put the barley in."

The respondent also testified that he understood that Jackson "could not get finances to put the barley in." The respondent asks us to consider two affidavits which were filed in connection with a motion he made asking to reopen the case for further evidence. Not only are these affidavits not in the record and not properly before us, but we may add that, if they were to be considered, they would only strengthen the view we have here taken.

The note provided for an attorney's fee, and the court found, in accordance with the allegation of the complaint, that a reasonable attorney's fee in this case is $100.

The judgment is reversed.

MOULTON, State Director of Agriculture, v. WILLIAMS FRUIT CORPORATION et al. *

Civ. 8383.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 10, 1932.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Nov. 9, 1932.

1. Factors ⇐2½.

Agriculture director's action on produce dealer's bond, based on dealer's failure to pay consignors, held maintainable, although there was neither allegation nor proof of fraud, deceit, or willful negligence (St. 1927, p. 1814, § 5).

St. 1927, p. 1814, § 5, provides for both an action on the produce dealer's bond sounding in tort, based on fraud, deceit, or willful negligence and brought by the consignor, and an action sounding in debt for failure to pay consignors, brought by the director of agriculture.

2. Factors ⊂⊃2½.

That "$15 per ton guarantee" was inserted in consignment contracts did not convert them into contracts of sale so as to preclude recovery on produce dealer's bond for breach of consignment contracts (St. 1927, p. 1814, § 5).

3. Factors ⊂⊃2½.

That surety on produce dealer's bond did not know that dealer's consignment contracts contained price guaranty held not to bar recovery on bond for breach of contracts (St. 1927, p. 1814, § 5).

4. Factors ⊂⊃34.

Absent clear language in consignment contract, produce dealer cannot sell to himself (St. 1927, p. 1816, § 9).

5. Factors ⊂⊃2.

State statute regulating produce dealers held not in conflict with federal produce agency act (St. 1927, p. 1812; 7 USCA § 491 et seq., and § 496).

6. Commerce ⊂⊃57.

State statute regulating produce dealers held not violative of commerce clause (St. 1927, p. 1812; Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, cl. 3).

St. 1927, p. 1812, is an attempt on the part of the Legislature to regulate dealers, not commerce; the statute does not purport to regulate the price, size, or form of the package, the grade or grades of the contents, the weight of the package or of the shipment, the manner of the shipment, the route of the shipment, or any other feature of commerce, but it seeks to prohibit fraud and impositions on the part of the shipper as against the producer, and to this end requires that the produce dealer give a bond and take out a license.

7. Commerce ⊂⊃48.

That state statute incidentally or indirectly affects interstate commerce does not render statute invalid, if otherwise reasonable exercise of police power (Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, cl. 3).

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; C. J. Goodell, Judge.

Action by Dudley Moulton, as State Director of Agriculture, against the Williams Fruit Corporation and the American Surety Company of New York. Judgment for plaintiff, and the last named defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Joseph G. De Forest, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank English, Deputy Atty. Gen. (C. J. Carey, of San Francisco, of counsel), for the People.

STURTEVANT, J.

The plaintiff commenced an action to recover on a statutory bond. It named as defendants the Williams Fruit Corporation, the principal on the bond, and American Surety Company of New York, the surety on the bond. Both defendants were served, but the surety company only appeared and answered. The trial court made findings in favor of the plaintiff, and from the judgment entered thereon the surety company has appealed.

By chapter 860 of the Statutes of 1927 (page 1812), a statute was enacted for the bonding, licensing, regulation, and supervision of produce dealers. On March 1, 1928, the Williams Fruit Corporation applied to the state director of agriculture for a license. As a part of its application, it delivered to the director of agriculture the bond in suit. Later a license was issued and the principal commenced business. Thereafter, being informed that the Williams Fruit Corporation had not paid the producers in accordance with the terms of its contracts, the state director of agriculture caused them to file their claims, and thereon he commenced this action in their behalf. Five producers filed claims. Each claim was based on a written contract which was made on a printed blank. Each contract was identical except as to names of persons and places and the quantity of produce covered by the contract. Under each document the grower "* * * places on consignment with shipper the entire crop. * * " The shipper " * * accepts said consignment and agrees to market same to best possible advantage in its judgment at various cities in the United States, Canada and Cuba." In one of the blanks on each document there was inserted with pen and ink, "$15 per ton guarantee." The verified claims showed that the shipper afterwards paid each grower something, but that it had not paid any one of the growers the full sum of $15 per ton, and that the balance so unpaid amounted to $5,225.21.

[1] 1. The defendant contends it is not liable because there was no breach of any provision of the bond. It then asserts that there was neither allegation nor proof of "* * * fraud, deceit or wilful negligence * * " on the part of the Williams Fruit Corporation. It was not necessary that there should be. In section 5 of the statute it is provided: " * Said bond shall be conditioned upon compliance with the provisions of the act and upon the faithful and honest handling of farm products in accordance with the terms of this act." In the same section it is provided: (a) "Any consignor of farm products claiming to be injured by the fraud, deceit or wilful negligence of any produce dealer may bring action upon said bond against both principal and surety in any court of competent jurisdiction to recover the damages caused by such fraud, deceit and wilful negligence, or the failure to comply with the provisions of this act. (b) In case of failure by a produce dealer to pay consignor creditors for farm produce received from said consignors to be sold, the state director of agriculture shall proceed forthwith to ascertain the names and addresses of all consignor creditors of such produce dealer, together with the amounts due and owing to them and each of them by such produce dealer, and shall request all such consignor creditors to file a verified statement of their respective claims with the state director of agriculture. Thereupon the state director of agriculture is hereby authorized to and shall proceed forthwith to bring an action on the bond in behalf of said consignor creditors which has been filed in the department by said produce dealer." (Parentheses ours.) As we read this statute, actions sounding in tort are provided for in subdivision (a) and actions sounding in debt are provided for in subdivision (b). Actions of the class first named are to be maintained by the producer, while those of the second class are to be maintained by the director. Each may sue on the bond. Looking back at the condition of the bond, it will be seen that it covers all of the actions just mentioned. The allegations of the complaint in the instant case were addressed to claims in debt, and those allegations were fully sustained by the proof.

[2-4] 2. The defendant asserts that the contracts made between the dealer and the producers show a sale and not a consignment. The statement is not sustained by the record. Before the blanks were filled, each contract was a clean-cut contract of consignment. In each contract, with pen and ink, there was inserted "$15 per ton guarantee." Stressing the matter of that insertion, the defendant claims that it converted a contract of consignment into a contract of sale. We think it had no such effect. Each document was but a consignment contract which guaranteed to the grower $15 per ton. As such it was enforceable in this state. In Pugh v. Porter Brothers Co., 118 Cal. 628, at page 631, 50 P. 772, 773, the court said: "His position under the guaranty is similar to that which would have arisen had he taken the goods on a del credera commission, only that, instead of merely guarantying the sales that he may make, he also guarantees that the goods shall be sold for a fixed amount. His liability to his principal for this amount becomes absolute upon a sale for cash, or, if upon credit, upon the maturity of the credit. [Citing cases.]" The defendant says: "In the case at bar it is not merely a consignment, because the produce dealer guarantees to the grower a price of $15 per ton—this makes it a sale, and we are not liable on the bond for the purchase price." It will be conceded at once that cases can be conceived in which the parties executed a contract to buy and sell whereas it might have been the intention of one or both to execute a contract of consignment containing a guaranty of the price or some other guarantee. In the instant case it will suffice to state that the words used by the contracting parties did not constitute a contract to buy and sell, but did constitute a contract of consignment. The fact that the contract contained a guaranty of the price was not out of the ordinary. Such contracts are common and are enforceable. Pugh v. Porter Brothers Co., supra; 25 C. J. 367. This defendant asserts that it had no information regarding the insertion of the guaranty covenant. Perhaps not. Perhaps it did not have any information regarding other covenants, but those were matters for it to take up with the dealer and with which the plaintiff was in no manner concerned. The defendant also asserts that the producers consented that the dealer might sell to itself. There is not a word in the contract to that effect. There was no proof to that effect. In the absence of clear language on that subject in the contracts, the right did not exist. It was expressly inhibited by the provisions of section 9 of the statute.

[5] 3. It is next contended that the state statute is in conflict with the Act of Congress known as the "Produce Agency Act" (7 USCA § 491 et seq.). A comparison of the two shows no conflict, and, furthermore, section 3 of the congressional act (7 USCA § 496) expressly contemplates such enactments by the states. The language is as follows: "This chapter shall not abrogate nor nullify any other statute, whether State or Federal, dealing with the same subjects as this chapter, but it is intended that all such statutes shall remain in full force and effect, except in so far only as they are inconsistent herewith or repugnant hereto."

[6, 7] 4. Finally the defendant asserts that the state statute is unconstitutional because it conflicts with the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution. It cites and relies on Lemke v. Farmers' Grain Co., 258 U. S. 50, 42 S. Ct. 244, 66 L. Ed. 458; Shafer v. Farmers' Grain Co., 268 U. S. 189, 45 S. Ct. 481, 69 L. Ed. 909; Stafford v. Wallace, 258 U. S. 495, 42 S. Ct. 397, 66 L. Ed. 735, 23 A. L. R. 229. Those cases are not at all helpful in the instant case. It will be conceded that wholesale quantities of grapes were the subject-matter of the contract executed between the producers and the dealer, and that the grapes were intended to go, and did go, into interstate commerce. It will be conceded also that grapes were one of the products within the contemplation of the Legislature when it enacted chapter 860 of the Statutes of 1927. However, a reading of that statute shows an attempt on the part of the Legislature to regulate dealers, but it does not contain a trace of an attempt to regulate commerce. The statute does not purport to regulate the price, the size, or form of the package, the grade or grades of the contents, the weight of the package or of the shipment, the manner of the shipment, the route of the shipment, or any other feature whatsoever of commerce. It does seek to prohibit fraud and impositions on the part of the shipper as against the producer. That one dealing in interstate commerce may not commit acts of fraud and other unfair dealings and claim that he is protected by the commerce clause of the Constitution is perfectly clear. No one of the cases cited by defendant is authority to the effect that a sovereign state may not, because of article 1, § 8, clause 3, of the Federal Constitution, enact and enforce statutes confined within the police powers reserved unto the states. Many cases hold it can. Some of the leading cases so holding are Missouri, Kansas & Texas R. Co. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 613, 628, 18 S. Ct. 488, 42 L. Ed. 878; Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U. S. 461, 15 S. Ct. 154, 39 L. Ed. 223; Savage v. Jones, 225 U. S. 501, 525, 32 S. Ct. 715, 56 L. Ed. 1182. In Plumley v. Massachusetts, supra, at page 468 of 155 U. S., 15 S. Ct. 154, 156, Mr. Justice Harlan, writing the opinion of the court, said: "If any one thinks that oleomargarine, not artificially colored so as to cause it to look like butter, is as palatable or as wholesome for purposes of food as pure butter, he is, as already observed, at liberty, under the statute of Massachusetts, to manufacture it in that state, or to sell it there in such manner as to inform the customer of its real character. He is only forbidden to practice, in such matters, a fraud upon the general public. The statute seeks to suppress false pretenses and to promote fair dealing in the sale of an article of food. It compels the sale of oleomargarine for what it really is, by preventing its sale for what it is not. Can it be that the constitution of the United States secures to any one the privilege of manufacturing and selling an article of food in such manner as to induce the mass of people to believe that they are buying something which, in fact, is wholly different from that which is offered for sale? Does the freedom of commerce among the states demand a recognition of the right to practice a deception upon the public in the sale of any articles, even those that may have become the subject of trade in different parts of the country?" Chapter 860, Statutes of 1927, does nothing more, and even then it but demands that a bond be given and a license taken out. No claim is even made that it goes further. No case is cited and we have found not one that holds that such a statute is invalid. Several well-considered cases hold such provisions are not invalid. Real Silk Hosiery Mills v. City of Portland (D. C.) 294 F. 587; Engel v. O'Malley, 219 U. S. 128, 31 S. Ct. 190, 55 L. Ed. 128; Hall v. Geiger-Jones Co., 242 U. S. 539, 37 S. Ct. 217, 61 L. Ed. 480, L. R. A. 1917F, 514, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 643; Payne v. State of Kansas, 248 U. S. 112, 39 S. Ct. 32, 63 L. Ed. 153; State v. Wagener, 77 Minn. 483, 80 N. W. 633, 778, 1134, 46 L. R. A. 442, 77 Am. St. Rep. 681, 689; Brass v. Stoeser, 153 U. S. 391, 14 S. Ct. 857, 38 L. Ed. 757. The mere fact, if it be a fact, that the state statute incidentally or indirectly affects interstate commerce, does not operate to render the state statute invalid, if it is otherwise a reasonable exercise of the police power. In Savage v. Jones, supra, at page 525 of 225 U. S., 32 S. Ct. 715, 722, the court said: "But when the local police regulation has real relation to the suitable protection of the people of the state, and is reasonable in its requirements, it is not invalid because it may incidentally affect interstate commerce, provided it does not conflict with legislation enacted by Congress pursuant to its constitutional authority. [Citing many cases.]"

Appellant, the next of kin of the deceased, appeals from the decree of final distribution in the above-entitled case.

By said decree the estate was distributed in accordance with the provisions of the will and codicils of the deceased. In the trial court appellant objected to such distribution on the ground that a provision of the second codicil, which was executed within thirty days of the death of the testator, was invalid under section 1313 of the Civil Code (now section 41 of the Probate Code). The provision of the codicil claimed to be invalid reads as follows: "In addition to the bequest and devise of one-fourth of the rest and residue of my estate in paragraph 'Twelfth' of my said will and testament made to the person who at my death shall be the pastor in charge of St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Church at San Jose, California, I give, devise and bequeath unto such person, one-half of the rest and residue of my estate of every kind and character and wheresoever situated to be used by such person to procure masses to be said for the repose of my soul."

Under this provision the specified portion of the residue of the estate, amounting in value to about $5,000, was distributed to Rev. Richard Collins, who was the pastor of the designated church at the time of the death of the deceased, "to procure masses to be celebrated for the repose of the soul of the decedent."

The question presented on this appeal requires a consideration of the nature of a bequest to a pastor for the purposes of masses for the repose of the soul of the testator. On this general subject the authorities are far from harmonious. As pointed out in the Estate of Lennon, 152 Cal. 327, 92 P. 870, 125 Am. St. Rep. 58, 14 Ann. Cas. 1024, masses for the dead were called "a superstitious use," and were forbidden by statute in England. In this country we find no such statutes, but nevertheless bequests for masses have not always been upheld. The case of Festorazzi v. St. Joseph's Catholic Church of Mobile, 104 Ala. 327, 18 So. 394, 25 L. R. A. 360, 53 Am. St. Rep. 48, illustrates the difficulty which the courts have encountered in attempting to classify this type of bequest. There the bequest was "to be used in solemn masses for the repose of my soul." The court was divided, but held the bequest invalid. The writer of the opinion reasons that the bequest could not be upheld as a direct gift as it was in the nature of a trust; that it could not be upheld as a trust for a charitable use as the bequest "is, according to the religious belief of the testator, for the benefit alone of his own soul, and cannot be upheld as a public charity without offending every principle of law by which such charities are supported;" and further, that "it is not valid as a private trust, for the want of a living beneficiary."

Such bequests, however, have been looked upon with favor and upheld in most jurisdictions, but not always upon the same grounds. In some jurisdictions bequests to pastors for the purpose of masses have been treated as valid gifts to the pastors and not as trusts. Sherman v. Baker, 20 R. I. 446, 40 A. 11, 40 L. R. A. 717; Harrison v. Brophy, 59 Kan. 1, 51 P. 883, 40 L. R. A. 721; In re Zimmerman's Will, 22 Misc. 411, 50 N. Y. S. 395; In re Howard's Estate, 5 Misc. 295, 25 N. Y. S. 1111. This view appears to be the one adopted by our own Supreme Court. Estate of Hamilton, 181 Cal. 758, at page 764, 186 P. 587. In other jurisdictions bequests for masses have been sustained as private trusts despite the fact that there is no living beneficiary. Moran v. Moran, 104 Iowa, 216, 73 N. W. 617, 618, 39 L. R. A. 204, 65 Am. St. Rep. 443. Still other jurisdictions have felt the necessity of treating such bequests as charitable trusts in order to sustain them. Obrecht v. Pujos, 206 Ky. 751, 268 S. W. 564; In re Kavanaugh's Will, 143 Wis. 90, 126 N. W. 672, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 470; Morris v. Edwards, 227 N. Y. 141, 124 N. E. 724; Hoeffer v. Clogan, 171 Ill. 462, 49 N. E. 527, 40 L. R. A. 730, 63 Am. St. Rep. 241. In Moran v. Moran, supra, the bequest read, "I will and bequeath to the Catholic priest who may be the pastor of the Beaver Catholic Church when this will shall be executed three hundred dollars, that masses may be said for me." The court held that no charitable trust was created, but sustained this provision as a valid private trust. The court said at page 622 of 73 N. W., 104 Iowa, 216, 39 L. R. A. 204, 65 Am. St. Rep. 443: "We have said that this bequest, if the priest should accept the money, is a private trust; and we think it possesses the essential elements of such a trust, as much as it would if the object were the erection of a monument or the doing of any other act intended alone to perpetuate the memory or name of the testator. But even if there is a technical departure, because of no living beneficiary, still the bequest is valid." The court there also said on the same page: "It is not wise, in such cases, for courts to quibble about technical trusts or beneficiaries. Results are of greater importance than technical names, and a bequest for a known lawful purpose, where the power of execution is prescribed and available, should never fail for want of a name or a legal classification, unless it is in obedience to a positive rule of law."

Before discussing the authorities in this jurisdiction, we should further analyze the precise question before us. Section 1313 of the Civil Code, so far as it may have any application to the present case, reads as follows: "No estate, real or personal, shall be bequeathed or devised to any charitable or benevolent society or corporation, or to any person or persons in trust for charitable uses, except the same be done by will duly executed at least thirty days before the decease of the testator." In the present case we find no bequest to "any charitable or benevolent society or corporation." We are dealing with a bequest to a person, and, unless such bequest was "in trust for charitable uses," the above-mentioned section has no application. Appellant contends that such bequest is one "in trust for charitable uses," while respondent contends that there is no trust, and at any rate that there is no trust for a charitable use. In our opinion, appellant's contention cannot be sustained.

Our attention has been called to but two cases in this jurisdiction dealing with this question of bequests for masses. In Estate of Lennon, 152 Cal. 327, 92 P. 870, 871, 125 Am. St. Rep. 58, 14 Ann. Cas. 1024, a bequest of $3,500 to Bishop Conaty "to have the same amount of masses celebrated as soon as possible for my soul" was held not to be "a bequest for charity or charitable use" within the meaning of section 1313 of the Civil Code. Subsequently the Supreme Court had under consideration several bequests of a somewhat similar nature in Estate of Hamilton, 181 Cal. 758, 186 P. 587. On pages 764 and 765 of the opinion in 181 Cal., 186 P. 587, 589, the court considered the bequests made by the testator to the pastors of several churches "for masses for the repose of the soul of one John P. Gallagher," and held said section 1313 was not applicable as these bequests created no trust. The court points out that, while the pastors "receive the money upon the obligation to offer masses as required, such obligation does not go to the use or disposition of the money." The court there considered other bequests to certain bishops of the Roman Catholic Church for masses for the repose of the souls of the testator and other persons to be said in certain designated churches within the jurisdiction of said bishops, and held section 1313 of the Civil Code to be applicable to such bequests. The distinction made by the court was that the last-mentioned bequests created trusts, as it was intended that the bishop "would use the legacy, not for his own benefit or as he saw fit, but for paying the stipends of the pastors in whost churches and by whom the masses were to be offered," and that the obligation of the bishop "was one as to the disposition and use of the money given him." The court then proceeded to declare that under the evidence before it, "as to the purposes and results of the mass according to the doctrine of the church," such a bequest "in trust for masses is a trust for charitable uses."

We do not believe that the evidence before us on this subject is the same as the evidence considered by the court in Estate of Hamilton, supra. The Supreme Court there discussed the opinion in Estate of Lennon, supra, and said that the question of whether the bequest for masses is a bequest for a charitable use is "purely a question of fact, a question as to the purposes and results of the mass according to the doctrine of the church, and if in the present case the evidence as to the fact is different and requires a different conclusion, effect must be given to it." But it is unnecessary for us to discuss the evidence in the present case relating to the primary object, character, purposes, and results of the masses said for the repose of the soul of a particular person. Here we are concerned with a bequest to a pastor for the purpose of such masses, and, even if the evidence in this case relating to such masses led to the conclusion on that subject reached by the court in Estate of Hamilton, supra, still there is no trust, for, while such pastor "will receive the money upon the obligation to offer masses as required, such obligation does not go to the use or disposition of the money."

A bequest to an individual does not come within the meaning of section 1313 of the Civil Code, unless it is a bequest both "in trust" and "for charitable uses." This is clearly indicated in Estate of Hamilton, at page 772 of 181 Cal., 186 P. 587, 592, where the court said: "Section 1313, Civil Code, provides no limitation upon gifts in general for charitable purposes. It places such limitation only upon gifts to charitable corporations or societies or in trust for charitable uses. The bequests in this case to the pastors do not come in either of these classes."

In the present case the bequest was to the pastor with no direction as to the place or places in which or the person or persons by whom the masses should be said. The pastor was himself a Catholic priest who was capable of celebrating the masses, and he could celebrate all of the masses himself or he could, if he saw fit, obtain the co-operation of other priests for that purpose. There is nothing to show that the testator intended to impose any obligation on the pastor other than the obligation to see that the masses were said and he was not required to go beyond his own efforts to fulfill this obligation. In other words, the obligation did not "go to the use and disposition of the money" and there was no trust. Estate of Hamilton, supra; Sherman v. Baker, supra; Harrison v. Brophy, supra; In re Zimmerman's Will, supra; In re Howard's Estate, supra.

The decree of final distribution is affirmed.

Alfred W. Robertson and L. M. Crawford, both of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

James W. Briscoe, of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J.

The defendant executed and delivered to the plaintiff his promissory note dated November 2, 1922, made payable ninety days after date. There is ample evidence to sustain the court's finding that the note remains wholly unpaid. By defendant's answer to the complaint he denied the alleged fact of nonpayment, and asserted that the entire amount had been paid. Defendant further set forth that on March 19, 1923, defendant settled the entire obligation of the said promissory note and received a receipt in full satisfaction therefor from the plaintiff. Said receipt was introduced in evidence and was signed by both plaintiff and defendant on its date March 19, 1923. The body of the instrument reads as follows: "The undersigned, each for himself, acknowledges that all claims, demands and obligations existing between them to this date, have been settled; except that W. C. Paulton acknowledges that he holds forty (40) shares of stock of the Paulton Oil Company which belong to L. N. Knight, and will be delivered to him on demand."

The amount of the promissory note was a balance due from defendant to plaintiff for the drilling of an oil well by plaintiff for defendant. Under a separate contract the plaintiff drilled another oil well for the Paulton Oil Company, which company had been organized for the purposes of the business which theretofore was the individual business of defendant, Paulton. The defendant claimed that the foregoing receipt constituted conclusive evidence of payment of the note. Plaintiff on the other hand claimed that the receipt related entirely to the business transactions of the plaintiff with the Paulton Oil Company, of which Paulton was president.

According to the testimony of the plaintiff there was a settlement on March 19, 1923, of his transactions with Paulton Oil Company, but it did not include said promissory note or relate to the same in any manner, and in fact said note remains wholly unpaid. The court by its amended findings decided that the said receipt was obtained by the defendant from the plaintiff by fraud, and that it was not intended by the parties that said instrument was an acknowledgment of payment of the promissory note. From an examination of the evidence we conclude that the evidence is sufficient to sustain this finding. And even if the defendant did not have any fraudulent intent in the drafting and execution of the receipt, nevertheless, in view of the finding that the parties did not intend that said receipt should refer to the note, and that the note has not in fact been paid, the attempted defense based upon said receipt must fail.

The amended finding to which we have referred was made in connection with the court's ruling on defendant's motion for a new trial. Such amendment is permitted by section 662, Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] Appellant contends that the order denying new trial and the amended findings of fact were filed more than sixty days after notice of entry of judgment, and that therefore the court was without authority to make such amended findings. Code Civ. Proc. § 660. But appellant has not made reference to any page of the record showing that there ever was any notice of entry of judgment in this case either served or filed. Therefore the sixty-day period began to run on the day of service of the notice of intention to move for a new trial. The record shows that the court acted within that time.

[2] Appellant contends not only that the instrument relied upon by him constitutes a release, but further contends that the court erred in admitting the evidence which was admitted to show that the receipt did not apply and was not intended to apply to said promissory note. We are of the opinion that the said instrument does not on its face definitely purport to say that the said note or any such instrument has been paid. It is merely an acknowledgment by the respective parties "that all claims, demands and obligations existing between them to this date, have been settled." It is entirely consistent with such an admission that the settlement referred to may have been a settlement accomplished by the giving of the note and not by its payment. We see nothing in the nature of the instrument which makes it sufficient in its force and effect to exclude the explanatory testimony which was received by the court.

The judgment is affirmed.

PER CURIAM.

An appeal by plaintiff from an order entered on March 17, 1931, amending an interlocutory decree of divorce and denying plaintiff's motion to set aside the judgment as amended.

At the conclusion of the trial of the action findings were waived, and on January 2, 1930, an interlocutory decree of divorce was granted to the plaintiff. The material parts of the decree are as follows: "* * * It is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed that a divorce ought to be granted to said plaintiff from said defendant, and that said plaintiff is entitled to a divorce from said defendant on the grounds of defendant's extreme cruelty toward plaintiff, and (it being stipulated in open court by the parties hereto as and for a property settlement herein) that defendant and cross-complainant have the community household furniture, and that plaintiff pay to defendant and cross-complainant the sum of twelve hundred fifty ($1,250) dollars in the following manner, to wit: not less than sixty-five ($65.) dollars on the 1st day of January 1930, and not less than sixty-five ($65.) dollars on the first day of each and every month thereafter until the whole sum of said twelve hundred fifty ($1,250) dollars has been paid in full."

The order complained of directed that the decree be amended by inserting therein the following: "That in pursuance of said stipulation it is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed that plaintiff pay to defendant the sum of twelve hundred and fifty ($1,250) dollars in the following manner, to wit, not less than sixty-five ($65.) dollars on the 1st day of January 1930, and not less than sixty-five ($65.) dollars on the 1st day of each and every month thereafter until the whole sum of twelve hundred fifty ($1,250) dollars has been paid in full."

Plaintiff claims that the error, if any, sought to be corrected by the motion was judicial rather than clerical, and that the court had lost jurisdiction by lapse of time to correct its judgment.

[1-3] As to this objection it will be sufficient to say that the power to correct its record to accord with the facts, where the error appears on the face of the record, is not lost by mere lapse of time. City and County of San Francisco v. Brown, 153 Cal. 644, 96 P. 281. But whether the alleged error was clerical or judicial in its nature we think it unnecessary to determine. Judgments are to have a reasonable intendment (34 Cor. Jur., Judgments, p. 502), and where it admits of two constructions, that one will be adopted which is consonant with the judgment which should have been rendered on the facts and law of the case. Watson v. Lawson, 166 Cal. 235, 135 P. 961. It has been said that: "Wherever the entry of a judgment is so obscure as not to clearly express the exact determination of the court, reference may be had to the pleadings and the other proceedings; and if, with the light thus thrown upon such entry, its obscurity is dispelled and its intended signification made apparent, the judgment will be upheld and carried into effect * * * as though its meaning and intendment were made clear and manifest by its own terms." Black on Judgments, § 123; Clay v. Hildebrand, 34 Kan. 694, 9 P. 466, 470. By rejecting that part of the decree as originally entered which reads "(it being stipulated in open court by the parties hereto as and for a property settlement herein)" —which is obviously surplusage—we have a decree following exactly the terms of the admitted stipulation between the parties, as clearly appears on the face of the record to have been the court's intention, namely, that its judgment should be in accordance therewith. This being true, appellant was not injured by the order subsequently made, and not being an aggrieved party, had no grounds for appeal. 2 Cal. Jur., Appeal and Error, sec. 56, p. 215; Custis v. Gehele, 177 Cal. 455, 170 P. 1109.

The order is affirmed.

Affirmed.

CRAIG, Acting P. J.

In an action for damages by the owner of real property against the vendor of a building for its removal therefrom prior to foreclosure of a deed of trust of such owner and his purchase at a sale thereunder, judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed.

[1] The arguments are devoted mainly to a controversy as to whether or not said building was a fixture. It appeared that the appellant had sold the same to one Miller, the original owner and trustor under the respondent's deed of trust, and had placed it upon a foundation built on the premises for said building. It is earnestly insisted that there was evidence tending to show that the building was not actually set upon its foundation, but the appellant concedes that "on the other hand there was evidence on the part of the plaintiff that the house was let down on the foundation." The finding below was that "a foundation was constructed under said house and that a framework was built on said foundation under said house; and that thereafter said house was lowered upon said framework and rested firmly upon said foundation and became affixed and attached thereto." The mere erection of a building upon realty does not necessarily make it a fixture, but whether in any case a building so placed has become such is a question of fact to be determined by the trial court. Miller v. Waddingham, 91 Cal. 377, 27 P. 750, 13 L. R. A. 680. In view of the finding of the trial court upon a conflict of evidence the question presented does not permit of serious consideration upon appeal.

[2] The appellant sought to prove conversations asserted to have occurred between Miller and the defendant, at which the respondent was not present, and the court, at one point, excluded them. This might have shed light on the intention of these parties as to whether or not the house was to be affixed to the realty, but it is unnecessary to give this assignment consideration because the defendant was afterwards permitted to relate the entire conversation between Miller and himself when the bargain was made.

Finally, it is contended that the original owner and trustor by a fraudulent representation to the appellant as to the amount of the respondent's lien upon the premises, entitled the appellant to introduce evidence of such fact. It is not denied that the deed of trust was recorded at the time of the sale of the building, nor does it appear that the respondent was a party to any such representation or fraud.

From what has been said, we think the appellant's contentions are covered, and that error does not appear.

The judgment is affirmed.

BERZIN v. STATE INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

Civ. 8200.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 26, 1932.

1. Master and servant ⇐403.

Compensation claimant has burden of proving injuries complained of.

2. Master and servant ⇐405(4).

Evidence in compensation proceeding failed to establish that grinder's impaired vision, sores, and infection of lungs resulted from dust and sparks of grinding processes (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended).

Facts disclosed that claimant was employed as a grinder whose work consisted of grinding brass, iron, and steel castings on an emery wheel, that a small particle of steel had injured claimant's eye, but that, after such speck was removed, the eye was cured and no disability resulted, that the open sores complained of were not from sparks while employed as grinder, but skin infections known as boils, and that, though there was some evidence of bronchial and heart affection, there was no positive evidence of pneumoconiosis calling for liability under Compensation Act.

3. Master and servant ⇐405(4).

To create liability under Compensation Act, there must be established by preponderant evidence an unbroken causal connection between injury and employment or working conditions (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended).

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by H. Berzin, claimant, for injuries, opposed by the Pacific Electric Manufacturing Corporation, employer, and the State Compensation Insurance Fund, insurer. To review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation for injuries, claimant brings certiorari.

Modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

Arthur D. Klang and William Sea, Jr., both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

A. I. Townsend, of San Francisco, for respondents.

JOHNSON, Justice pro tem.

This is a proceeding to review an award made by the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of the petitioner, H. Berzin, but which he contends furnishes insufficient compensation for the injury suffered.

From February, 1927, to July 16, 1930, Berzin was employed by the Pacific Electric Manufacturing Corporation as a grinder, whose work consisted of grinding brass, copper, iron, and steel castings on an emery wheel. In such grinding operations dust is created, and, unless drawn off by mechanical devices, beclouds the atmosphere. Moreover, at times sparks fly from the metals as they are ground, and exposed parts of the body may thereby be burned. To carry off the dust and catch the sparks, blowers and guards were installed in October, 1929; but the system previously employed was not equally effective, and, while that system was in use, considerable dust generated by the grinding machines spread through the factory.

In June, 1930, sores appeared on Berzin's chest and arms, which, he said, were caused by burns due to flying sparks. He applied to the nurse in attendance at the plant, who, upon examination, concluded that he was suffering from boils or carbuncles, and applied a salve used to give relief from such ills.

Berzin left work on June 28, and on June 30 he was sent by his employer, or its insurance carrier, the state compensation insurance fund, to Dr. A. C. Armstrong, whose diagnosis was that there were numerous second degree infected burns on the chest and left forearm, for which treatment was given. There was also found to be a small piece of steel in the right corneal margin which had been there a few days; and for the removal of this Berzin was sent to an oculist, who did what was needful. After receiving treatment for his ailments, Berzin returned to work on July 17, and continued to August 12. While he was under treatment, he had made application to the Illinois Pacific Coast Company for employment, and on August 22 he began work there in the corrugated fiber products department, and continued to October 15, 1930, when lack of work caused him to be laid off.

Berzin presented his application for compensation to the commission on July 15, 1930, and thereafter an amended application was filed on which a hearing was had. In this latter application he specified that he had sustained injury to the lungs through inhaling the dust produced in the grinding processes, that the chest had been burned by sparks, and that there was an infection of the right eye. After taking considerable testimony, the commission found that Berzin had sustained an injury in that a foreign body entered the right eye and sparks had caused minor burns on the chest, but that any other symptoms were not caused or exacerbated by such injury. The commission found further that Berzin was entitled to compensation for temporary total disability from June 28 to July 16, 1930, in the sum of $23.48, and made an award in that amount less a certain payment made. It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that the vision of the right eye was impaired, that infection from burns is continuing to cause sores to break out on various parts of the body, and that the lungs have been infected by dust inhaled in the grinding processes. And it is insisted that, as a result of such injuries, the petitioner has been incapacitated for work, and that the award does not afford reasonable compensation.

So far as the eye is concerned, the evidence shows that there was a small particle of steel in the corneal margin of the right eye, and that, after that speck had been removed, and office treatment had been given for seven days by the oculist, the inflammation in the eye was cured, and no disability resulted. The weakened vision of which the petitioner complains appears to be that common to advancing years.

Regarding sores on the body, which have broken out from time to time since Berzin's employment as a grinder ceased, the medical testimony of Dr. Newman and Dr. Kruse is strongly to the effect that he is a sufferer from small skin infections, known as furuncles or boils, and that they are attributable to two causes having no relation to his employment, but due to Berzin's own bodily conditions. The medical reports show that he has an oily skin, technically called seborrheic skin, which spontaneously develops furuncles; and, in addition, there are evidences of diabetes, which is also a frequent cause of the same trouble. These two conditions are said to be sufficient to cause recurring furuncles.

In making its findings the commission gave Berzin the benefit of Dr. Armstrong's report that at the time his treatment of Berzin began Berzin was suffering from burns; but there is no evidence that would justify a finding that any sores which developed at a later time were caused by any of the conditions of the employment.

In respect of alleged injury to the lungs, Berzin said that about January, 1930, his chest began to feel heavy; that he suffered from dizziness and loss of appetite, and felt sick all the time. According to the medical report made by Dr. Kruse in June, 1931, Berzin complained to him at that time of continual pounding in the chest, and of shortness of breath, especially when exerting himself and when lying down at night. The X-ray report showed "increased bronchial markings" in the lungs but no active disease. Berzin's general health was affected by inflammation of the bladder, infection due to pyorrhea, and some degree of arteriosclerosis. Dr. Kruse attributed the shortness of breath, the pounding of the heart and the feeling of weakness to constitutional factors, and not to any industrial injury.

[1-3] The burden of proving the injuries of which the petitioner complained was upon him; and from the evidence it cannot be said as a matter of law that at the time of the hearing he was suffering from a compensable disability proximately caused by the conditions of his former employment, or that there was at any previous time a disability other than that for which due compensation was awarded.

There is some evidence of bronchial and heart affection, and there is a possibility that these conditions may have some connection with Berzin's employment as a grinder. While blowers to carry off the dust were installed in October, 1929, Berzin was exposed to a dust-laden atmosphere from the time of his employment in February, 1927, to October, 1929, or a period of about two years and eight months. Such conditions sometimes cause a latent and progressive disease known as pneumoconiosis, denoting a disease of the lungs due to dust, which may induce respiratory infections, and which may not culminate in a disability until long after exposure has ceased. At the time of the hearing, however, there were no positive evidences of pneumoconiosis in this case, and liability under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended) cannot be made to rest on surmise or conjecture. There must always be established by preponderant evidence an unbroken causal connection between the injury and the employment or the conditions under which the employee was required to perform his work, and any award made must have for its basis a firm foundation of fact. London G. & A. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 202 Cal. 239, 241, 259 P. 1096, 54 A. L. R. 1392; Singlaub v. Ind. Acc. Com., 87 Cal. App. 324, 332, 262 P. 411; Madore v. New Departure Mfg. Co., 104 Conn. 709, 712–716, 134 A. 259.

In the record before us in this case we find nothing that would justify us in annulling the award of the commission. But, inasmuch as the medical report indicates traces of bronchitis, which sometimes develops from pneumoconiosis as a secondary effect long after exposure has ceased, we do not think that the findings and award should bar the petitioner from renewing his application in case there shall hereafter be proof that a latent and progressive disease was contracted by Berzin by reason of inhalation of dust in performing the duties of his employment, and that a compensable injury has proximately resulted therefrom. Such privilege can be safeguarded by modification of the award so that it shall be without prejudice to a right of renewal under the conditions stated.

It is ordered that the last sentence of the award, now reading, "It is ordered that the employer herein be dismissed and discharged from liability herein," be, and it is, modified to read: "It is ordered that the employer herein be dismissed and discharged from liability herein, but without prejudice to the right of the applicant, H. Berzin, to renewal of his application for adjustment of claim for compensation, in case there shall hereafter be proof that a latent and progressive disease was contracted by said applicant by reason of inhalation of dust in the course of, and out of, his employment by his said employer, Pacific Electric Manufacturing Corporation, and that a compensable injury has proximately resulted therefrom." As so modified, the award is affirmed.

SCOTT v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR ALAMEDA COUNTY et al.

Civ. 8208.

Proceeding for probate of will is proceeding in rem, and order of admission to probate, when it becomes effective, is binding on all interested persons.

One year within which to file petition to revoke probate of will commenced when remittitur affirming order of probate was filed (Code Civ. Proc. § 1327).

Proceeding in prohibition by Maud Scott, also known as Marion Scott, against the Superior Court in and for Alameda County and another.

Alternative writ discharged, and application for peremptory denied.

Livingston & Livingston, of San Francisco, for respondents.

JOHNSON, Justice pro tem.

This is a proceeding in prohibition instituted to restrain the court having jurisdiction of the estate of Leon Morrison, deceased, from entertaining any proceedings upon a petition filed on January 7, 1927, to revoke an order made August 14, 1923, admitting to probate an instrument purporting to be the last will of the decedent. The applicant for the writ contends that the petition for revocation was filed too late, and that consequently the court is without jurisdiction to entertain it.

Leon Morrison died on June 20, 1921, and, after a contest by the state of California, an instrument dated January 12, 1921, purporting to be the will of the decedent, was admitted to probate. An appeal from the order was then taken by the state, resulting in an affirmance by the Supreme Court on January 15, 1926, evidenced by the remittitur filed February 17, 1926. Estate of Morrison, 198 Cal. 1, 242 P. 939. Under the instrument in dispute the petitioner, Maud Scott, was named as sole legatee and devisee.

On January 7, 1927, a petition to revoke probate was filed by alleged sisters and nieces of the deceased. Citation was issued on that day, directing Albert E. Hill, administrator of the estate with the will annexed, and Maud Scott, the petitioner here, to show cause on February 4, 1927, why the order admitting the instrument to probate should not be vacated. Service of the citation was not made, the respondents averring in their answer to the petition in this proceeding that service was impossible.

On September 1, 1931, Maud Scott made a motion, upon notice, for an order of dismissal of the contest on the ground that the petition for revocation was not filed within one year after admission of the will to probate, pursuant to section 1327 of the Code of Civil Procedure as it read before the amendment of 1929, St. 1929, p. 860, § 2 (now embodied in section 380, Probate Code); and also on the ground that the citation issued was not issued within the time prescribed by law and had not been served. That motion was denied on October 1, 1931; and upon motion of the contestants an alias citation was issued and made returnable November 2, 1931. As the contestants were still unable to make service, the return day was postponed to March 1, 1932, and an order was made for service by publication of a new alias citation. The order denying the petitioner's motion to dismiss the contest not being appealable, the petitioner here seeks a writ prohibiting the court from proceeding with any further hearing upon the petition in question.

As appears in the opinion filed this day in a companion case, In the Matter of the Estate of Leon Morrison (Cal. App.) 14 P.(2d) 102, the petition for revocation filed on January 7, 1927, had been preceded by a like petition filed by the alleged sisters on October 23, 1923, and another filed by the alleged nieces on July 18, 1924. These petitions were dismissed by the petitioners on June 16, 1926, but were reinstated by order of court on December 2, 1926. Subsequently the contests so initiated were set for trial for May 26, 1931; but, motions to dismiss the contests under section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure having been made by Miss Scott, the motions were granted by the court on July 22, 1931. Such orders of dismissal are the subject of appeal in the companion case.

We are concerned in this present proceeding with the question whether the petition filed on January 7, 1927, considered apart from the prior petitions, was filed within the time prescribed by law; and that depends on whether the time began to run from the date of the order of the probate court admitting the proffered will or the date of the filing of the remittitur from the Supreme Court affirming that order.

Prior to the amendment of 1929, section 1327 of the Code of Civil Procedure provided that, when a will has "been admitted to probate," a petition to revoke probate might be filed by any interested person "at any time within one year after such probate"; and, subject to a saving clause in favor of persons under disability, section 1333 made probate of a will conclusive, if no person contested it within one year after its probate.

The petitioner here contends that, in computing the time, the appeal is to be ignored, and that the order of the probate court at once established for the will a commanding legal status which, despite the loss of operative effect in the interim, preserved the will's vitality unimpaired for purposes of any contest.

Section 1327 had a double aspect. It was both a statute conferring jurisdiction and a statute of repose. In the absence of an appeal, the order admitting a will to probate is controlling, and the court is without jurisdiction to entertain a petition for revocation by persons under no disability, unless filed within the prescribed time after probate. Estate of Sbarboro, 63 Cal. 5; Estate of Smith (Cal. Sup.) 3 P.(2d) 921; 26 Cal. Jur. 1087.

There are, however, no decisions in this state as to the construction to be given to section 1327 in the event of an appeal from the order of admission.

[1] When such an appeal is perfected, the trial court loses jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the order, including all questions concerning the status of the instrument affected. Under section 949 of the Code of Civil Procedure the appeal in this case stayed all proceedings upon the order, and hence during the pendency of the appeal the court could not entertain a new proceeding directed against the matters under review. The proceeding for probate of a will is a proceeding in rem, and the order of admission to probate, when it becomes effective, is binding on all persons in interest. Estate of Parsons, 196 Cal. 294, 299, 237 P. 744; Estate of Allen, 176 Cal. 632, 633, 634, 169 P. 364; Estate of Baker, 170 Cal. 578, 585, 150 P. 989.

[2] If the order is affirmed on appeal, then, saving rights of persons under disability, it is affirmed as to all who have any interest in the estate; and, if the probate of the will is vacated, it is vacated as to everybody. Estate of Freud, 73 Cal. 555, 15 P. 135.

Upon affirmance of the order, the powers of the probate court over the will are revived; but the will, though possessing testamentary status, is still subject to the statutory right to contest its validity notwithstanding probate. On the other hand, reversal of the order of admission would render needless an independent proceeding for revocation. The law does not require idle acts; and since an appeal, if taken from the order of admission to probate, is an integral part of the probate proceedings, it is a reasonable conclusion that the time for filing a petition for revocation of probate was not meant to start until the proceeding to establish admissibility had been finally adjudicated.

If a contest filed pending the appeal were to be brought to a hearing before a decision of the appeal, and were to result in favor of the contestant, the very purpose of the appeal from the original order admitting the will would be defeated, and confusion would ensue. Not until the determination of the appeal can it properly be said for the purposes of a contest under section 1327 that a will, meanwhile in a state of suspended animation, has been admitted to probate.

There are indications in some of the recent decisions of the Supreme Court that such qualification was visioned by the court when, in the absence of an appeal, it reiterated the rule requiring a contest under section 1327, Code of Civil Procedure, to be initiated within one year after probate. Thus in Estate of Parsons, supra, where a will showing several erasures and interlineations was admitted to probate, and subsequently was attacked in a proceeding for partial distribution, the court said at page 298 of 196 Cal., 237 P. 744, 746: "The order was never appealed from, nor was any contest of the will after probate initiated within one year after its admission to probate or at all. The petition for partial distribution, upon which the present proceeding arose, was filed after the time for contesting the provisions of the will had fully expired." (Italics ours.) Again, in the Estate of Smith (Cal. Sup.) 3 P.(2d) 921, an order had been made admitting a holographic will to probate. That order was afterwards vacated and then restored. A contest was filed within one year after the order admitting the will, but that contest was struck out by the court. Then a second contest was filed after the year had expired; and when the probate court denied a motion to strike out that contest, a writ of prohibition was issued upon the ground that the time for such a contest had expired. But there, too, the court, after noting the dismissal of the first contest, was mindful to say: "No appeal was taken from this order or from any of the orders made by the court involving the probate of said olographic will." (Italics ours.)

There is an analogy between cases such as this and actions upon an ordinary judgment, which must be begun within five years after the right of action thereon accrues. If there is an appeal from the original judgment, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the determination of the appeal. Feeney v. Hinckley, 134 Cal. 467, 470, 66 P. 580, 86 Am. St. Rep. 290; Hills v. Sherwood, 33 Cal. 474, 479.

As in the case of a judgment, so in the case of the order of admission to probate, it was final as to the probate court when made, and, as such, subject to appeal; but it was not final as to the subject-matter until the final disposition of the appeal.

Under somewhat similar provisions of law in Illinois, allowing one year after probate of a will within which to contest its validity, it has been held that an appeal from the order of admission to probate suspends its operative effect, and that the time for contest after probate does not begin to run until the status of the will is finally established by the judgment of the appellate court. In O'Brien v. Bonfield, 220 Ill. 219, 77 N. E. 167, there was first an order of the county court, sitting in probate, admitting the will on October 5, 1903. Then, as is permissible in Illinois, the matter was heard de novo on appeal in the circuit court, which made its order admitting the will on March 24, 1904. An appeal was then taken to the Supreme Court, which affirmed the order of the circuit court on February 7, 1905; and the remittitur was filed in the county court on March 6, 1905. Thereafter, and on April 11, 1905, a contest was instituted by certain parties in interest. To this contest demurrers were filed on the ground of lack of jurisdiction of the court to entertain the contest, because it had not been begun within one year from the time of probate in the county court. The demurrers were sustained, and the contest was dismissed. But upon appeal to the Supreme Court it held that the probate was not complete until the remittitur had gone down to the county court reinvesting that court with jurisdiction, and that the time for initiating a contest ran from the filing of the remittitur on March 6, 1905, and not from October 5, 1903, when the order of admission to probate was first made. Accordingly, the judgment of dismissal of the contest was reversed. Again, in Harney v. Wilson, 198 Ill. App. 477, the probate court was declared to have jurisdiction over a contest, begun within one year after the filing of a remittitur evidencing affirmance of an appeal from an order admitting a will to probate.

So, also, in Lewis v. Cook, 89 Hun, 183, 34 N. Y. S. 1037, an order admitting a will to probate was reversed on appeal; and, after the matter had been remanded to the Surrogate's Court, the will was again admitted. Within the statutory period of two years after the second order of admission, but more than two years after the first order, a contest was instituted; and, the answer thereto having set up, among other defenses, that of expiration of the time limit, the contestant's demurrer to the answer was sustained by the trial court. Upon appeal to the general term of the Supreme Court, the judgment sustaining the demurrer was affirmed, and the court expressed the view that the judgment reversing the first order admitting the will had restored the contestant to his original position, and as a consequence the time for contest did not begin to run until the will had finally been admitted on the second hearing. While the decision of the general term in regard to the demurrer was reversed on appeal to the Court of Appeals in Lewis v. Cook, 150 N. Y. 163, 44 N. E. 778 the reversal was based on the ground that the contestant lacked the necessary qualification for his contest, and not on the ground that the time for a contest by one qualified had lapsed. What was said in the opinion of the general term on that point was left unchallenged.

The petitioner here finds in Hellman Bank v. Alden, 206 Cal. 592, 275 P. 794, an alleged parallel to the present case. In the case cited, it was held that a judgment of incompetency was conclusive as to status from the time of its entry in the Superior Court, and that the incompetent was therefore incapable of making a valid contract, notwithstanding pendency of an appeal from the judgment. It is therefore contended by the petitioner that the same conclusiveness attaches to the order admitting a will to probate despite an appeal. But what we have to consider is not merely the effect on the status of the will by reason of an appeal from the order of admission, but the effect on the limitation of time for a separate and independent contest of the validity of the will after probate. The order admitting the will determines, subject to appeal, only the question of admissibility, or, in other words, determines whether or not the instrument offered is the last will of the deceased. The order is not conclusive, nor has it the effect of a judgment in rem as to the underlying facts on which validity of the will depends. Estate of Dorn, 190 Cal. 343, 344, 212 P. 206; Estate of Bloom (Cal. Sup.) 2 P.(2d) 753.

To test the validity, the law permits a new proceeding for revocation of probate within a fixed time after admissibility has been adjudicated. This is the distinction between the situation before us and that of one adjudged incompetent. In his case there is no provision of law for an attack by himself upon the judgment otherwise than by appeal; nor may one interested in a contract made by him pending the appeal institute an independent contest of the adjudication in his own behalf. The adjudication has the effect of constructive notice of the incompetent's incapacity to contract, and all who enter into business relations with him do so at their own risk. But, in reference to wills, the question of validity remains open, even though the admissibility has been determined; and, while the admissibility is sub judice, it would be unreasonable to require persons interested in the estate to institute proceedings to revoke probate of an instrument not yet finally determined to be legally admissible to probate.

Where a subsequent statutory proceeding is correlated with a judgment purporting to establish a definite status, jurisdiction to entertain the subsequent proceeding is, in some instances at least, dependent on the result of an appeal. This is illustrated in Re Riccardi, 182 Cal. 675, 189 P. 694. That was a proceeding for disbarment of Riccardi, an attorney, based on his conviction of a felony involving moral turpitude, and instituted against him while an appeal from the judgment of conviction was pending. The law, as it read at the time, provided that, upon conviction of such an offense, the name of the attorney should be stricken from the roll, and he should be precluded from practice thereafter. The question was whether "conviction," for purposes of the separate disbarment proceeding, was established by the judgment rendered by the trial court or by the final judgment pronounced on appeal. The Supreme Court, adhering to earlier decisions involving like questions, held that action looking to disbarment must be deferred until the determination of the appeal.

In like manner, we are of the opinion that the relation between an order admitting a will to probate and a petition for revocation of probate is such that, in case of an appeal from the order, the time for institution of a contest after probate does not begin to run until the appeal has resulted in a final determination in favor of the admission of the will. Until that time there is, in the legal aspect, no admitted will to revoke.

We conclude, therefore, that, inasmuch as the petition in question in this proceeding was filed within one year after the affirmance of the order admitting the will to probate, it was filed in due time, and the motion to dismiss the petition was properly denied.

If the conclusions expressed in this and the companion case prevail, there will be before the probate court not only the petition to revoke probate filed on January 7, 1927, but also the previous petitions filed by the same contestants; and it will devolve upon the lower court and the parties in interest to determine upon which petition or petitions the trial of the issues raised shall be had.

The alternative writ is discharged, and the application for a peremptory writ is denied.

In re MORRISON'S ESTATE. GOLDBORTEN et al. v. SCOTT. GRYZOLET et al. v. SAME.

Civ. 8322.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 24, 1932.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 24, 1932.

1. Dismissal and nonsuit ⇐60(1).

Statute requiring dismissal of "action" not brought to trial within five years applies to contest to revoke probate of will (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583, 1713).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1713, prescribed that, except as otherwise specially provided, proceedings in probate court should be governed by rules of practice in civil actions. The word "practice" means that which regulates formal steps in an action or other judicial proceeding, and it deals with writs, summonses, pleadings, affidavits, notices, motions, petitions, orders, trials, judgments, appeals, costs, and executions.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Action; Action at Law" and "Practice (In Law)," see Words and Phrases.]

2. Dismissal and nonsuit ⇐60(1).

Time intervening between conventional dismissals of will contest and reinstatement of contest could not be counted in computing five-year period for dismissal (Code Civ. Proc. § 583).

Facts were that contestants dismissed petitions to revoke probate of will on June 16, 1926, but, on learning that witnesses in favor of will confessed that testimony given by them in support of will had been false, contestants filed notice of motion to vacate the dismissals, and motion was granted December 2, 1926.

Appeals from Superior Court, Alameda County; Lincoln S. Church, Judge.

Petitions by Zysla Brucha Goldborten and another and by Chaja Malta Gryzolet and others against Maud Scott, also known as Marion Scott, to revoke the probate of the will of Leon Morrison, deceased. From orders of dismissal, contestants appeal.

Orders reversed.

JOHNSON, Justice pro tem.

In this proceeding there are consolidated appeals from orders dismissing two petitions to revoke probate of the will of Leon Morrison, deceased, one filed by persons describing themselves as sisters of the deceased, the other by persons declaring themselves to be nieces. The orders of dismissal were based on section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure, under which, in the absence of a written stipulation for an extension of time, it is made the duty of the court to dismiss an action not brought to trial within five years after the filing of the answer.

Leon Morrison died on June 20, 1921; and, after a contest by the state of California, an instrument dated January 12, 1921, purporting to be the will of the deceased, was admitted to probate on August 14, 1923. An appeal from the order was taken by the state, and on February 17, 1926, the remittitur from the Supreme Court was filed showing affirmance of the order. Estate of Morrison, 198 Cal. 1, 242 P. 939.

Meanwhile a petition by the alleged sisters of the deceased to revoke probate of the will was filed on October 23, 1923, and another petition by the alleged nieces on July 18, 1924. Answers to these petitions were filed respectively on March 16 and March 23, 1926, by the respondent, Maud Scott, as the proponent of the will. A date was then set for the trial of the contests; but, as the time drew near, the contestants concluded that the evidence available to them would not suffice to overcome testimony in favor of the will given at the time of its admission by two witnesses, John W. McKenzie and Barney Hoffman. Accordingly a settlement was arranged whereby the contestants received $2,000, and thereupon, on June 16, 1926, dismissed their contests. A minute order to like effect was made by the court on the same day.

Thereafter, on July 8, 1926, McKenzie and Hoffman made a confession to the district attorney of Alameda county that the testimony given by them in support of the will had been false, and they stated that they had been procured to commit perjury by said Maud Scott and others acting in her behalf. These men, on being brought to trial on a charge of perjury, pleaded guilty, and were sentenced to serve a term in the penitentiary.

Upon learning of these disclosures, the contestants on August 13, 1926, filed notice of motion to vacate the dismissals of their contests, and by order signed December 2, 1926, in fulfillment of a minute order made November 18, 1926, that motion was granted with authorization to the contestants to proceed in due course with the prosecution of their contests. A period of six months, lacking fourteen days, thus intervened between the dismissal of the contests on June 16 and their reinstatement on December 2, 1926. An appeal from the order of reinstatement was undertaken by Miss Scott, but was dismissed on July 1, 1929, on the ground that the order was not appealable. While that appeal was pending, efforts were made by the contestants to procure depositions of McKenzie and Hoffman and also of witnesses in Chicago, but delays ensued, due largely to continuances requested by attorneys for Miss Scott.

On motion of the contestants, the contests were finally set for trial for May 26, 1931; but on May 1 Miss Scott filed notice of motion to dismiss both contests. By reason of such motions, the trial of the contests was postponed by the court to August 5, 1931; and meanwhile, on July 23, the court made its orders granting the motions on the sole ground that the contests had not been brought to trial within five years after the answers were filed. The time which elapsed between the earlier answer of Miss Scott and the date of the dismissals by the court was five years, four months, and seven days.

From the orders of dismissal, the contestants prosecute these appeals.

In addition to the contests filed by the contestants as already mentioned, a petition to revoke probate of the will of said deceased was filed anew by the same contestants on January 7, 1927. Certain questions affecting the status of that petition are dealt with in the companion proceeding in prohibition of Maud Scott v. Superior Court (Cal. App.) 14 P.(2d) 99, in which our opinion is this day filed.

Upon the present appeal, there are two questions presented for consideration, one as to the applicability of section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure to a contest to revoke probate of a will, the other as to the disallowance of credit in the computation of time for the interval of approximately six months during which the contests were suspended by virtue of the dismissals effected by concurrence of the parties. If this period of time is deductible, then the contests cannot be treated as having been at issue for five years before the dismissals in question.

[1] While section 583 must necessarily have a limited application to probate proceedings in general, we are of the opinion that it may properly be extended to include a contest to revoke probate of a will.

Such a contest is an adversary proceeding, and in its essence is an action for recovery of property claimed to be unlawfully taken, or about to be taken, from the ownership of the contestant. He comes into court in the character of a possessor of a chose in action, founded on the violation of a vested property right by means of an instrument not truly testamentary; and, subject to certain qualifications, he is entitled to have the merits of his cause determined by a jury. Estate of Baker, 170 Cal. 578, 586–588, 150 P. 989; Estate of Clark, 94 Cal. App. 453, 460–461, 271 P. 542. The trial of a will contest has the characteristics of a trial of an ordinary civil action involving title to property; and, by section 1713 of the Code of Civil Procedure in force at the time of the orders of dismissal, it was prescribed that, except as otherwise specially provided, proceedings in probate should be governed by the rules of practice in civil actions.

In People v. Central Pac. R. R. Co., 83 Cal. 393, 404, 23 P. 303, 307, the court, quoting from a law lexicon, defined practice as "that which regulates the formal steps in an action or other judicial proceeding. It therefore deals with writs, summonses, pleadings, affidavits, notices, motions, petitions, orders, trials, judgments, appeals, costs, and executions."

Rules of practice are designed to establish the manner of bringing parties into court, and, when they are there, prescribe the course to be followed by the parties and the court throughout the various stages of the litigation, in hearing, dealing with, and disposing of the matters in dispute. 49 C. J. 1312. The purpose is to harmonize and facilitate the conduct of litigation; and, since such rules deal with all phases of a case from its inception to final judgment, the time within which an action or proceeding shall either be brought to trial, or dismissed as burdensome to an adversary and to the court as well, is a proper subject for an administrative formula in aid of a definite and uniform mode of procedure.

It is the policy of the law to expedite the administration of estates; and it would seem that the reasons which influenced the adoption of section 583 justify an interpretation of the word "action" sufficiently broad to include a proceeding such as the contest of a will.

The appellants rely with much confidence, however, on the ruling of the court in Estate of Simmons, 168 Cal. 390, 395, 143 P. 697, whereby section 581a, Code of Civil Procedure, authorizing dismissal for failure to have summons issued in an action within one year, was held to be inapplicable to a will contest, wherein a year had been allowed to pass without issuance of a citation. The rationale of that decision is that, as section 1328, Code of Civil Procedure, then in force, prescribed the period of one year for issuance of a citation, without annexing any penalty for the omission, the court was free to exercise its discretion in relieving the contestant from default and authorizing the issuance of a citation, notwithstanding the lapse of time. In other words, the court took the view that there was a probate rule which forbade application of the rule governing similar defaults in civil actions.

Appellants invoke also the decision in Estate of Joseph, 118 Cal. 660, 50 P. 768, rendered in 1897, wherein insistence was laid upon the distinction between an action and a special proceeding; and, by a strict interpretation of the word "action," the right to demand an undertaking from a nonresident plaintiff as security for costs was limited to the defendant in a civil action only. By an amendment made in 1903, however, the benefit of the section was made available in special proceedings also.

While no sure guide to the extension of the rules of civil practice to proceedings in probate is furnished by the numerous decisions in this state on various points of probate procedure, it may at any rate be said with certainty that the use of the word "action" by itself in a Code section is not controlling. This is illustrated in Estate of Knauft, 59 Cal. App. 536, 211 P. 29, where section 354, Code of Civil Procedure, was made to toll the statute of limitations in behalf of an alien enemy who had instituted a will contest after expiration of the ordinary statutory period; and in the course of its opinion, in reference to a dismissal without prejudice, the court declared that it saw no reason why section 581, Code of Civil Procedure, subdivision 4, was not applicable to a proceeding in probate. A portion of that opinion is quoted with approval in Estate of Cook, 205 Cal. 581, 588, 271 P. 1083, and is followed by the statement of the Supreme Court that the pronouncement approved is authority that the rule governing dismissal of actions generally under section 581 is applicable to probate proceedings.

Since the orders under review were made, section 1713 of the Code of Civil Procedure has been reframed in section 1233 of the Probate Code; and, with a view to clarification, that section now provides that the rules of civil practice shall be applicable to proceedings under the Probate Code "with regard to trials, new trials, appeals, records on appeal, and all other matters of procedure." In so far as trials are concerned, we do not interpret this section as enlarging the scope of former section 1713, Code of Civil Procedure; and to our minds section 583, depriving the court of jurisdiction to try an action when there has been a delay of five years, is, and always has been, as much a general rule, affecting actions and special proceedings alike, as a rule declaring when an action or special proceeding is at issue and ready for trial.

[2] We are now brought to the second question, the elimination of the period of suspension intervening between the conventional dismissals on June 16, 1926, and the reinstatement of the contests by the court on December 2, 1926.

The respondent insists that the suspension had no effect whatever so far as section 583 is concerned, and relies on a statement of the court in Miller & Lux, Inc., v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 333, 338, 219 P. 1006, that nothing short of a written stipulation expressly extending the time of trial beyond the five-year period, or expressly waiving the right to a dismissal, will suffice to toll the running of the statutory time. The court was there reiterating the general rule in its relation to a stipulation in that particular case which was found insufficient to meet the requirements of the law. Attention was not then being centered upon a situation which temporarily deprived the trial court of jurisdiction to proceed with the trial of the action. If such a situation had been in the mind of the court, reference would doubtless have been made to Kinard v. Jordan, 175 Cal. 13, 164 P. 894, 895, where it was held that, while an appeal was pending, the case was removed from the jurisdiction of the trial court, and necessarily exempt from the operation of section 583. Again, in Allyne v. Superior Court, 200 Cal. 661, 664, 254 P. 564, in dealing with the application of the section to the prosecution of an action after entry of an order granting a new trial, the court declared that the plain and obvious purpose of the section was to regulate the matter of compulsory dismissals only under one set of circumstances, namely, where the action had not been brought to trial within five years after filing of the answer, and that, so far as a retrial was concerned, the section had no relevancy.

In Kruly v. Superior Court (Cal. App.) 10 P.(2d) 178, several years intervened between the resting of the case after introduction of certain evidence and the resetting for trial. The trial court having denied a motion to dismiss under section 583, a writ of mandamus was applied for, but was denied upon the ground that suspension of proceedings after commencement of the trial did not set the statute in motion.

Situations are thus recognized which repel a strained construction of the statute.

No logical distinction can be made between a temporary suspension of proceedings in the trial court, consequent upon a dismissal induced by fraud or mistake, and a suspension of the power of the trial court to proceed by reason of the pendency of an appeal. In either case, the action or proceeding is withdrawn from the cognizance of the court of first instance during the period of suspension. And as in Kinard v. Jordan, supra, the case was taken out of the operation of section 583 while an appeal was pending, so in like manner the period of suspension here should be excluded in computing the quinquennium at the end of which the jurisdiction of the court expires by operation of law. In Kinard v. Jordan, begun in March, 1906, there was a motion to dismiss the action, made in September, 1914, and based on that portion of section 583, which empowers the court in its discretion to dismiss an action, if not brought to trial within two years after filing of the answer. There had previously been a judgment for the plaintiff on the merits, but on appeal that judgment had been reversed in March, 1909. 10 Cal. App. 219, 101 P. 696. Thereupon certain proceedings were had which resulted in another judgment in November, 1911, and another reversal on appeal therefrom in March, 1914, 167 Cal. 333, 139 P. 797. Then came the motion to dismiss, which was granted, but upon appeal the order was reversed. In reversing the order, the Supreme Court, after referring to the judgment of November, 1911, said: "That judgment, however erroneous it may be, purported to determine the case. The aforesaid appeals taken therefrom suspended all power of the court below to proceed, and necessarily took the case out of the operation of section 583 while the appeals remained pending."

The respondent, citing Wolters v. Rossi, 126 Cal. 644, 59 P. 143, and Page v. Superior Court, 76 Cal. 372, 18 P. 385, contends that the dismissals in question, being based upon a written request to the clerk by the attorneys of the contestants, did not suspend proceedings at all, but left the contests at all times pending.

But the dismissals in the cases cited were before the amendment made in 1897 to section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure, authorizing dismissal by entry in the clerk's register upon written consent of the attorney of the party requesting dismissal. Consequently, those cases are no longer declaratory of the law on that point. Hopkins v. Superior Court, 136 Cal. 552, 555, 69 P. 299. Moreover, there does appear to have been a minute order of dismissal by the court.

It is contended further on behalf of respondent that the order vacating the dismissals had the effect of nullifying the intermission and placing the contests in the same situation in all respects as if there had been no dismissals at all. While the order of restoration brought the contests again under the jurisdiction of the court, it cannot be said that by its own fiat the court could create for itself a retroactive jurisdiction. When it is stated that upon the vacation of an order or judgment the case is restored to the previously existing status, that means that the parties are placed in their original situation for the purpose of litigating the matters in controversy. The restoration revives the right to enforce whatever claims or obligations existed at the commencement of the action, and makes them subject to future determination in due course. That is far from indulging a fiction that the case was in court for purposes of trial when it was not.

Thus the question is merely whether the time when the contests were out of court shall be counted. In Kinard v. Jordan, supra, the Supreme Court established the precedent of disregarding the time during which the jurisdiction of the trial court was suspended, thereby setting reality above artificiality; and in our judgment it is our duty, under the circumstances shown in the record before us, to follow that precedent.

The orders dismissing the petitions of said contestants to revoke probate of the will of said deceased are each reversed.

We concur: KNIGHT, Acting P. J.; CASHIN, J.

LAMBERSON, Justice pro tem.

Appeal by plaintiff from an order and judgment of dismissal, granted upon motion of certain defendants, now respondents herein, made upon the ground that there had been an unreasonable delay in bringing the action to trial.

Plaintiff is the assignee of eighty claimants against eighty-six defendants, and the action is to enforce certain claims against the defendants upon their liability as stockholders of a corporation known as Pacific Preserve Company, the claims being variously for goods, wares, and merchandise sold, or services rendered, to said corporation.

The original complaint in the action set forth eighty causes of action, and was filed

November 22, 1926. Summons was thereupon issued, and between December 3, 1926, and June 5, 1928, demurrers of various defendants were filed. On August 9, 1928, the respondents, with the exception of Joseph Seconda, filed their answer to the so-called "Amended Complaint," and he, on August 29, 1928, filed his answer to such complaint, it being the only answer filed by Seconda.

On May 22, 1928, appellant filed a pleading denominated "Amendments to Complaint," the same being amendments as to matters of detail, and on August 21, 1928, also filed "Amendments to Complaint," setting forth in one single paragraph a list of the stockholders of the corporation.

On January 3, 1929, the respondents, with the exception of Seconda, filed their "Answer to Second Amended Complaint," their answer consisting of a general denial. None of the pleadings were verified.

On September 3, 1930, respondents filed their notice of motion to dismiss the action. The motion was submitted to the court on September 15, 1930, resubmitted on December 31, 1930, and granted on May 5, 1931. After the resubmission of the motion on December 31st, one of the attorneys for appellant, on January 21, 1931, presented to the trial judge in his chambers, an affidavit sworn to by said attorney, but made no request or motion to reopen the hearing, or any showing of good cause for the presentation of the affidavit. The court declined to consider it upon the ground that it was filed after the submission of the motion.

On January 11, 1929, plaintiff filed a memorandum of motion to set the case for trial, and on March 17, 1929, filed a similar memorandum. The case was placed upon the civil active list, but the court refused to set it for trial upon the ground that all of the defendants had not been served, and the cause was not at issue. It appeared on the civil active list at each regular calling thereof, from December 11, 1929, to July 30, 1930, with a notation beside it, "Not at Issue." On August 16, 1930, the court having refused to set the action for trial because it was not at issue as to all of the defendants, the plaintiff caused a dismissal to be entered as to certain defendants, and requested that the default of others be entered. In the record it nowhere appears that plaintiff at any time presented to the court the matter of the necessity of having the case tried as to the respondents.

The appellant contends that the granting of the motion for a dismissal was an abuse of discretion, and that the order and judgment of dismissal was against law, because based upon a motion made within less than two years after the answer of the respondents to plaintiff's last pleading denominated "Amendments to Complaint" was filed, the appellant urging that that was the time at which issues were finally joined.

Respondents base their argument for the affirmation of the judgment upon two grounds: (1) That the dismissal was a proper exercise of the discretion of the court, because the time for bringing the action to trial should have been measured from the date of filing the original answer; and (2) assuming that the facts do not bring the case within the provisions of section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure as it stood prior to 1929, the amendment of 1929 controlled, and the action should have been dismissed because it was not brought to trial within two years after it had been commenced. We shall first consider the second point made by the respondents.

Prior to the amendment of section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure in 1929, it read in part as follows: "The court may in its discretion dismiss any action for want of prosecution on motion of the defendant and after due notice to the plaintiff, whenever plaintiff has failed for two years after answer filed to bring such action to trial." In 1929 (St. 1929, p. 683) section 583 was amended by changing the words "whenever plaintiff has failed for two years after answer filed," to these words, "whenever plaintiff has failed two years after action is filed."

[1] This section is one of a series of sections of the Code of Civil Procedure, having the same general object; that is, to compel reasonable diligence in the prosecution of an action after it has been commenced, thereby extending to the party or parties against whom it is brought an opportunity to properly present any defense which may be available at the time of the commencement of the action. Independently of any express authority therefor, the courts have inherent power to dismiss actions for unreasonable delay in prosecution. Dupuy v. Shear, 29 Cal. 238; Romero v. Snyder, 167 Cal. 216, 138 P. 1002. Section 583, as enacted in 1905 (St. 1905, p. 244) created a restriction upon this power, and was a legislative determination that a delay of two years or less in bringing an action to trial after answer filed is not to be regarded as unreasonable. Johnston v. Baker, 167 Cal. 260, 139 P. 86. Section 583 established a rule of procedure, and is similar in purpose to sections 581a, 581b and 582 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[2] In the case of People v. Kings County Dev. Co., 48 Cal. App. 72, 79, 191 P. 1004, 1006, the court said: "The provisions of the section, in other words, involve merely a matter of procedure—that is the regulation of the conduct of the parties plaintiff with respect to actions after the commencement thereof for the same reason or purpose which is at the bottom of many other provisions of the code as to procedure, to wit, to facilitate or bring about a final or as speedy a disposition of the litigation as possible or as is deemed by the Legislature to be consistent with the rights, not alone of the plaintiff, but also of the adversary party or parties, and also to clear court calendars of cases as expeditiously as possible, thus and thereby preventing an accumulation upon such calendars of actions in which, by reason of long delays in their prosecution, it may become difficult, if not in some instances impossible, to adjudicate the issues according to the real merits or justice of such causes. Indeed, the terms of the section are, in their nature and purpose, analogous to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure which prescribe a time limit within which a bill of exceptions, or a notice of appeal, or a notice of intention to move for a new trial, or petition for a hearing in the Supreme Court after a cause has been heard and decided by a District Court of Appeal, must be filed." The objection is made that section 583, as amended in 1929, cannot apply to the case under consideration, because it was not expressly made retroactive by declaration of the Legislature, section 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure providing that no part of such Code is retroactive unless expressly so declared. A change in the adjective or procedural law may be made during the progress of a matter in litigation, and will not have a retroactive effect, although it has a direct bearing upon the procedure to be followed. Rice v. Dunlap, 205 Cal. 133, 270 P. 196; Bassford v. Earl, 172 Cal. 653, 158 P. 124.

In support of this principle is the case of Kerckhoff-Cuzner Mill & Lumber Co. v. Olmstead, 85 Cal. 80, 24 P. 648, 649, involving the construction of an amendment of section 1187, Code of Civil Procedure, shortening the time within which a materialman might file a lien, in which the court said: "It is also argued that the amendment cannot apply to or affect the respondent's claim, for the reason that as a portion of the materials were furnished before the amendment was passed, to hold it applicable would be giving it a retroactive effect, and that this is forbidden by the Code, which says: 'No part of it is retroactive unless expressly so declared.' Section 3, Code Civ. Proc. We do not think that the amendment, when applied to the case in hand, is retroactive in effect. It is true it shortened the time which the respondent would otherwise have had to file its claim, and thus seek its remedy. But the authorities are numerous to the effect that a change of remedy, or in the time within which it must be sought does not impair the obligation of a contract, provided an adequate and available remedy be left. Thus it has been held that an enactment reducing the time prescribed by the statute of limitations in force when the right of action accrued is not unconstitutional, provided a reasonable time be given for the commencement of an action before the bar takes effect. Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628 [24 L. Ed. 365]. In that case the court, by Waite, C. J., said: 'The parties to a contract have no more a vested interest in a particular limitation which has been fixed than they have in an unrestricted right to sue. They have no more a vested interest in the time for the commencement of an action than they have in the form of the action to be commenced; and as to the forms of action or modes of remedy, it is well settled that the legislature may change them at its discretion, provided adequate means of enforcing the right remain.' And see Scarborough v. Dugan, 10 Cal. 305; Hibernia S. & L. Soc. v. Hayes, 56 Cal. 297; People v. Campbell, 59 Cal. 243 [43 Am. Rep. 257]."

In the case of Davis & McMillan v. Industrial Acc. Com., 198 Cal. 631, 636, 246 P. 1046, 1047, 46 A. L. R. 1095, the court said: "It is clear from the decisions of the courts of this state as well as those of other jurisdictions that a person has no vested right in the running of a statute of limitations unless it has completely run and barred the action. Before the action is barred by the statute, the Legislature has absolute power to amend the statute and alter the period of limitations prescribed therein, subject only to the requirement that a reasonable time must be allowed for the prosecution of an action or proceedings after the passage of an amendment shortening the period. Doehla v. Phillips, 151 Cal. 488, 91 P. 330; Swamp Land Dist. v. Glide, 112 Cal. 85, 90, 44 P. 451; Crothers v. Edison Electric Co. (C. C.) 149 F. 606, 609; 5 Cal. Jur. 755; Vance v. Vance, 108 U. S. 517, 27 L. Ed. 808, 2 S. Ct. 854; 19 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) pp. 167, 168, 171; 36 Cyclopedia of Law (Cyc.) 1201. It is equally well settled that an amendment to a statute of limitations enlarging the period of time within which an action can be brought as to pending causes of action is not retroactive legislation, and does not impair any vested right. Weldon v. Rogers, 151 Cal. 432, 90 P. 1062; Allen v. Allen, 95 Cal. 184, 16 L. R. A. 646, 30 P. 213; Kerckhoff-Cuzner Mill & Lumber Co. v. Olmstead, 85 Cal. 84, 24 P. 648. * * * In 36 Cyclopedia of Law (Cyc.) p. 1201, the rule is laid down in the following language: 'A retroactive or retrospective law, in the legal sense, is one that takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing laws, or creates a new obligation, imposes a new duty or attaches a new disability in respect to transactions or considerations already past. Retrospective laws, in their general sense, include ex post facto laws, and laws impairing the obligation of contracts, but the term

"retrospective" is frequently used as applicable only to civil laws by way of distinguishing them from ex post facto laws. Retrospective statutes are usually considered to embrace only those which relate to substantial rights, as those which destroy or impair an existing right, or give a right which never before existed; and statutes which affect remedies only are not within the scope of the inhibition against retrospective laws unless the remedy is entirely taken away, or is encumbered with conditions which render it impracticable.' Again, on page 1213 of the same volume, we find the following: 'The presumption against the retrospective construction of statutes is founded on the principle that they should not be given such a construction as will make them unconstitutional or unjust, and therefore as a general rule does not apply to statutes that relate merely to remedies and modes of procedure. The Legislature has full control over the mode, times, and manner of prosecuting suits; and whenever, upon consideration of an entire statute relating to these matters, it appears to have been the legislative intent to make it retroactive, it will be given this effect. A retroactive effect has accordingly been given statutes * * * relating to the limitation of actions. * * *'"

[3-5] The effect of the 1929 amendment of section 583 (St. 1929, p. 683) was simply to change the remedy applicable to a pending proceeding. To meet the provisions of that section requiring that the action be brought to trial within two years after the filing of the answer, it was not sufficient that the plaintiff should have had the action set for trial, or be in court ready for trial. The trial must have been actually begun. Boyd v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 185 Cal. 344, 197 P. 58. The burden is upon the plaintiff to call to the attention of the court the necessity for setting the trial for a time within the period fixed by the section. Holt v. Miller (Cal. Sup.) 6 P.(2d) 937. The duty rests upon the plaintiff at every stage of the proceeding, to use diligence and to expedite his case to final determination. Oberkotter v. Spreckels, 64 Cal. App. 470, 221 P. 698. Unless it is made to appear that there has been a gross abuse of discretion, the decision of the trial court will not be disturbed on appeal. Barry v. Learner, 113 Cal. App. 651, 299 P. 82.

[6] Appellant urges that the task of preparing the complaint, settling the pleadings, taking numerous depositions, and otherwise preparing the case for trial, involved a tremendous amount of work on the part of her counsel, of whom there were several, which kept them occupied from January 11, 1929, when the first memorandum to set was filed, until March 17, 1930. There is nothing in the record to indicate that the case was in anywise complicated. The pleading of each cause of action was simple, and not involved in any way, the statement of each cause of action being largely a repetition of the allegations contained in the other causes of action, and aside from the fact that there were a large number of assigned claims, the case appears to have presented no unusual difficulties. A period of nearly four years elapsed between the date of filing the complaint and the date of the submission of motion to dismiss the action as to respondents. The record discloses no excuse for the long period of delay in bringing the case to trial, or any state of facts which justifies the conclusion that the lower court abused its discretion in granting the motion to dismiss. The action of the court in refusing to set the case for trial, when it was not at issue, did not constitute an obstacle on the part of the court which would excuse the appellant. The court, in requiring that a showing be made that the case was at issue, was following the provisions of the rules established by that court for the conduct of its business. This situation is to be distinguished from the state of facts under consideration in the case of Raggio v. Southern Pacific Company, 181 Cal. 472, 185 P. 171.

[7] We are of the opinion that the action of the trial court in granting the motion to dismiss should be sustained.

In view of this conclusion, it is unnecessary to discuss other matters urged by appellant and respondents, particularly the argument of appellant that the motion to dismiss was made prematurely for the reason that the motion was made within less than two years after the filing of the amended answer. As heretofore pointed out, the so-called "Amendments to Complaint" did not change the original issues in any material way. In Gray v. Hall, 203 Cal. 306, 310, 265 P. 246, 250, the Supreme Court said: "It has been generally held that where a plaintiff amends his declaration or complaint so as to change the cause of action, or add a new one, it constitutes an abandonment of the original issues, and judgment by default may be taken against the defendant if he fails to file a new or amended answer or plea within the time allowed therefor, notwithstanding the original answer or plea is still on file. 34 C. J. 164, § 375d, and authorities there cited. This rule is without application, however, where the amendment is merely as to formal or immaterial matters, and does not change the cause of action; nor does it apply where the original plea or answer set forth a sufficient defense to the declaration or complaint as amended. Lincoln County Bank v. Fetterman, 170 Cal. 357, 360, 361, 149 P. 811; Brock v. Martinovich, 55 Cal. 516; Fox v. Hale & Norcross, etc., Co., 5 Cal. Unrep. 980, 53 P. 32, 40, 41, 169; Ermentrout v. American Fire Ins. Co., 63 Minn. 194, 65 N. W. 270; Kelly v. Bliss, 54 Wis. 187, 11 N. W. 488, 490; Yates v. French, 25 Wis. 661, 663–665; Kuhuke v. Wright, 22 Kan. 464; Cohen v. Hamill, 8 Kan. 621; 3 Freeman on Judgments (5th Ed.) 2640, § 1268a; 1 Encyc. of Pl. and Pr. 628, and authorities there cited."

The language of the court is very applicable to the case now before the court. Such objection would, in no event, apply to the case of the respondent Joseph Seconda, who filed only one answer, that being on August 29, 1928. The answers filed were sufficient to place all the issues before the trial court. As was said in Fox v. Hale & Norcross, etc., Min. Co., 5 Cal. Unrep. 980, 1000, 53 P. 32, 41, 169: "The answer already in was as appropriate to the complaint as amended as before the amendment, for it was in all material respects the same identical pleading." The situation was therefore not analogous to that under consideration in Southern Pac. Co. v. Superior Court, 69 Cal. App. 106, 230 P. 952, in which a supplemental answer and plea in abatement were filed after leave had been granted by the court. Those pleadings injected new issues into the case not comprehended by the original complaint and answer.

It is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

WOOD et al. v. AMERICAN NAT. BANK et al.

Civ. 602.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 5, 1932.

1. Trusts ⇐112.

Uncertainty in language of trust will be construed, if possible, in favor of beneficiary and against trustee.

2. Trusts ⇐191(1), 206(1).

Settlor's letter regarding creation, duration, and objects of trust, and trustee's declaration of trust did not authorize trustee to execute trust deed and grant deed to trust property.

Letter disclosed it was the desire of the settlor that the property should be preserved as a home for her children until her youngest child became of age, and to effect this intention, she desired that the property be deeded to her sister as trustee, while in the declaration of trust it was stated that the sister as trustee had no legal, equitable, or beneficial ownership in the property but held it in trust for the named beneficiaries.

3. Trusts ⇐182.

In absence of authority to convey or incumber trust property, trustee had duty to keep property and deliver it to designated beneficiaries on termination of trust.

4. Trusts ⇐171.

Trustee can adopt measures and do acts which, though not specified in trust instrument, are implied in its directions, and proper for making it effectual.

5. Trusts ⇐206(1).

Where settlor desired property to be preserved as home for her children, trustee would have implied authority to execute trust deed on trust property to secure money borrowed for carrying out trust.

Trustee would be impliedly authorized to execute trust deed on trust property to secure payment of money borrowed for preserving property as a home because, although not specifically authorized by the settlor, such act was nevertheless implied in the general directions contained in the letter of the settlor to effect that she desired the property should be preserved as a home for her children, and because such act was a reasonable and proper means for carrying out the settlor's expressed desire, "preservation of property" particularly for the specific purpose of providing a home implying care and management.

6. Trusts ⇐262.

Trustee executing trust deed to trust property to secure money borrowed for trust purposes, and bank taking such trust deed as security had burden of showing its execution was implied in settlor's directions, and proper for effecting settlor's intention.

7. Trusts ⇐262.

Evidence did not sustain finding trustee's execution of trust deed on trust property was required to effect settlor's intention.

8. Trusts ⇐203, 206(6).

Bank taking grant deed and trust deed to trust property from trustee with actual knowledge of circumstances of trust held not "good faith purchaser"; hence grant and trust deeds were void (Civ. Code, § 869a).

Bank taking such deeds was not a "good faith purchaser" under Civ. Code, § 869a, because it had actual notice that the original deed, although absolute on its face, in fact, conveyed title to the trustee to be held in trust for named beneficiaries, and had notice of the objects of the trust, length of time it was to continue, and of the declaration of trust executed by the trustee to effect that she had no equitable, legal, or beneficial interest in the property, but held only as trustee, phrase "good faith" generally importing lack of notice by a purchaser of equities of third parties, and term "bona fide purchaser" being defined as one who buys property of another without notice that some third person has a right therein, and who pays full price for the same before he has notice of the claim of the other party.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Bona Fide Purchaser" and "Good Faith," see Words and Phrases.]

9. Vendor and purchaser ⇐228(1).

Purchaser or incumbrancer with notice of equities of third persons cannot claim protection afforded purchasers in good faith.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

Action by Chester Brooks Wood and another, minors, by Chester G. Wood, their father and guardian ad litem, against the American National Bank and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal.

Reversed.

Charles Bagg, of San Bernardino, for appellants.

David W. Richards, of San Bernardino, and Donald Plympton Mayhew, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

JENNINGS, J.

This action was instituted by the plaintiffs, Chester Brooks Wood and Carolyn Lyde Wood, minor children of Letta Wood, deceased, through their duly appointed guardian ad litem, to have certain instruments affecting the title to real property in the county of San Bernardino declared void and canceled. From a judgment denying to them the relief sought, plaintiffs have prosecuted this appeal.

The record herein presents the following facts: On March 16, 1925, the real property, the title to which was affected by the instruments alleged by plaintiffs to be void, was conveyed by grant deed to the defendant Bess Brooks. This deed was absolute on its face and conveyed title in fee to the grantee named therein. On the same day Bess Brooks executed an instrument wherein she certified that the real property which had been conveyed to her was in fact the property of her sister, Letta Wood, and that she held title thereto in trust for her said sister and would upon her request execute a deed to the property as she might direct. On March 9, 1925, a letter was written by Mrs. C. G. Wood, who is shown by the record to be the same person as Letta Wood, addressed to R. D. McCook, president of the American National Bank in San Bernardino. That portion of the letter which is of importance to the questions herein involved is in the following language:

"Your letter rec'd today. Thanks very much for being so prompt in making payments on this property of mine. So I told you over the phone this property was given me by my father to be kept always as a home and I want to follow out his wishes & I know it would be my father's wish that if I do not recover that this property should be kept intact until my children are grown.

"I realize that Mr. Wood drinks quite heavily and so is not responsible.

"Yes, I would like to follow your suggestion and have the property deeded to her my sister as Trustee.

"If anything happens I do not recover would like the property held in trust for my daughter Carolyn when she become of age. If you will phone my sister she will place the $20. at your disposal.

"Unless my sister is appointed trustee, I realize my son & daughter would never have the benefit of this property should anything happen I don't recover. Especially since you advised me that Mr. Wood wished $1,000.00 placed to his credit. You know a man who drinks is not responsible."

On March 16, 1925, R. D. McCook signed a letter which was addressed to Mrs. C. G. Wood. That part of the communication important to be here noted reads as follows:

"We have prepared Deed for signature of W. E. Daimwood and wife to the home property here, deeding it to your sister Bess Brooks. Your sister has executed a Declaration of Trust which I inclose herewith. This declaration is evidence, as you will note, that the property is actually yours, held in her in trust only. Will say that I have had her sign this in duplicate and we have another copy of same here, which I am attaching to the copy of this letter and which will be filed in our regular letter file for use in case you should lose or mislay your copy.

"It will be impossible to deed or mortgage this property now without the signature of your sister."

Letta Wood died March 21, 1926. On April 6, 1926, Bess Brooks executed a trust deed conveying the property which is the subject of the present controversy to the defendant American National Bank in trust to secure the payment of a promissory note for $2,200, executed by Bess Brooks on the same date in favor of said bank. On April 12, 1927, Bess Brooks executed a grant deed conveying title to the said property to the American National Bank. This deed recited that title to the property was conveyed to the bank subject to the trust deed theretofore executed in favor of the bank. On the same date on which the grant deed was executed an instrument entitled "Declaration of Trust" was executed by the American National Bank of San Bernardino. This instrument recites the conveyance of the property to the bank by a deed absolute in form executed by Bess Brooks, denominated the trustor; that no consideration was paid by the bank for the conveyance, but that it was accepted and will be held upon the trust, terms, and conditions and for the purposes specified in the declaration of trust until such time as the beneficiaries named therein shall have attained the age of 21 years. The beneficiaries designated in the instrument are the two minor children of Letta Wood. It is stated in the declaration that it is understood and agreed between the trustee and trustor that, prior to the conveyance of the property by the trustor to the trustee, the trustor had no legal, equitable, or beneficial interest in the property, but that she held legal title thereto as trustee for the sole benefit of the beneficiaries named in the declaration. It is provided that the trustee bank may at any time, either upon written order of the trustor, or, when in the judgment of the trustee, it appears advantageous to the trust estate, sell and dispose of the property holding the proceeds therefrom in trust for the sole benefit of the beneficiaries. It is further provided that the trust shall cease when the younger of the two beneficiaries attains the age of 21 years. Appended to this declaration is a certificate signed by Bess Brooks wherein she certifies that she is the person named in the instrument as trustor and that the declaration of trust fully and correctly states the terms and trust under which the property is to be held, managed, and disposed of by the trustee and that she consents to, approves, ratifies, and confirms the same in all particulars. At some time subsequent to the execution of the grant deed to the defendant bank and the execution of the above-described "Declaration of Trust" the bank entered into a contract with the defendant Robert H. Emery by which the bank agreed that, upon the payment by him or his assigns of a specified sum of money, it would execute a deed conveying the property to said purchaser. Thereupon the purchaser under this contract took possession of the property.

[1-3] The question whether the respondent, Bess Brooks, was authorized to execute the trust deed and the grant deed to respondent bank depends ultimately upon an analysis of the letter of March 9, 1925, written by Letta Wood, addressed to the president of respondent bank. This communication constituted the only evidence before the court which shed any light upon the intention of the owner of the property regarding the nature and terms of the trust which she desired to create with respect to her real property. The interpretation of this letter therefore furnishes the only key to the solution of the problem here presented. Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Duffill, 191 Cal. 629, 642, 218 P. 14. The first paragraph of the letter states that the property had been given to the writer by her father "to be kept always as a home"; that it is her desire to follow out his wishes; and that she knows it would be her father's wish that, if she should not recover, the property "should be kept intact" until her children are grown. In the third paragraph the writer states that she would like to have the property deeded to her sister, as trustee. She further declares in the fourth paragraph that, if she should not recover, she would like to have the property held in trust for her daughter, Carolyn, when she becomes of age. The fifth paragraph contains the following statement: "Unless my sister is appointed trustee, I realize my son & daughter would never have the benefit of this property should anything happen I don't recover." The remainder of this paragraph and the single sentence which constitutes the second paragraph indicate clearly the reason for the writer's anxiety concerning the property. She here adverts to the fact that her husband drinks heavily and is therefore not responsible. It thus clearly appears from the language of the letter that it was the desire and intention of the settlor that the property should be preserved as a home for her children until the daughter, who appears to be the younger of the two children, should become of age and to carry this intention into effect she desired that her property be deeded to her sister as trustee and that it be held in trust for the two children. It is true that she states that she wishes the property held in trust for the daughter alone, but other language contained in the letter and its general scope and purpose indicate that it was the desire and intention of the writer that the property be held in trust for both children. The clearly expressed statement that, if she should not recover, she knows that it would be her father's wish that the property, which had been given to her to be kept always as a home, should be kept intact until the children are grown, and that she desires to fulfill his wishes does not warrant the contention of respondents that it was the intention of the settlor that the property be sold and the proceeds be preserved for the beneficiaries. It may well be that great benefit would be derived by the beneficiaries should this interpretation be adopted. But the language employed by the settlor so clearly evidences her desire that the property shall be preserved as a home until the younger child has become of age that strained effort would be required in order that the interpretation contended for by respondents should be adopted. Furthermore, it is the rule that, if there be any doubt or uncertainty in the language of the trust, it will be construed, if possible, in favor of the beneficiary and against the trustee. Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Duffill, supra; Ringrose v. Gleadall, 17 Cal. App. 664, 667, 121 P. 407. It is to be remembered also that the grantee in the deed from the Daimwoods, dated March 16, 1925, the respondent herein Bess Brooks on the same day on which the deed conveying title in fee to her was made, executed an instrument wherein she declared that the property deeded to her by the Daimwoods is in fact the property of her sister, Letta Wood, that she holds title to the property in trust for her, and will upon her request execute a deed thereto as she may direct. Herein is contained no intimation or suggestion that the person who thus admits that she holds title merely as trustee considered that she had any authority to do anything with the property other than to execute a deed to it as her sister might direct. It is significant that, although Letta Wood lived for a year after the deed conveying title was executed, she gave no directions, so far as appears, to her sister, Bess Brooks, to execute a deed to the property to any one. It thus appears that neither in the letter in which the settlor expressed her desire for the creation of the trust, its duration, its object, and the beneficiaries for whom she desired its creation nor in the instrument by which the trustee declared that she held title to the property in trust is to be found any authority given directly or by implication to the trustee to convey the property. In the absence of such authority the duty was imposed upon the trustee to keep the property and to deliver it to the designated beneficiaries upon the termination of the trust. Goad v. Montgomery, 119 Cal. 552, 560, 51 P. 681, 63 Am. St. Rep. 145; Huntoon v. Southern T. & C. Bank, 107 Cal. App. 121, 290 P. 86. Unless, therefore, the conveyance by the trustee, Bess Brooks, to the respondent bank is protected by the statute it would seem to follow logically that it was void and that the judgment refusing so to declare it is incorrect. It is contended by respondents and was evidently the opinion of the trial court that the situation thus presented is covered by the provisions of section 869a, Civil Code. This contention will receive consideration in a later part of the opinion herein.

[4-7] Appellants urge that the trust deed executed by respondent Bess Brooks on April 6, 1926, in favor of the respondent bank to secure the payment of the promissory note for $2,200 is likewise void as an unauthorized act on the part of the trustee, Bess Brooks. In this connection, it is said that the trust under which the trustee held title to the property is a dry, passive trust requiring the performance of no active duty by the trustee who was the mere depositary of the naked title charged with no duty and without power to take possession or manage or exercise any control over the property. But again seeking to discover the settlor's intention in this regard as it may be derived from an interpretation of her letter of March 9, 1925, addressed to the president of the respondent bank, it appears that she undoubtedly desired that the property should be preserved as a home for her children, and, therefore, because of her expressed belief of her husband's irresponsibility, desired that title be conveyed to her sister as trustee for the children. Manifestly, her desire for the preservation of the property as a home for her children might be effectually and rapidly thwarted by the involuntary imposition of liens against the property for various charges, e. g., tax liens. When it is remembered that at the time the letter of March 9, 1925, was written, the daughter of Letta Wood was but 5 years and 2 months of age and her clearly expressed desire and intention was that the trust should continue until this child should attain her majority, it is apparent that, in order to carry into effect the settlor's desire that the property be preserved as a home, something more than mere passive holding of title by Bess Brooks would be required. Preservation imports some degree of activity. Preservation of property particularly for the specific purpose of providing a home implies care and management. Therefore, although the execution of the trust deed by the trustee was not authorized by the letter of the settlor from whose interpretation we deduce her intentions respecting the nature and objects of the trust, it is nevertheless the rule that a trustee has "authority to adopt measures and to do acts which, though not specified in the instrument, are implied in its general directions, and are reasonable and proper means for making it effectual." 2 Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. § 1062; Gilbert v. Penfield, 124 Cal. 234, 238, 56 P. 1107; Kipp v. O'Melveny, 2 Cal. App. 142, 144, 83 P. 264. We are then of the opinion that, upon proper showing by the trustee, Bess Brooks, of the necessity of borrowing money to discharge valid claims and liens against the property held by her in trust in order that she might protect and preserve it as a home for the minor children of the settlor, the trial court might properly conclude that the execution of a trust deed by the trustee to secure payment of money borrowed for such purposes, although not specifically authorized by the settlor was nevertheless an act implied in the general directions contained in the letter of March 9, 1925, and a reasonable and proper means for carrying out the settlor's expressed desire and intention that the property be preserved as a home for her minor children. We are also of the opinion, however, that the burden of making such showing rested upon respondents Bess Brooks and the American National Bank of San Bernardino. This burden was not sustained by the above-named respondents. The only evidence respecting this important feature of the case contained in the record consists of the testimony of the witness R. D. McCook, president of respondent bank. This witness testified that the money to secure whose repayment the trust deed was executed was disbursed under very careful supervision and was used in the payment of claims against the property and for bills and accounts against Letta Wood, most of which were accumulated during her last illness, and that the money was borrowed by the trustee because of the very urgent necessity of paying the charges that had accumulated. This testimony, in our opinion, was not sufficient to authorize the trial court in finding, as it did, that the execution of the trust deed to respondent bank was an act required to be done in order that the object and purpose for which the trust was created should be accomplished.

[8] There remains for consideration the question of the application of section 869a, Civil Code, to the grant deed and the earlier trust deed executed in favor of the respondent bank by the trustee, Bess Brooks. It is the contention of respondents that, since it satisfactorily appears that the transaction between the trustee, Bess Brooks, and the respondent bank whereby the sum of $2,200 was loaned by the bank to the trustee who thereupon executed the trust deed to secure the repayment of the loan was free from fraud and valuable consideration, to wit, the loan of $2,200, was given, therefore the presumption that the trustee held title to the property covered by the trust deed in her own individual right free from any trust became conclusive in favor of the incumbrancer as to the beneficiaries undisclosed by the original deed which conveyed title to the trustee. It cannot be maintained nor is it suggested that the respondent bank, incumbrancer under the trust deed, did not have actual notice that the original deed, whereby title was conveyed to respondent Bess Brooks, although, on its face, it conveyed absolute title, in fact conveyed merely legal title which was to be held in trust for the beneficiaries named in the letter written by Letta Wood on March 9, 1925. The letter of March 16, 1925, signed by the president of the respondent bank addressed to Letta Wood shows that the deed from W. E. Daimwood and wife to Bess Brooks was prepared by the respondent bank and that the declaration of trust executed by Bess Brooks on the same date on which the deed to her was executed was sent to Letta Wood with the letter. Further, the declaration of trust executed by the respondent bank on April 12, 1926, recites that "it is understood and agreed by and between the parties hereto namely, the trustee and trustor, that prior to the conveyance of the above described real property to the trustee, the trustor had no legal, equitable or beneficial interest in the above described real property but that the trustor held legal title to the property as trustee for the sole benefit of the two beneficiaries hereunder." Nevertheless, although it is undisputed that the incumbrancer had full knowledge of the fact that respondent Bess Brooks held title, not in her own right, but merely as trustee, it is said that, since the original deed purported to convey title to her absolutely without naming any beneficiaries, therefore the respondent bank which accepted the trust deed in good faith and for valuable consideration is protected by the conclusive presumption raised by the statute. It may be conceded that the loan of $2,200 by the bank constituted valuable consideration. It may also be conceded that the transaction between the bank and Bess Brooks was free from any taint of fraud. It is obvious that the solution of the problem depends ultimately on the meaning of the phrase "good faith" as used in the statute. If, as stated in Heney v. Sutro & Co., 28 Cal. App. 698, 702, 153 P. 972, 974, it "imports that in any given case the transaction involved was honestly conceived and consummated without collusion, fraud, or knowledge of fraud, and without intent to assist in a fraudulent or otherwise unlawful design," the contention of respondents that the statute was framed to cover just such a situation as is here presented possesses merit. In this connection it is pointed out that section 869, Civil Code, provides that, where an express trust is created in relation to real property but is not declared in the grant to the trustee or in an instrument signed by him and recorded in the same office with the grant to the trustee, the grant to the trustee must be deemed absolute in favor of purchasers from such trustee, without notice, and for a valuable consideration. It is said that the failure of the Legislature to incorporate in a statute adopted at a much later date the element of lack of notice by a purchaser or incumbrancer from a trustee imports an intent on the part of the lawmaking body that lack of notice shall not be regarded as a necessary element of good faith as this phrase is used in the statute under consideration. The very fact that section 869, Civil Code, requires lack of notice by a purchaser from a trustee under an express trust in order that the grant from such trustee shall be deemed absolute while the statute later enacted dealing with a similar situation but broader in terms contains no requirement that a purchaser from the trustee shall have received the grant without notice of rights of the original grantor or of beneficiaries unnamed in the instrument conveying title to the original grantee is said to be significant and to indicate conclusively a legislative intent that lack of notice by a purchaser or incumbrancer shall not be an essential prerequisite to the protection of a purchaser or incumbrancer who acts in good faith and parts with valuable consideration in return for a grant or instrument of incumbrance from one who holds title under a deed of conveyance which fails to designate the beneficiaries for whose benefit the trust was created. Careful search fails to disclose any decision of the Supreme Court of California or of any Court of Appeal of this state wherein that portion of section 869a, Civil Code, here under consideration has been construed. The phrase "good faith" generally imports lack of notice by a purchaser of equities of third parties. In Bouvier's Law Dictionary a bona fide purchaser is defined to be "one who buys property of another without notice that some third person has a right to, or interest in, such property, and pays a full and fair price for the same at the time of such purchase, or before he has notice of the claim or interest of such other in the property." In Eversdon v. Mayhew, 65 Cal. 163, 167, 3 P. 641, it is said that a purchaser of property who has notice, actual or constructive, of the prior equity of a third person is not a bona fide purchaser. The rule thus declared is approved in Davis v. Ward, 109 Cal. 186, 41 P. 1010, 50 Am. St. Rep. 29. In County Bank of San Luis Obispo v. Fox, 119 Cal. 61, 51 P. 11, 12, the rule is thus stated: "Again, it is well settled that one who claims to be a bona fide purchaser must plead the facts essential to make him such; that is that he purchased for value, and paid the consideration, before he had notice of the prior conveyance or mortgage."

In Kenniff v. Caulfield, 140 Cal. 34, 45, 73 P. 803, 806, the court speaking of a bona fide purchaser said: "To entitle a party to protection as such a purchaser, he must aver and prove the possession of his grantor, the purchase of the premises, the payment of the purchase money in good faith, and without notice, actual or constructive, prior to and down to the time of its payment; for, if he had notice actual or constructive, at any moment of time before the payment of the money, he is not a bona fide purchaser."

[9] This language is quoted with approval in Title Guarantee, etc., Co. v. Henry, 208 Cal. 185, 192, 280 P. 959. It would appear therefore that a purchaser or incumbrancer of real property who is shown to have had notice of prior equities of third persons is not a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith. It is obvious that, if the deed by which the property was originally conveyed to Bess Brooks had contained the names of the beneficiaries, the respondent bank could not have been heard to maintain that it was a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith for the reason that it would then have had notice that the beneficiaries had rights in the property which could not be destroyed or nullified even though the bank had paid a fair price and the transaction was untainted by fraud. How then can the bank with full and actual knowledge of all the circumstances under which the trust was created, the names of the beneficiaries, the object of the trust, and the length of time it was to continue, maintain that it acted in good faith in accepting a deed of trust from the person known by it to be merely a trustee, holding legal title for the sole benefit of such beneficiaries? It will not do to say that in this particular case the transaction was in reality for the benefit and protection of the cestuis que trustent and therefore should be upheld. The general rule is that a purchaser or incumbrancer with notice of the equities of third persons cannot claim the protection afforded to purchasers in good faith. To hold that a purchaser or incumbrancer with such knowledge shall prevail because it appears that such purchaser or incumbrancer had no intention of defrauding the beneficiaries would serve to open the door to the perpetration of fraud. The reasoning which applies to the trust deed applies with equal force to the grant deed executed by respondent Bess Brooks in favor of respondent American National Bank of San Bernardino.

For the reasons herein set forth the judgment is reversed.

MARKS, J.

I concur in the foregoing opinion and judgment. Nothing said therein should be construed as holding that the superior court, sitting as a court of equity, might not have power to order a sale of the real property forming the corpus of the trust, in a proper proceeding if circumstances should arise showing that such an action were necessary and the only method in which any portion of the trust estate could be preserved for the beneficiaries. 26 R. C. L. 1282, § 133; 39 Cyc. 552. This question is not presented on this appeal and has not been considered by us.

ROWLAND v. BRUTON.

Civ. 8135.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 8, 1932.

1. Venue ⇐41.

Defendant is entitled to have action removed for trial to county of his residence if no cause of action be stated against codefendants who reside in county where complaint is filed.

2. Sheriffs and constables ⇐113(1).

Sheriff who seized automobiles under execution, and complied with statute in receiving bonds indemnifying third party claimant, is not liable for conversion (Code Civ. Proc. § 689, as amended by St. 1929, p. 661).

3. Venue ⇐22(1).

Presence of foreign corporation as codefendant cannot deprive individual defendant of trial in county of his residence (Code Civ. Proc. § 392 et seq.).

This is so since a foreign corporation, by doing business in California, does not establish a residence in any particular county, such as is contemplated by the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 392 et seq. relating to place of trial.

4. Venue ⇐52½.

When in opposition to motion for change of venue, convenience of witnesses is alleged, and requires that action be tried in county where brought, place of trial will not ordinarily be changed.

5. Venue ⇐37.

Unless answer has been filed at time demand for change of venue is made, countermotion to retain case on ground of convenience of witnesses will not lie.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John F. Pullen, Judge.

Action by Adele Rowland against Martin P. Bruton, administrator of the Estate of Josephine Park Tearle, deceased, and others. From an order denying motion for change of place of trial, named defendant appeals, and files motion to submit cause on his brief.

Motion to submit cause granted; order denying motion for change of place of trial reversed.

Marcel E. Cerf, Henry Robinson, and Herbert A. Leland, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Edward E. McCullough, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J.

The cause pending herein is an appeal from an order of the superior court of Los Angeles county, denying an application for change of place of trial of the action from the superior court of the county of Los Angeles to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. The transcript was filed on November 19, 1931, and the appellant's brief was filed on December 22, 1931. Upon application of the attorney for respondent, his time for filing brief was extended to February 1, 1932. No further extension of time was requested or granted and no brief has been filed for respondent. On this condition of the record, appellant has submitted his motion that the cause be submitted for decision upon appellant's brief.

In rule V, section 1, of the rules of this court, it is provided that, if respondent shall not file his points and authorities within the time allowed therefor, the cause may be submitted for decision upon appellant's brief, in which case the court may, in its discretion, decide the case upon the statement of facts contained in such brief. It appears that the motion is meritorious and should be granted. We will therefore proceed to determine the appeal on its merits.

This action was brought against appellant Bruton, administrator of the estate of Josephine Park Tearle, and against National Surety Company, Wm. I. Traeger (sheriff of Los Angeles county), and Conway Tearle, to recover damages for conversion of two automobiles alleged to have been the property of the plaintiff. It appears from the complaint that these automobiles were seized by the sheriff under a writ of execution issued out of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, in an action of Mrs. Tearle as plaintiff, wherein she had obtained a judgment against Conway Tearle. Plaintiff duly filed a third party claim to said automobiles, and thereupon, July 12, 1930, Mrs. Tearle filed with the sheriff indemnity bonds and required the sheriff to retain the property under the writ of execution. Thereafter the property was sold under said writ. The plaintiff alleged her ownership of said automobiles and the facts showing her damages by reason of the unlawful seizing, taking, withholding, and sale of her property.

Defendant Bruton, upon the filing of his demurrer to the complaint in said action, filed an affidavit showing his status as a resident of the city and county of San Francisco, and demanded that the place of trial of the action be transferred to that city and county. A motion to that end was duly presented to the court and was denied. Thereupon defendant appealed from the order denying change of place of trial.

[1, 2] At the hearing of said motion for change of place of trial, the fact of appellant's residence in San Francisco was not denied; but the attorney for plaintiff filed an affidavit purporting to set forth reasons for retaining the case in the county of Los Angeles on the ground of convenience of witnesses. But no issue of fact had then been joined. A defendant is entitled to have the action removed for trial to the county of his own residence if no cause of action be stated against the codefendants who reside in the county where the complaint is filed. Donohoe v. Wooster, 163 Cal. 114, 124 P. 730. The complaint did not state any cause of action against Conway Tearle, who was a judgment debtor in the action wherein the execution was issued. No cause of action was stated against the sheriff; for the complaint in this action does not show that, in demanding and receiving the indemnity bond provided for by section 689 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the sheriff did not comply with the requirements of the law. Under the provisions of said section 689, as amended in the year 1929 (St. 1929, p. 661), it appears that, where the facts are as above stated, as existing in this case, the sheriff is not liable in damages as for conversion of the property. This question came before the Fourth District Court of Appeal in Cory v. Cooper, 4 P.(2d) 581, 583. The provisions of said code section and the intention and effect of the amendment, are there carefully stated. Among other things, the court said: "While the section, before it was amended, provided that the sheriff was not bound to hold the property unless he received an undertaking which was to protect him from the liability he was assuming, as amended the section makes no provision for any bond in his favor, although providing that he must hold the property when a bond is given for the protection of the third party. It is thus made mandatory upon him to hold the property, while his former protection is removed, and at the same time a new protection is given to the third party. We think these respective portions of the act should be considered together, and that, so taken, their meaning is that a third party claimant may not look to a sheriff who has in all respects complied with the statute, in so far as recovering damages for conversion is concerned."

[3] The remaining codefendant is the National Surety Company, a New York corporation. A foreign corporation by doing business in this state does not establish a residence in any particular county, such as is contemplated by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to place of trial (section 392 et seq.). It follows that the presence of a foreign corporation as a codefendant cannot deprive an individual defendant of a trial in the county of his residence. San Jose Hospital v. Etherton, 84 Cal. App. 516, 258 P. 611.

[4, 5] It may be that, in denying the motion for change of place of trial, the court below rested its decision upon the claim that the convenience of witnesses required that the trial be held in Los Angeles county. "When, in opposition to a motion for a change to the residence of the defendant, the convenience of witnesses is alleged, and requires that an action be tried in the county where it was brought, the place of trial will not ordinarily be changed. This rule, however, is subject to the exception that, unless answer has been filed at the time the demand for change of venue is made, a countermotion to retain the case on such ground will not lie, for the obvious reason that, until the issues are settled, the court cannot determine what testimony will be material." Gordon v. Perkins, 203 Cal. 183, 263 P. 231.

Wills ⇐423.

On expiration of six months after probate of will, probate held conclusive against all persons not under disability, subject only to modification made by testamentary document thereafter probated (Probate Code, § 384).

Application by George A. Clarken and another against the Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, and Charles S. Crail, as Judge thereof, for a writ of prohibition to restrain respondents from proceeding with the hearing of a contest to probate of will.

Writ granted.

A. J. Mullen and Ray E. Nimmo, both of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

STEPHENS, Justice pro tem.

The will was probated and the statutory six months had run without any contest having been filed. Thereafter a writing was admitted to probate as a codicil to the will. On the same day the proponent of the codicil filed a contest alleging that the will (not including the codicil) was drawn, signed, and published while the testatrix was under the undue influence of the executor named in the will, and that he substituted his will for hers. The executor, the petitioner here, filed a demurrer and motion to strike the contest on the ground that the contest comes too late. The rulings on both were adverse to the executor and he is here requesting this court to prohibit the superior court from proceeding with such contest, alleging that the costs of preparation for the trial, the trial itself, and the delay in the administration of the estate will be expensive to the estate.

No response whatever has been made to this petition either by the superior court or the contestant therein.

We think the entertainment of the contest by the superior court is beyond its jurisdiction. Section 384, Probate Code. When the statutory six months after probate of the will had expired, its probate was conclusive against all persons not under a disability, subject only to any modification that might be made by a testamentary document thereafter probated. Criminal law ⇐1169(1).

In robbery prosecution, admitting pistol as exhibit held not prejudicial, irrespective of sufficient identification, where evidence showed that defendant was armed with similar pistol at time of robbery.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Martin I. Welsh, Judge.

Clarence Cain was convicted of robbery, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

George E. Foote, of Sacramento, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

Mr. Justice PLUMMER delivered the opinion of the court.

The appellant was convicted upon an information charging that he did wilfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and forcibly take from the person of one J. A. Olson lawful money of the United States of the value of $20. That the taking was accomplished by means of force, and at the time of the taking appellant was armed with a deadly weapon, to wit, an automatic pistol. From the judgment following the conviction, the defendant appeals, and presents for our consideration an alleged error on the part of the court in permitting a certain automatic pistol to be admitted as an exhibit in the cause. No briefs were filed; no other objection was made upon oral argument to any of the rulings of the court, nor to the instructions given by the court to the jury.

The record shows that J. A. Olson was the keeper of a gas filling station at Alhambra boulevard and O street, in the city of Sacramento; that on or about the 8th day of March, 1932, at about 10 o'clock in the evening, while Olson was sitting in the service station just referred to, reading a story in the Saturday Evening Post, the defendant pushed open the door leading into the room where Olson was sitting and commanded him to put up his hands. Olson noticed that the defendant had an automatic pistol which the defendant held in one of his hands. The defendant ordered Olson to open the cash register, which Olson did. While the defendant was taking the money from the cash register, he ordered Olson to lie down on the floor. After taking the money, the defendant ordered Olson to get up, and asked if there was a telephone in the building, and where it was. Being informed that there was a telephone in an adjoining room, the defendant marched Olson into the room, compelled him to lie down on a cot, and, while Olson was lying in this position, the defendant jerked the telephone from the wall, and told Olson to lie still for a few minutes until he made his "get-away." During all of this time the defendant was unmasked, and Olson had a clear view of the defendant, and was able to identify him when the defendant was subsequently arrested. Following the robbery just explained, the defendant ran out of the building, and Olson sought the services of the police department. The defendant, however, was not arrested until some time the following April.

At the time of the arrest of the defendant, it appears that he was armed with an automatic pistol similar to the one in his possession at the time of the robbery. This pistol was admitted in evidence over the objection of the defendant. Some testimony was introduced as to the attempted flight of the defendant at the time he was arrested, and of the scuffle between the defendant and officers when they dispossessed him of the pistol just referred to. This testimony, however, appears to have been stricken out by the trial court, and all that was left in the record in relation to the gun was that the defendant was armed with a gun at the time of his arrest, similar to the one described by Olson as being in the possession of the defendant at the time of the robbery.

Irrespective of whether the gun was or was not sufficiently identified as being the gun which the defendant used at the time of the robbery, the evidence shows beyond controversy that the defendant was armed with an automatic pistol at the time of the robbery, and that it occurred in the nighttime, which fixes the degree of the offense.

The record also shows that the defendant, after his arrest, admitted that he had previously held up a service station.

Finding no merit in the appeal in this cause, the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial and the judgment are affirmed.

In suit for death of child killed by falling tree, evidence sustained finding that city should have known of condition of tree (St. 1923, p. 675).

Evidence disclosed that a nurseryman had recently seen a limb of a tree in the park fall; that the limb was rotten; that a police officer came over and made some notes; that he looked at other trees in the park and found some of them rotten; that the nurseryman observed the tree involved and that it looked rotten just below where the limb branched out; and that a number of other witnesses gave similar testimony showing that the dangerous condition of the tree had been observable for about two years.

BARNARD, P. J.

On July 28, 1930, while standing in what is known as the "Plaza" in the city of San Diego, Dorothy Edwards, a girl of 19, was struck and killed by the falling top of a palm tree. This is an action for damages brought by her parents under the provisions of the statute adopted in 1923 (Stats. 1923, p. 675). The Plaza is a small public park in the heart of the business section of San Diego. Around this park and just within the sidewalk lines there is a row of cocos plumosa palms, the trees being approximately 35 or 40 feet in height. The park is much used by the general public, including some 3,500 to 5,000 people who daily wait there for street cars. On the day named, Dorothy Edwards was standing in the park awaiting a street car. Without sound or other warning the top of one of these palm trees, weighing from 350 to 400 pounds, suddenly fell, striking the girl and causing injuries from which she died. There is evidence that the day was calm and clear with only a slight breeze blowing. While the head of the tree which fell was green and to all appearances like the other trees growing near by, it appears that the trunk of the tree was affected with dry rot and badly decayed. The break occurred about 1½ or 2 feet below the point where the fronds of the palm branched out and some 25 or 30 feet above the ground. At the point of the break the tree had a diameter of about 10 inches; but that portion of the trunk inside the bark was decayed to within a couple of inches of the center, leaving only a central heart through the tree about 2 inches in diameter which was not decayed. A verdict for $20,000 was returned by a jury, which was later reduced by the court to $12,000 in connection with a motion for a new trial. From the judgment which followed, this appeal is taken.

[1] The first point raised is that actual knowledge of the condition of the tree was not brought home to the appellant and that constructive notice thereof is not sufficient under the statute. It has now been settled that constructive notice in such a case is sufficient and that this may be established by showing long continued neglect of conditions that should have been known and seen. Boyce v. San Diego High School Dist. (Cal. Sup.) 10 P.(2d) 62; Dawson v. Tulare Union High School, 98 Cal. App. 138, 276 P. 424; Bennett v. Kings County (Cal. App.) 12 P.(2d) 47.

[2] The only other point raised is that the verdict and judgment are entirely unsupported in that the evidence is wholly insufficient to establish constructive notice to the appellant city of the dangerous condition of the tree in question. The usual rule is that where there is any substantial evidence of a state of facts or circumstances which should impute notice, the question as to whether such facts are sufficient to constitute notice to a party is one of fact for the jury. The rule is thus stated in 43 Corpus Juris, 1288, 1289: "Except where the evidence is legally insufficient, or the facts are undisputed and but one inference can be reasonably drawn from them, it is ordinarily a question for the jury whether, under all the circumstances, the municipality had notice, actual or constructive, of the particular defect or obstruction, as whether under the circumstances the defect or obstruction existed for such a length of time as to charge the municipality with constructive notice thereof; or whether, considering its nature, location, and duration, the exercise of ordinary care and diligence by the municipal authorities would have disclosed its existence and danger in time for repair or warning before plaintiff received his injury therefrom; and if there is any evidence of notice the court cannot order a nonsuit, although it may set aside a verdict for plaintiff if contrary to or against the weight of the evidence."

The question as to the length of time necessary to constitute long-continued neglect is also largely one of fact which naturally depends on surrounding circumstances and varies with the facts of each case. A higher degree of care and diligence and a correspondingly shorter time might well be required in discovering and remedying a dangerous condition in a small park in the center of a populous city, largely used by the public and with few trees to inspect, than might be required in a more isolated spot frequented by fewer people and with a larger number of trees.

[3] In the light of these rules, we think there is evidence in the record which supports this judgment in the respect complained of. An experienced nurseryman testified that about two months prior to the injury in question, while standing in the Plaza, he observed a good-sized limb fall from a tree and strike a woman; that this limb was rotten and decayed on the end; that a police officer came over and made some notes; and that at that time he went around and looked at the other trees in the park and noticed that several of them were rotten, cracked open, and spongy in appearance. He further testified that on that occasion he observed the tree which is involved here; that about 3 feet below where the limbs branched out the tree looked spongy or rotten; that there was a spot about 6 or 8 inches in diameter; and that this condition was apparent from the sidewalk. Another witness, a gardener, testified that he had observed this tree at various times during the latter part of 1928 and during a part of 1929; that the tree was partly decayed; that the decayed part was 1 or 2 feet below the "shingles"; that the tree appeared to be afflicted with dry rot and that in his opinion approximately one-third of the circumference was thus affected; and that in October, 1929, this decay was observable from across the street. He further testified that he examined the tree both from the sidewalk across the street and from the sidewalk immediately beneath the tree; that the decayed portion covered an area of at least 2 or 3 inches; and that the decayed spot "was not covered with outer bark, it was all decayed and falling down, the outer bark had decayed inwardly, the bark had fallen off." An agricultural inspector for the county of San Diego testified that he saw the trunk of this tree as it remained standing after the accident and that it showed other places where the dry rot had attacked the tissue, and that he saw this condition from the ground. He also testified that a person could tell that this particular tree was diseased without probing it. Another witness testified that he examined the portion of the tree which had broken off; that it was rotten and decayed; that it looked like a dry rot; that he looked up at the trunk of the tree which remained standing and observed that 3 or 4 feet down from the top of the standing portion "there were decayed places, that you could tell where it was sloughed off, the bark had sloughed off." Several other witnesses testified to the effect that the butt end of the fallen portion of the tree was rotten and that the decayed portions could be crumpled in the hands, and that a similar condition prevailed at the top of the stump where the break occurred. There was also evidence that it would take several years for the rot starting from the outer portion of the tree to reach the stage of development existing at the time of the break.

Under the charter of the city of San Diego, all parks and plazas were under the control of the board of public works, and directly in charge of a superintendent of parks. This superintendent of parks testified that, in the line of his duty, he examined the trees in the Plaza several times a year to see if they needed trimming; that there were 24 or 26 trees in this park; that he observed the tree involved in this case, among others, at such times; that he made such an examination the latter part of June, 1930; that "prior to June" he made no examination of these trees for disease; and that: "There were no symptoms of disease discernible anywhere that I saw. Of course I only gave it a cursory overlook so as to see the necessity for trimming."

While a number of witnesses testified that on various occasions they had observed this particular tree from the ground and were unable to see anything wrong with it, it appears from the evidence above set forth that a condition existed which had been observable to others for a period of nearly two years, and which may well have been taken by the jury as one which should have been seen and remedied by the city officials. We think the evidence referred to is sufficient to support the verdict and judgment, and that it may not be said as a matter of law that the evidence is not sufficient to establish such notice to the city as is requisite under the statute.

This is an action upon a promissory note. Defendants appeared and made motions for a change of place of trial to San Luis Obispo county. Said defendants appeal from the order denying said motions.

Appellants contend that the trial court erred in denying said motions for change of place of trial and in our opinion this contention must be sustained. We have carefully reviewed the record and believe that appellants were entitled to an order granting the motions upon the showing made. No counter affidavits were offered and we are unable to ascertain the theory upon which the motions were denied. Counsel for respondent has filed no brief and failed to appear when the cause was on the calendar for hearing. We can only assume that counsel for respondent is in accord with our conclusion that there is no ground upon which the order of the trial court may be sustained.

The order is reversed with directions to the trial court to grant the motions for change of place of trial to San Luis Obispo county.

TAPPAAN, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal by defendants, Wagner-Thoreson Company, E. S. Wagner, and M.

A. Thoreson, from a judgment entered against them. The facts, over which there appears to be no controversy, are briefly as follows: The Wagner-Thoreson Syndicate Corporation, a Delaware corporation duly qualified under the laws of the state of California to and transacting business in this state, had an authorized capital stock consisting of 15,000 preferred shares of the par value of $100 each, and 22,500 shares of common stock of nominal or nonpar value. Plaintiff secured a judgment against the Wagner-Thoreson Syndicate Corporation for $21,366.34. Appellant Wagner-Thoreson Company was the owner of 1,000 shares of the preferred and 14,825 shares of the stock without nominal value of the Wagner-Thoreson Syndicate Corporation, issued to it under a permit granted by the corporation commissioner of the state of California. The Wagner-Thoreson Company had subscribed 1,005 shares of its common stock and appellant Wagner owned of this stock 476 shares and appellant Thoreson 526 shares.

Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff and against defendant Wagner-Thoreson Company for the sum of $21,047.25, against defendant M. A. Thoreson for the sum of $10,956.58, and against defendant Wagner for the sum of $9,915.08. Interest was also allowed on the several sums from the date of trial. Appellants state their only point upon this appeal as follows: "Appellants contend that the stockholders of the Wagner-Thoreson Syndicate Corporation are not liable for its corporate debts because the authorized capital stock is divided into different classes of different value, and no provision is made in the law for imposing stockholders' liability in such cases."

[1] Appellants' contention as presented in their brief is predicated upon the cases of Film Producers, Inc., v. Jordan, 171 Cal. 664, 154 P. 605, and Del Monte L. & P. Co. v. Jordan, 196 Cal. 488, 238 P. 710. Both of these cases involved a question arising under a writ of mandate to compel the secretary of state to file articles of incorporation. In both instances, the question presented involved domestic corporations as contradistinguished from foreign corporations. In this they are distinguished from the instant case which is one of a foreign corporation.

The case of Commonwealth Acc. Corp. v. Jordan, 198 Cal. 618, 622, 246 P. 796, 798, contains the following: "It is a conceded fact herein that the petitioner, a corporation organized in and under the laws of the state of Delaware, had in all respects in its said organization complied with the laws of Delaware, and hence that under the laws of that state corporations such as this could be legally organized with a capital stock structure having certain shares of stock of a fixed par value and certain other shares of stock of a nominal or no par value. It may also be conceded that such a corporation, if attempted to be organized in this state with a like stock structure, would not be entitled to receive from the secretary of state a certificate of incorporation under the rule laid down by this court in Film Producers' Co. v. Jordan, 171 Cal. 664, 154 P. 605, and Del Monte L. & P. Co. v. Jordan, 196 Cal. 488, 238 P. 710. The first question herein presented is as to whether the rule declared in the above-cited cases as applicable to California corporations is also to be given application to foreign corporations duly organized under the laws of the state of their creation."

In the same case at page 627 of 198 Cal., 246 P. 796, 800, in answering the question thus propounded, the court says: "When we examine the Constitution and statutes of the state of California in the light of the liberal application which, according to the consensus of the foregoing authorities, should be given to the doctrine of comity in its application to the admission of foreign corporations to transact their lawful business in states other than those of their creation, and when we do so with particular reference to the exhaustive consideration of the similar situation presented in the case of State ex rel. Standard, etc., Co. v. Sullivan, supra [282 Mo. 261, 221 S. W. 728], we are constrained to hold that as to our statutory law upon the subject there is to be found therein no express inhibition against the admission of foreign corporations entering this state and engaging in business therein, even though it might be that as to their framework, * * * such corporations would not have been entitled to organize as domestic corporations." Upon the question of the liability of stockholders in such foreign corporation so qualifying under the laws of this state, the court at page 630 of the opinion just cited in 198 Cal., 246 P. 796, 801, makes this statement which is controlling in the instant case: "The authorities to which the respondent has cited us with relation to the liabilities of stockholders of foreign corporations hold that the stockholders of such corporations, regardless of the laws of the state wherein they were organized or of the exemptions or other conditions affecting such stockholders and their liabilities under said laws or under the terms of the charter of such foreign corporations, are subjected to the same liabilities as are the stockholders of domestic corporations when such foreign corporations see fit to enter California for the purpose of transacting business therein. It was so held in the case of Provident Gold Min. Co. v. Haynes, 173 Cal. 44, 159 P. 155, and in the earlier decisions of this court cited therein."

[2, 3] The judgment roll is the only record before this court upon this appeal, and under these circumstances all presumptions are in favor of the judgment as entered by the trial court, and that the evidence introduced at the trial supports the findings as made by the trial court and upon which the judgment was made therein. Under the cases herein cited, there is no question that there is provision made in our law for the imposing of stockholders' liability in the instant case. This answers the only question properly presented here.

The judgment appealed from is hereby affirmed.

Newby & Newby, of Los Angeles (Dee Holder, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

TAPPAAN, Justice pro tem.

The plaintiff had judgment in the court below and the defendant appeals therefrom. The action was one for the recovery of the monthly installments of rent reserved to be paid to plaintiff under the terms of a ten-year lease it had with defendant. By a supplemental complaint, filed by stipulation of the parties to the action, plaintiff added to its demand installments of rent and taxes which had accrued since the amended complaint was filed herein. At the time of trial defendant's counsel stated that its defense would be rested solely on the allegations of a certain amendment to its pleading, which amendment read as follows: "For a further and affirmative defense to this action defendant alleges, that after the defendant had quit the possession of said leased property as alleged aforesaid, the plaintiff notified the defendant that it would take possession of said property, would re-lease the same, and would hold the defendant liable for any difference between the rents received from such re-leasing of the premises and the amount stipulated to be paid by the defendant under the terms and provisions of said lease."

The facts, as disclosed by the record here, are as follows: Appellant had, for some years, been a tenant of respondent, under the terms of a ten-year lease. On May 1, 1927, appellant paid to respondent the charges then due under the lease and attempted to surrender up the premises to respondent. As to just what was said and done at this time, the testimony of the witnesses is in conflict. Appellant's witnesses testified to the effect that respondent's representative stated "the only thing he could do and the best thing that he could do, would be to accept the premises back—the occupancy of the premises, that they should take possession, and that they should rent the premises, and then hold The Telegram Company responsible for any difference. * * *" Respondent's witnesses flatly contradict this testimony, and, further, deny that respondent ever took possession of the premises in question or collected any rent therefrom. Under date of June 1, 1927, the "Property Secretary" of respondent wrote appellant as follows:

"We desire to inform you herewith that we cannot accept such notice as absolving you from your liability under the lease entered into between us. We shall hold you responsible for any losses, financial or otherwise, that may accrue to us up to the date of expiration of the forementioned lease.

"In accordance with the requirements of the law, we shall endeavor to lease these premises to the best advantage possible and wish to notify you herewith that any difference between our receipts from such lease and the sum of money due to us under our lease with you will be considered as due to us in satisfaction of the terms of the contract entered into between us."

It does not appear from the record here that the "Property Secretary" who signed the above letter was an officer of respondent corporation or that his authority extended to more than a collection of rents and certain clerical details concerning respondent's properties. There is testimony to the effect that for a part of time for which respondent claims rent, the premises in question were occupied, and that the rent paid by the occupant was received by appellant.

[1,2] Appellant's first contention is that "Respondent pursued the wrong remedy." Appellant states his position in this regard as follows: "The respondent cannot maintain this action, the nature and purpose of which are to recover the full amount of the monthly installments of rent required to be paid by the lease. * * * it being contended by appellant that because of the letter, Exhibit A (the letter heretofore referred to in this opinion) the remedy of the respondent was restricted to an action to recover the difference between the rents received by the respondent from reletting of the premises, if any, and the rents stipulated for in the lease." Appellant quotes the following from Bradbury v. Higginson, 162 Cal. 602, 604, 123 P. 797, 798, which in the abstract is a correct statement of the law as involved in the instant case: "Where a lease is repudiated and the premises abandoned, the landlord may pursue one of two courses: He may rest upon his contract and sue his tenant as each installment of rent, or the whole thereof, becomes due; or he may take possession of the premises and recover damages, which damages will be the difference between what he may be able to rent the premises for and the price agreed to be paid under the lease." (Italics ours.)

[3-5] Under the rule as in the above-quoted case stated, and from the authorities cited by appellant in its brief, it appears that appellant to sustain its alleged defense must first prove a repudiation or abandonment of the lease by the lessee, and, second, an acceptance of such repudiation or abandonment by the lessor, either actual or constructive. This acceptance need not necessarily be expressed, but may also be implied from the acts and conduct of the parties in their dealings with the leased premises. The repudiation or abandonment of the lease by appellant is an admitted fact, and the only question present here is as to the terms and conditions surrounding repudiation of the lease by appellant. Appellant does not contend that there was an unqualified surrender of the lease by it and an unqualified acceptance thereof by respondent. Appellant's position is that the letter received by it from respondent's "Property Secretary," and hereinbefore referred to, amounted to an election on the part of respondent to sue only in damages for the breach of the lease, and prohibited the maintenance of this action for the rent saved to it under the terms of the lease. There is no evidence that respondent at any time took physical possession of the leased premises. As to what occurred at the time appellant paid to respondent the rent and taxes then due, presents a direct conflict of testimony. The trial court elected to believe respondent's witnesses, rather than those who testified for appellant, upon the question of the surrender of the lease. Respondent never exercised any dominion over the leased premises during the term for which rent is claimed. Appellant collected rent therefrom while this action was awaiting trial. There is no evidence of an "unqualified taking possession" nor "releting of the premises" referred to in the cases cited by appellant. In the instant case appellant's contention must rest upon the letter referred to alone. As has been hereinbefore pointed out, the other testimony presented at the trial was of a conflicting nature, and the trial court's findings thereon failed to sustain appellant's contention. This letter, if the authority of the signer was sufficient to bind respondent, refers in so far as is here material to acts to be done at some future time. "We shall endeavor to lease these premises to the best advantage. * * *" There is no evidence that at any time respondent did attempt to lease the premises or that it did lease the premises. There is evidence that the premises were occupied, and that appellant received the rent therefrom. There is no evidence that respondent ever exercised any dominion whatsoever over the premises in question. We cannot agree with appellant that the letter amounted to such an election of remedy that respondent was debarred from the maintenance of this action. The other questions presented upon this appeal, by reason of the conclusion that we have reached herein, are immaterial.

The judgment appealed from is hereby affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BRATTON et al.

Cr. 236.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 11, 1932.

1. Embezzlement ⇐44(1).

Evidence that complaining witness deposited money with defendants as security for faithful performance of duties of employment, and that defendants admitted spending such money, sustained conviction for grand theft (Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046).

2. Embezzlement ⇐48(1).

Instruction defining grand theft held not erroneous in failing to charge that appropriation must be felonious (Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046).

3. Criminal law ⇐772(2).

Instruction defining crime in language of statute is sufficient.

4. Embezzlement ⇐22.

That $201 of another's money, misappropriated by defendants, was obtained by them on different dates, did not reduce offense from grand theft to petty theft (Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046).

The facts disclosed that $1 of the $201 misappropriated by defendants was obtained on February 11, and $200 on February 13, and defendants therefore contended that, if guilty of any offense, it was petty theft and not grand theft. However, the evidence showed that, though such money was received by defendants in two installments, defendants had in their possession more than $200 belonging to complaining witness when they misappropriated the funds, and the offense was therefore grand theft.

5. Embezzlement ⇐22.

"Theft by means of embezzlement" is misappropriation of money, regardless of time acquired, degree of offense being determined by amount of money or property misappropriated (Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046).

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; L. N. Turrentine, Judge.

L. Bratton and another were convicted of grand theft, and named defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Edward L. Davin, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Alberta Belford, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

MARKS, J.

Appellant and J. L. Spencer were jointly charged with the crime of grand theft by an information filed by the district attorney of San Diego county. Both defendants were found guilty by the jury. This appeal is taken by L. Bratton from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for new trial.

Appellant urges four grounds upon which he maintains the judgment and order appealed from must be reversed: First, that the evidence was not sufficient to support the judgment and verdict against him; second, errors in instructions given by the court to the jury; third, that, if he be deemed guilty of any crime, it was that of petty theft only, and not grand theft; fourth, that there was a valid contract of employment between defendants and the complaining witness which might have been the subject of a civil action but not of a criminal complaint. The fourth specification is included within the first, and need not be separately considered.

Appellant and Spencer opened an office in the Bank of America Building in San Diego for the sale of a product of the National Automatic Dishwasher Company, Limited. They inserted an advertisement in a San Diego daily paper as follows: "Will train steady worker; $36 week; good future; $200 cash deposit required, returnable. 823 Bank of America Bldg." This was answered by Joe Ferrari on February 11, 1932. After a conversation with appellant and Spencer in which they represented to him that they desired to employ him as a service man to deliver, make collections for, and service portable dishwashing machines at a salary of $30 a week, with $6 additional for the use of his automobile in this business, Ferrari signed a written application for the employment. He was told that he would be required to deposit $200 in the nature of a bond for the faithful performance of his duties. Not having this sum with him, he gave Spencer $2, and was told to return in two days, during which time the defendants would investigate his character and decide whether or not he would be employed. He returned on February 13, accompanied by S. E. Stensrud, a friend. The two of them talked over the proposed employment with both defendants, Ferrari signed a contract of employment with the "Spencer Sales Company," and gave Spencer, in appellant's presence, the sum of $200. The "Spencer Sales Company" apparently was a fictitious name under which Spencer, and perhaps Bratton also, operated. Ferrari then asked Spencer for a return of his $2. Spencer replied that he did not have the change and asked appellant if he had any. Appellant gave Spencer $1, which he, in turn, gave to Ferrari. The $201 which Ferrari had deposited was retained by Spencer for himself and appellant. On February 15th Ferrari reported at the office in the Bank of America Building, and was sent out by Spencer and Bratton with another party to look for sales rooms. He did not see either of the defendants again. No portion of the $201 was ever returned to him.

The matter of the advertisement in the San Diego paper came to the attention of the manager of the Better Business Bureau of San Diego, Stanley M. Gue, deputy state labor commissioner for San Diego, and the district attorney for that county. On February 15 Mr. Gue and an investigator from the district attorney's office called upon the defendants at their office in San Diego. The two defendants made many conflicting, and what subsequently proved to be untrue, statements to these witnesses concerning their activities in San Diego. They denied having signed any contract of employment or having taken any deposits from any prospective employees. Mr. Gue testified as to portions of this conversation as follows: "Mr. Stafstrom, of the district attorney's office, asked both Mr. Bratton and Mr. Spencer some questions. I do not recall the exact wording. One, I believe, was asked them how long they had been here. And they said they had come from Los Angeles a few days before. And I asked them both where they were living. And they said, 'At the Knickerbocker Hotel'; they had previously lived at the Ford Hotel. I asked them if they lived together; and they told me 'Yes'. And I asked them if they were representing the National Dishwasher Company; and both of them told me 'Yes', that they were, they had the exclusive territory of San Diego county for the National Dishwasher Company. Then I asked Mr. Spencer why the application for employment had a heading 'National Dishwasher Company', and the contract of employment, as I recall it, had 'Spencer Sales Company' in it. And he said—well, he said, 'We are acting for the National Dishwasher Company of Los Angeles'. And I asked Mr. Bratton the same thing; and he told me that was correct. I called his attention to the wording on the door of their office, 'National Dishwasher Company—J. L. Spencer', and I asked Mr. Bratton what his connection with it was. And he said Mr. Spencer was the manager and he was the assistant manager." The defendants were then taken to the office of the district attorney of San Diego county, where they were further questioned by a deputy district attorney, and, after going over much of the ground covered in a former conversation detailed in Mr. Gue's testimony, the following occurred: "Mr. Baugh also asked both of them if it was true that they had received $200 from Mr. Ferrari, and they both said, 'Yes.' I asked them both what they had done with the money. And they told me they had used it to pay hotel bills and that they had taken a trip to Los Angeles over the week end. And I asked them if they could pay the money back. I asked them if they could pay the money back, if they wanted to pay it back to Joe. And Mr. Spencer says, 'Well, I haven't got any money.' And he turned to Mr. Bratton and he said, 'Can you raise it?' And Mr. Bratton said, 'No, I can't raise it.'"

Since the amendment of section 484 of the Penal Code (St. 1927, p. 1046) the crimes of larceny, embezzlement, and false pretenses have been included within the crime of theft. In the case of People v. Myers, 206 Cal. 480, 275 P. 219, it was held that this amendment was designed to simplify procedure and to relieve courts from technical questions arising from contentions that the evidence shows the commission of one of these crimes other than that alleged in the information. It has been specifically held that, where an information charged the defendant with the crime of theft by feloniously taking money or property belonging to the complaining witness, theft by means of what is generally known as embezzlement was included within the information, and proof of such was admissible under the allegations of the information, and would sustain a conviction under its terms. People v. Fewkes (Cal. Sup.) 4 P.(2d) 538; People v. Murakami (Cal. App.) 9 P.(2d) 583.

[1] In the instant case there is competent and material evidence in the record that the complaining witness deposited with both defendants money which they were to hold as security for the faithful performance by Ferrari of the duties of his employment. Both defendants admitted they had spent this money in paying hotel bills and on a trip to Los Angeles, and that they did not have the money in their possession prior to their arrest. This evidence is amply sufficient to support the verdict and judgment, even though in their testimony at the trial they denied both the making of the statements and the truth of their admissions in the office of the district attorney. The fact that this money was deposited with them in connection with a written contract of employment cannot excuse their misappropriation of it.

[2, 3] Appellant next complains because the trial court instructed the jury in effect that the crime of grand theft consisted in the fraudulent appropriation of money or property of another which has been intrusted to the defendants and did not instruct them that such appropriation must be felonious. Section 484 of the Penal Code first defines theft as the felonious stealing, taking, carrying, leading, or driving away personal property of another, which is the crime of larceny as it existed prior to the amendment of 1927. It next defines theft as the fraudulent appropriation of property which has been intrusted to defendants by another, which is theft by means of embezzlement. The evidence in the case showed theft by this latter means, and the trial court instructed the jury in accordance with the Code definition of this particular kind of grand theft. An instruction defining a crime in the language of the statute has been held sufficient. People v. Martin, 44 Cal. App. 45, 185 P. 1003. The instructions to the jury were full, fair and complete and we find no error in them.

[4, 5] Appellant next urges that, if the evidence showed him guilty of any offense, it was petty theft and not grand theft. He maintains that, because the $1 of the $201 of Ferrari's money taken by the defendants was obtained on February 11, 1932, and the $200 on February 13, 1932, that he could not be guilty of stealing more than the $200 which he obtained on the second date, as he urges the transactions were separate ones.

It is true that the defendants received the $201 in two installments. It is also a conclusion justified by the evidence that, when they paid the hotel bills and went on the trip to Los Angeles, they had in their possession the total sum and admitted spending it. The crime of larceny by means of embezzlement does not depend upon the time of the acquisition of the money embezzled. It presupposes a lawful acquisition of the money by them. Theft by means of embezzlement is the misappropriation of the money by the defendants. The intent to steal by means of embezzlement may come into existence after the acquisition of the money by defendants and prior to, or coincident with, its misappropriation by them. The degree of the crime, whether it was grand or petty theft, is determined by the amount of money or property misappropriated. It makes no difference whether the money was acquired by them in amounts of less or more than $200. In the instant case the defendants had in their possession more than $200 belonging to the complaining witness at the time of their misappropriation of his funds and appropriated it all to their own uses. This makes the offense grand theft. This rule was recognized in the case of People v. Mills B. Sing, 42 Cal. App. 385, 183 P. 865, 869, where it was said: "Because part of the potatoes were taken and hauled away from the ranch of the Japanese on September 1st, and part on September 2d, and the balance on September 3d, appellant claims that there were three separate and distinct offenses, and that the court should have granted his motion to compel the prosecution to elect one of the three offenses as that upon which it would rely for a conviction. The transaction in which the potatoes were taken was a continuous one. Appellant and his confederate, St. Clair, when they first went to the ranch of the Japanese and negotiated for the potatoes, evidently designed to obtain possession of the 252 sacks by fraud and deceit; i. e., by fraudulently pretending that the sale was a bona fide cash sale, and by leading the Japanese to believe that the potatoes notwithstanding their delivery, would be immediately paid for, and would not be resold until cash payment should be made as represented by them. It is evident that, from the beginning, defendant and St. Clair intended to appropriate the potatoes to their own use after having obtained the possession fraudulently. Although the deliveries to defendant and St. Clair and the hauling away were distinct acts, still they were continuous. The whole transaction was one continuous proceeding, instigated by one impulse and one purpose. Appellant and his confederate having embarked upon a scheme to appropriate the potatoes to their own use, after they should have induced the Japanese to deliver possession under the impression that they would immediately receive cash payment, and having pursued this scheme until it was effectuated, it is immaterial that it required a number of days to consummate it. All the potatoes having been taken in pursuance of one purpose, they were, legally speaking, taken at the same time. The law is that, if the different asportations from the same owner are prompted by one design, one purpose, one impulse, they are a single act, without regard to time. Carl v. A motion to dismiss the appeal in this case upon the ground that the transcript had not been prepared and filed within time was denied. (Cal. App.) 7 P.(2d) 1101. Its presentation upon the merits does not conform to rule VIII of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, in that the preliminary introductory matters required have been omitted from the appellant's brief. Hence, the appeal cannot be entertained. The rule in question has so frequently been the subject of discussion that we deem it unnecessary to cite the numerous cases so holding.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by the Quality Building & Securities Company and another against H. E. (R.) Bledsoe and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal.

HARDEN, Justice pro tem.

By the first count of their complaint plaintiffs seek to rescind a contract of purchase of real property, for failure of consideration, and to recover from defendants the sum of $14,000, the purchase price; and by the second count they seek damages in the sum of $14,000, for breach of contract, if the rescission demanded in the first count cannot be had. The case was tried before the court and a jury. On motion, the court directed a verdict in favor of the defendants upon both counts, pursuant to which judgment was entered for defendants. No findings of fact or conclusions of law were made. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment.

The case turns on whether, in a transaction wherein defendants made a contract to convey real property to plaintiffs, defendants were obligated to convey and dedicate to the city of San Diego a designated lot, for park purposes, and bring about an acceptance of such conveyance and dedication.

On September 18, 1926, the Union Trust Company of San Diego held title, as trustee, to certain real property in San Diego, the beneficial ownership of which was vested in equal shares in H. R. Bledsoe and E. N. Young, defendants, as shown by declaration of trust No. S–7315 issued by said company.

On that date a "receipt for deposit on account of purchase of real estate" was prepared by said company, as the representative of the parties hereto, on the usual form of escrow instructions used by title companies, wherein payment of $1,000 by R. H. Cox "as agent for principals" was acknowledged, to apply upon the entire price of $14,000 for the purchase of lots 11 to 16, inclusive, of Hawthorne Terrace, San Diego (a portion of the property held by said trust company). The receipt contained many provisions which are not mentioned by us. Therein it was stated: "Lot 'A' to be used for park purposes restricted against buildings." Said receipt was not signed, but was approved by the signature of R. H. Cox. The names of the "principals," or purchasers, do not appear therein. Said receipt appears to be more in the nature of preliminary escrow instructions than a receipt for money.

On September 20, 1926, plaintiffs gave to said trust company written instructions, under the heading of said trust No. S–7315, substantially as follows: "We hand you herewith our check in the sum of $1,000.00, and will pay you the further sum of $6,000.00 when you can advise us as follows: 1st: That the title to * * * (lots 11 to 16, inc., Hawthorne Terrace), shows vested in your company * * * 2nd: (With reference to easements) * * * 3rd: When there has been filed with you a surety bond guaranteeing the completion of certain improvements (as to grading, sidewalks and curbs, and installation of sewer, gas, water and electricity). 4th: The issuing to me of a contract for the purchase of the above-described lots * * * which contracts will acknowledge the receipt of an aggregate of $7,000.00, and the balance of $7,000.00 due on or before January 10, 1927, * * * 5th: Secure from H. E. (R.) Bledsoe and E. N. Young, the beneficiaries under your trust, an agreement that on or before January 1, 1929, they will authorize you to have lot 'A' of Hawthorne Terrace conveyed to the city of San Diego to be used for park purposes only, with the restriction that there shall be no buildings built thereon." The sum of $1,000, mentioned in said instructions, is evidently the same $1,000

mentioned in the receipt of September 18, 1926.

On the 20th day of September, 1926, a written contract was entered into between said trust company, as seller, and the plaintiff company, as buyer, for the purchase of said lots 11 to 16, inclusive, Hawthorne terrace, for $14,000 (payable upon substantially the same terms as are set forth in the receipt and instructions already mentioned). In the making of said contract, the plaintiff company acted in its own behalf and in behalf of plaintiff Rutherford. In said contract no mention is made of the conveyance or dedication of lot A; nor is any reference made to said receipt or to said instructions.

On September 22, 1926, the trust company, as trustee under said declaration of trust No. S–7315, and defendants entered into a written contract wherein it is recited that the purpose of the trust is the subdivision * * * and general improvement of the property covered thereby, and wherein defendants agree as follows: "* * * In consideration of the sum of $10.00 to them this day in hand paid, and in further consideration of the benefits derived and to be derived from the dedication as hereinafter named, and other good and valuable consideration, receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, the parties of the second part (defendants) hereby jointly and severally promise, agree, guarantee, and warrant that they will on or before January 1st, 1929, authorize said first party as trustee aforesaid (trust company) to have lot 'A' of Hawthorne Terrace, contained in the property covered by said declaration of trust, conveyed and dedicated to the city of San Diego for park purposes only, provided however that said dedication shall contain the restriction that no buildings shall ever be built thereon."

The final payment of $7,000 upon the purchase price of said property was made by plaintiffs to said trust company on January 21, 1927; and deed to said lots was made to plaintiffs.

On December 18, 1928, defendants executed a writing addressed to the trust company, wherein reference was made to said trust No. S–7315, and particularly to said contract between defendants and said trust company of September 22, 1926, and wherein defendants stated: "Pursuant to said contract, you are hereby authorized and instructed to prepare and execute a deed conveying said lot 'A' of Hawthorne Terrace to the city of San Diego for park purposes with the restriction in said deed that no building shall ever be built upon said lot. * * * You are hereby further authorized and requested to deliver said deed to the city clerk of the city of San Diego as soon as the same has been executed."

On December 19, 1928, said trust company, as grantor, made and executed to said city, as grantee, a quitclaim deed to said lot A "for park purposes," which deed contained a condition against building thereon and for reversion to grantor for violation of condition. Said deed was delivered on December 21, 1928, and was transmitted to the mayor and common council of the city by the manager of operations thereof on December 28, 1928, with a letter wherein he stated: "Would recommend against the acceptance of this piece of land at this time. I also question the conditions embodied in the deed." As is shown by an entry in the minutes of the city clerk, the city adopted the recommendation of the manager of operations on December 31, 1928. The city has not accepted a conveyance or dedication of said property.

Notice of rescission of contract and demand for return of purchase price was served by plaintiffs upon defendants on June 21, 1929, in which notice plaintiffs tendered a reconveyance of lots 11 to 16, inclusive, and offered to execute all instruments necessary to make the reconveyance effective. It recited that efforts had been made without success by plaintiffs to bring about an acceptance of lot A by the city for park purposes.

[1] One of the principal contentions of appellants is that the complaint stated a cause of action based upon a mutual mistake of the parties. That mistake is said to have been the erroneous assumption of the parties that the city would accept a conveyance and dedication of lot A for park purposes. An effort is made to bring the case within the rules applied in such cases as Hannah v. Steinman, 159 Cal. 142, 112 P. 1094, and Cutting Co. v. Peterson, 164 Cal. 44, 127 P. 163. In view of the decision reached on the appeal, we need not consider the point at length here. It will suffice to say that we do not agree with appellants. The complaint is not based upon a mutual mistake. See section 1577 et seq., Civ. Code, and Harding v. Robinson, 175 Cal. 534, 166 P. 808, upon the subject of the mistake which equity will relieve. Where a cause of action is founded upon an alleged mutual mistake, it is necessary that the complaint contain appropriate allegations thereof. 6 Cal. Jur. 79; Bradbury v. Higginson, 167 Cal. 553, 140 P. 254; Harding v. Robinson, supra. No such allegations are found in the complaint. We are required to determine the questions raised on the appeal without regard to the question of mutual mistake. That issue is not in the case.

The theory of the pleader, as expressed in the first count of the complaint, was that there had been a failure of consideration by reason of the refusal of the city to accept said lot A; and, as expressed in the second count, was that there had been a breach of contract, resulting in damages to plaintiffs, for the same reason. No question of laches is raised in defense. It was stipulated by defendants during the trial that "it may be considered that the complaint in the action has plead a failure of consideration and a breach of contract by the defendants." Further reference to the allegations of said complaint will be made hereafter.

[2, 3] Plaintiffs offered evidence to establish conversations between the agents of the parties and the representative of the trust company at the time of the execution of the contract of September 20, 1929, between plaintiff company and the trust company, as to the contents of said instrument. Objection thereto was sustained by the court. The ruling was proper. While it was open to plaintiffs to prove the true consideration for said contract, or lack or failure of consideration, by parol evidence, plaintiffs were not entitled to endeavor to establish by such evidence that the obligations assumed thereunder were other than as expressed therein. Winchester v. Winchester, 175 Cal. 391, 165 P. 965; Arnold v. Arnold, 137 Cal. 291, 70 P. 23; First Federal Trust Company v. Stockfleth, 98 Cal. App. 21, 276 P. 371. Evidence offered by the defendants and received by the court upon the same subject was likewise incompetent. We agree with appellants that said evidence should not have been received. We may not consider it. Harding v. Robinson, supra.

Plaintiffs offered and the court admitted proof of damages to plaintiffs by reason of the failure of defendants to convey and dedicate lot A for park purposes. Such evidence tended to establish that the value of the lots conveyed was only 50 per cent. of the value they would have possessed if lot A had been dedicated and developed as a park.

Section 1641, Civil Code, provides: "The whole of a contract is to be taken together, so as to give effect to every part, if reasonably practicable, each clause helping to interpret the other." And section 1858, Code of Civil Procedure, provides in part: "* * * Where there are several provisions or particulars, such a construction is, if possible, to be adopted as will give effect to all."

Section 1642, Civil Code, reads: "Several contracts relating to the same matters, between the same parties, and made as parts of substantially one transaction, are to be taken together." Said rule has been applied in the cases of Cameron v. Burnham, 146 Cal. 580, 80 P. 929; Gilliam v. Brown, 126 Cal. 160, 58 P. 466; Elbert v. Los Angeles Gas Co., 97 Cal. 244, 32 P. 9; McCroskey v. Ladd, 96 Cal. 455, 31 P. 558; Patterson v. Donner, 48 Cal. 369; Gerdes v. Moody, 41 Cal. 335; Holland-Meisell Co. v. Kelly, 37 Cal. App. 610, 174 P. 698; Morrow v. Wells, 30 Cal. App. 306, 158 P. 226.

[4, 5] Section 1559, Civil Code, provides: "A contract, made expressly for the benefit of a third person, may be enforced by him at any time before the parties thereto rescind it." It is not necessary for such third person to allege that the contract has not been rescinded. Stanton v. Santa Ana Sugar Co., 84 Cal. App. 206, 257 P. 907. It is undoubtedly the rule that the contract upon which such third person may sue must show that it was made for his benefit. Chung Kee v. Davidson, 73 Cal. 522, 15 P. 100; Sherwood & Sherwood v. Gill & Lutz, 36 Cal. App. 707, 712, 173 P. 171. But it need not expressly name such third person. Woodhead Lbr. Co. v. Niemann Inv. Co., 99 Cal. App. 456, 278 P. 913. While the complaint does not allege in words that the contract of September 22, 1926, or the subsequent instructions of December 28, 1928, were expressly made for plaintiffs' benefit, it does allege that the contract of September 22, 1926, between defendants and the trust company was pursuant to plaintiffs' instructions of September 20, 1926; and it is alleged throughout the complaint that the conveyance and dedication of lot A were a part of the consideration to plaintiffs for the payment of said sum of $14,000. We think said allegations, when taken together with the stipulation of the defendants that the complaint "plead a failure of consideration and a breach of contract by defendants," are sufficient to meet the requirement that, where a third person sues upon such a contract, he must allege it was made for his benefit.

[6-8] Applying said rules of interpretation, we hold that plaintiffs' instructions of September 20, 1926, the contract between the trust company and defendants of September 22, 1926, and the defendants' instructions to the trust company of December 18, 1928, should be construed together as constituting an agreement between the plaintiffs and defendants collateral to the contract of sale of the lots dated September 20, 1926. "The rule that an agreement in writing supersedes all prior or contemporaneous oral negotiations or stipulations concerning its matter has no application to a collateral agreement upon which the instrument is silent, and which does not purport to affect the terms of the instrument." Savings Bank of So. Cal. v. Asbury, 117 Cal. 96, 103, 48 P. 1081, 1083. If said documents are considered together as constituting the contract between the parties with reference to lot A, no difficulty is encountered in meeting the requirement imposed by section 1559, Civil Code that the contract sued on by a third person must show that it was made for his benefit. While the agreement of September 22, 1926, does not show on its face that it was made for plaintiffs' benefit, the collateral agreement, when taken as a whole, does establish that fact. It is to be noted particularly that said agreement of September 22, 1926, indicates that further instructions were to be given by defendants to the trust company before January 1, 1929. The trust company accepted, in behalf of defendants, the initial payment by check of $1,000, and subsequent payments aggregating $13,000, under the conditions imposed by plaintiffs' instructions of September 20, 1926. The principal conditions thus imposed required the issuing of a contract for the conveyance of lots 11 to 16, inclusive, and the securing of an agreement with defendants authorizing said trust company to have lot A conveyed and dedicated to the city for park purposes. It is obvious, therefore, that the consideration of $14,000 covered the conveyance and dedication of lot A as well as the transfer of lots 11 to 16, inclusive. There is not the slightest indication in the documents or in the evidence of any intention on the part of either party hereto to abandon the project of having lot A conveyed and dedicated for park purposes.

Defendants contend that their only agreement was to authorize the trust company to have said lot A conveyed and dedicated to the city for park purposes. The word authorize has different meanings, dependent upon the connection and circumstances of its use. Ordinarily, it means to clothe with authority, warrant, or legal power; to give a right to act; to empower. It also has a mandatory effect or meaning, implying a direction to act. Whether or not there was a contractual obligation on the defendants to convey and dedicate lot A for park purposes is to be ascertained not by reference to that word alone. The language of the agreement of September 22, 1926, is that the defendants "promise, agree, guarantee and warrant that they will * * * authorize (the trust company) to have lot 'A' conveyed and dedicated to the city * * * for park purposes." It should be borne in mind at all times that the trust company acted only as agent, without any other interest. In their instructions of December 18, 1928, defendants not only authorized but instructed said trust company to prepare and execute the deed, and authorized and requested its delivery. Said instructions of December 28, 1928, and said agreement of September 22, 1926, were pursuant to plaintiffs' instructions of September 20, 1926. As respects the conveyance and dedication of lot A for park purposes, plaintiffs' instructions of September 20, 1926, constituted the proposal therefor; and defendants' contract with the trust company of September 22, 1926, whereby they agreed to authorize said company to make such conveyance and dedication, and defendants' instructions of December 18, 1928, to said company to execute and deliver a conveyance of said lot for said purposes, constituted the acceptance of said proposal. To agree with respondents' contention would require us to believe that the parties contracted to leave it to the discretion of the trust company to convey and dedicate said lot A or not, as it saw fit.

[9] The acts and conduct of the parties under the collateral agreement are proof of their understanding thereof, and furnish reliable means of interpretation. 6 Cal. Jur. 304; citing Ghirardelli & Co. v. Students' Express & Transfer Co., 175 Cal. 427, 166 P. 16; Woodard v. Glenwood Lbr. Co., 171 Cal. 513, 153 P. 951; Grant v. Bannister, 160 Cal. 774, 118 P. 253, and many other cases. "Contemporaneous exposition is in general the best." Section 3535, Civ. Code.

[10-13] Interpreting said collateral contract in the light of the acts and conduct of the parties thereunder, we hold that it was more than an agreement to offer said lot A for park purposes; it was an agreement to convey and dedicate said lot to the city for that purpose. As used, we think the words convey and dedicate were synonymous. A dedication by conveyance is not complete without acceptance. 9 Cal. Jur. 52; County of Inyo v. Given, 183 Cal. 415, 191 P. 688; City of Anaheim v. Langenberger, 134 Cal. 608, 66 P. 855; Niles v. Los Angeles, 125 Cal. 572, 58 P. 190. The contract of defendants to convey and dedicate said lot A to the city for park purposes comprehended an acceptance of it for such purpose by the city. The fact that the city would not accept said lot for said purpose did not release the defendants from the obligations of their contract. They had contracted to convey and dedicate, and had thereby bound themselves to bring about an acceptance.

[14] Such being the contract of defendants, it follows that the defendants were guilty of a breach thereof by reason of their failure to procure an acceptance of lot A by the city for park purposes; and it also follows that by reason thereof there was a partial failure of consideration to plaintiffs.

Under the circumstances, the plaintiffs were entitled to have their case submitted to the jury upon the issue of damages under the second count of the complaint. And, upon the issues presented by the first count, findings of fact and conclusions of law were required. 24 Cal. Jur. 933; Schooler v. Williamson, 192 Cal. 472, 221 P. 195; Holland v. Kelly, 177 Cal. 43, 169 P. 1000; Vallejo, etc., R. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 545, 147 P. 238; Mitchel v. Gray, 8 Cal. App. 423, 97 P. 160 (rescission of sale of mine).

The judgment is reversed.

CONREY, P. J.

The defendant appealed from a judgment whereby the plaintiff recovered damages for alleged fraud committed by the defendant in the course of certain real estate transactions with the plaintiff. The record on appeal having been filed, appellant on May 14, 1932, filed its opening brief. Now comes the respondent and moves the court to affirm the judgment upon the ground that appellant has failed to comply with the rules governing appeals, and particularly has not complied with the requirement of rule VIII that "The pleadings need not be printed in such briefs, but the nature of the action and the substance of the pleadings must be stated in general terms."

An inspection of the seventeen-page brief filed by appellant reveals that appellant has failed to comply with the rule. It is stated in the brief that the case naturally falls into two classes which are referred to as the first cause of action and the second cause of action. While we have spoken of the action as one to recover damages for fraud, this is true only as a general statement. Possibly it may be subject to a different description. There is not in the brief any statement of the pleadings whereby the issues presented to the trial court by those pleadings can be defined or understood. Undoubtedly, the plaintiff was in some form attempting to recover money paid out under conditions such that the payment was said to have been induced by fraud and misrepresentation. It also appears that appellant is contending that for stated reasons the plaintiff was not entitled to recover any compensation or damages in this action. But in the absence of any statement of the contents of the pleadings, or of the substance thereof, the brief does not present any record by which the merit of appellant's contentions can be tested.

The appeal is dismissed.

LAMBERSON, Justice pro tem.

Action upon a promissory note for the principal sum of $7,500, dated September 14, 1927, payable ninety days after date, executed by the defendants and appellants to plaintiff, who is the respondent herein.

The appellants first filed separate answers, each alleging: First, that he had received no consideration for the execution of the note; and, second, that the note was given as security against liens that might be filed against a certain apartment house and premises known as "Elite Arms," situated at 258 South Hudson street, city of Pasadena, and that it was verbally understood and agreed between the makers and payee that upon the expiration of thirty-five days after the completion of said premises, the plaintiff would return the note to the makers, provided no liens had, in the meantime, been filed or paid by plaintiff. Each answer set up a further defense that the plaintiff had failed to comply with the provisions of an agreement whereby, in consideration of the assignment of a note for the sum of $35,000, secured by a deed of trust upon the property upon which the Elite Arms was to be constructed, the plaintiff had agreed to pay the sum of $27,500, and that the plaintiff had failed to make the final payment of $7,500, and had failed to perform other provisions of such agreement. Attached to each answer, and designated "Exhibit A," was a written agreement, dated September 14, 1927, which provided, so far as is material here, as follows: "It is hereby mutually agreed between the undersigned, in order to facilitate the clearing up of the final claims against that certain apartment house known as the 'Elite' that Harold McAlister shall this day advance the sum of $7,500.00 to be deposited with the Ætna Bonding Company to be used by them to pay the accounts contracted in the erection of the buildings. That as evidence of the said advance the said M. Lightburn and Harry Thompson will sign a note for the same amount in favor of said McAlister, due in 90 days. After the time for filing liens shall expire the parties hereto will settle all matters between them."

The case came on for trial upon the issues made by the complaint and answers on June 21, 1928, but after testimony had been taken, and the case had been submitted for decision, the court, on June 28, 1928, granted to the defendants leave to file an amended answer and counterclaim. On July 26, 1928, the case again went to trial upon the issues advanced by the amended pleadings. It was again submitted, but later, upon application of the plaintiff, the case was reopened for the purpose of presenting and receiving further evidence, and a further hearing was had on March 25, 1929. On September 18, 1929, the court filed its findings of fact, and entered judgment in favor of plaintiff for the principal sum named in the promissory note, with interest as prayed.

The facts, as presented to the trial court at the various hearings, were as follows: For a short time prior to March 4, 1927, one Fred W. Lunbeck was the record owner and had an equitable interest in certain property in the city of Pasadena situated at No. 258 South Hudson street. Being desirous of improving the property by the construction of an apartment house, and in order to secure to himself the value of the equity which he had therein, Lunbeck succeeded in negotiating a first deed of trust in favor of the Bond Investment Company to secure the payment of a promissory note for $90,000, and arranged to execute a second deed of trust for the purpose of securing a promissory note for the principal sum of $35,000 to appellants, who were ostensibly the contractors for the construction of the apartment house.

Plaintiff was approached by the persons mentioned, or by others who were acting in their behalf, who were endeavoring to arrange for the financing of the transaction, and the second note and deed of trust were offered for sale to plaintiff who, on March 4th entered into a written agreement with Lunbeck, under which agreement plaintiff agreed to buy the promissory note for $35,000 with the deed of trust securing the same, and to pay therefor the sum of $20,000 in installments of $5,000 each, to Ætna Casualty & Surety Company, to be used according to a schedule of payments as they became due to the contractor. As further consideration, the plaintiff agreed to convey by deed, a certain lot on Las Palmas street in the city of Los Angeles, which will be hereafter referred to as the Las Palmas lot, and upon the security of which lot plaintiff was to loan Lunbeck the sum of $7,500, to be secured by a first deed of trust, such loan to be made if necessary to complete the building; the lot to be conveyed to Lunbeck within thirty-five days after notice of completion of the apartment house. Whether or not the note for $35,000 and the deed of trust securing the same were in existence at the date of the execution of the promissory note is subject to some doubt, but the matter is not important. In consideration of the sum of $20,000 in cash, and the lot described, Lunbeck sold the $35,000 note to plaintiff. Several days later, there appearing to have been some dissatisfaction on the part of plaintiff as to Lunbeck's responsibility, a meeting was held at which there were present besides Lunbeck and the parties to this action, several other persons who were either interested in, or were advisors in, the affair, and on March 8th or 9th, as a result of the conference, it was agreed that appellants who were the payees to be named in the promissory note of $35,000, agreed to sell said note and the deed of trust securing the same to plaintiff for the sum of $23,000, $3,000 of said sum being credited as interest on the note; and as further consideration for such sale, plaintiff agreed to convey to appellants, lot 11 of St. Albans Lake Place tract, and twenty acres of land near Chino, in place of the Las Palmas lot described in the Lunbeck agreement. On March 8 or 9, 1927, the deed of trust and note were placed in escrow, and about March 10th, the deed of trust was recorded and delivered to plaintiff. On March 9th, the appellant Lightburn signed escrow instructions which he delivered to the escrow agent with a deed from Lunbeck conveying an undivided two-thirds interest in the Hudson street property upon which the apartment house was to be constructed, to Lightburn's wife, Laura May Lightburn, and an undivided one-third interest to one Blanche Miller, wife of Herman Miller, who appears to have been at one time or another, a partner with appellants in the ownership of the apartment-house property, said conveyance from Lunbeck to be subject to the two deeds of trust mentioned. Lunbeck also signed the escrow instructions, and deposited his deed therewith.

Thereafter, plaintiff made payment of the installments, according to the agreement, up to a total of $20,000. During the month of May following, he asked appellants for directions in regard to executing a deed to the St. Albans property, and was finally instructed by the appellants to execute the deed to Laura May Lightburn. This he did, and later she appears to have conveyed the lot to said Blanche Miller. The lot was thereafter used by the Millers, apparently for the purpose of obtaining the execution of a bond for the benefit of themselves. Mrs. Lightburn testified that she executed the deed to Mrs. Miller upon the request of her husband.

In the month of September following, negotiations were begun among the parties for an advance or loan from plaintiff of the sum of $7,500, in order to pay a balance on account of claims against the apartment house. Various papers were executed, including several promissory notes; but after their delivery to McAlister, he became dissatisfied with the actions of the appellants in connection with the execution of a deed of trust upon property other than that upon which they had agreed during their negotiations, and he returned the promissory notes to the appellants. Finally, on September 14, 1927, he agreed to accept an unsecured promissory note from appellants for the sum of $7,500, which is the note in dispute in this action, and paid them therefor the sum of $7,500 by cashier's check.

There appears to have been some difficulty among the parties prior to September 14th, and during the negotiations concerning the $7,500 note, due to the fact that the appellants claimed McAlister was obligated, under the contract of March 4th between himself and Lunbeck, to advance to them $7,500 as part of the original purchase price. The agreement which was executed on September 14th has already been quoted herein.

By their amended answer and counterclaim, appellants allege want of consideration, and the execution of the note simply as security against the placing of liens upon the apartment house, together with the promise of the respondent to return the note in the event that liens were not filed, and then by way of counterclaim, appellants allege the execution of the written agreement with Lunbeck, which is made a part of the counterclaim, setting up the contention that Lunbeck, in executing the agreement, was acting for and as the agent of appellants, and that respondent was fully advised of such agency; that respondent agreed to transfer the Las Palmas lot to Lunbeck, and to thereafter loan to Lunbeck the sum of $7,500 thereon; that at all times, appellants were the contractors described in said agreement to erect said apartment house; that respondent has never delivered a deed to the Las Palmas lot to Lunbeck or defendants; that for the purpose of paying final claims against the building, defendants requested plaintiff to loan to them the sum of $7,500 upon the lot, which plaintiff should transfer to them, but he refused to transfer the lot, or make the loan secured by the first deed of trust referred to in the Lunbeck agreement; that plaintiff compelled them to execute the promissory note which is the subject of the action, and loaned them $7,500 on such note; that the Las Palmas lot was of the reasonable market value of $12,000, and by reason of plaintiff's breach of the agreement the defendants have been damaged in that sum.

The court, in substance, found that the defendants received a consideration of $7,500 in cash for the execution of the note; that it was not given as security against liens, or to be returned to appellants in the event that no liens were filed against the building; that it is not true that plaintiff agreed to advance the sum of $27,500; that on March 8, 1927, a written agreement was entered into between plaintiff and the defendants, whereby defendants sold the $35,000 note to plaintiff, who was to pay therefor the sum of $23,000 cash, and convey to defendants, lot No. 11 of St. Albans Lake Place tract, together with twenty acres of land near Chino; that Lunbeck executed the $35,000 note to defendants in order that they could indorse it to plaintiff without recourse; that plaintiff conveyed said lot to Laura May Lightburn, with the knowledge and consent of the defendants; that defendants declined to accept a conveyance of the Chino land, and by agreement with them plaintiff gave them in lieu thereof, a credit of $2,500 on the $35,000 note, and defendants accepted such credit; that plaintiff made his payments of the sum of $20,000 in pursuance of the agreement of March 8th with defendant, and not in pursuance of the terms of the agreement with Lunbeck; that it is untrue that defendants executed the promissory note now before the court for the purpose of guaranteeing plaintiff against the payment of liens that might be filed against the Elite Arms, but executed it in accordance with the written agreement of September 14, 1927, and received therefor a consideration of $7,500 in cash; that it is not true that the $7,500 note was procured by fraud or false representations; that it is not true that Lunbeck, in executing the agreement of March 4, 1927, was acting for or on behalf of, or as agent for, defendants, and that he had no other interest in said transaction; that it is true that plaintiff never delivered a conveyance of the Las Palmas lot to defendants, but it is not true that plaintiff did not deliver any other lot to defendants.

[1] The court awarded judgment to plaintiff for the principal sum, in addition to attorney's fees and interest as prayed for, and found that defendants were not entitled to recover anything on their counterclaim. We have carefully read the entire record, and are of the opinion that the evidence fully supports the findings and conclusions of the court. No matter whether we consider that Lunbeck was acting on behalf of the appellants in entering into the contract of March 4, 1927, or independently for himself, as the court found, we have ample support for the conclusion that on March 8th the appellants and respondent, independently of Lunbeck, closed a different agreement upon which all of them thereafter acted. In neither of these agreements was the payment of the additional sum of $7,500 to be a part of the purchase price, but, on the other hand, it was to be loaned upon the security of a lot of land to be conveyed to Lunbeck, or to appellants, according to whichever person or persons were parties to the contract, and upon such lot the person to whom the loan was to be made was to execute a deed of trust to the respondent.

The evidence also satisfactorily supports the conclusion that the parties mutually agreed to the substitution of what was considered by them a more valuable lot in St. Albans Lake Place tract, for the Las Palmas lot described in the Lunbeck agreement, and that by their own acts in having the lot conveyed to Mrs. Lightburn, appellants rendered it impossible, and placed it beyond their power to execute a deed of trust upon the St. Albans lot to respondent. That lot has never been reconveyed, but was retained by the appellants, or by persons to whom they transferred the property, who have had the advantage at all times during the pendency of the proceedings of the ownership thereof. The evidence is clear that in executing the agreement of September 14, 1927, which was pleaded in each of their original answers, the appellants contemplated that respondent would pay to them the sum of $7,500 in cash, which would be used by them in paying outstanding claims, and that the giving of the note was not merely a gesture or for the purpose of guaranteeing to respondent that he would not be compelled to pay any liens upon the Hudson street property.

While there may be a conflict of evidence as to various issues, and the facts may be enshrouded in some doubt, which is often the case where litigants have frequently substituted and changed agreements and deals, and particularly in an instance where they have endeavored to draw a number of legal instruments without expert advice, the facts are so well established, as found by the court, that the appellate court has no authority to say that the judgment is not supported by the findings, or that the findings are not supported by the evidence.

The appellants, as witnesses, contradicted themselves and each other upon material matters, both in the course of the trial and in depositions, and in other actions in which the appellants were witnesses, and to such a degree that the court had good reason to refuse to give credence to their testimony. In addition to that situation, two of their witnesses so discredited themselves upon their examination during the trial, that the court, upon motion of attorneys for the appellants, struck their testimony from the record, all of which justified the trial court in its observation that the appellants had presented so many various and conflicting defenses in the action that the court was inclined to regard with suspicion their good faith in the premises.

It may be remarked that in no place does it appear that Lunbeck ever assigned his interest in the contract of March 4, 1927, to appellants, or to any other person, which fact tends to support the conclusion that the appellants, as well as the respondent, treated Lunbeck's contract as being of no further force or effect after they had concluded their agreement of March 8th, which latter agreement seems to have controlled their actions thereafter. Even if the court had accepted the agreement of March 4th at its face value, and had assumed that Lunbeck was acting as the agent or "dummy" of the appellants, such conclusion would not preclude the further inference from the facts as they appeared at the trial, that the agreement of March 4th was replaced by another agreement, either written or verbal, entered into between respondent and appellants, and by which the conduct of the parties was thereafter governed, and further that the execution of the note for $7,500 on September 14, 1927, was the result of a transaction which had no actual or legal connection with the original purchase of the $35,000 note and deed of trust from the appellants.

[2] The evidence fully sustains the conclusion of the trial court that the defendants were not entitled to relief on their counterclaim. There was no evidence supporting the contention that Lunbeck was acting as the agent of the defendants. Even if he were, there is ample evidence in the record to justify the determination of the court that a new contract had been created by the parties, and that appellants had made it impossible by their action in causing the St. Albans lot to be transferred to Mrs. Lightburn, and in permitting her to transfer the lot in turn to Mrs. Miller, for the appellants to reconvey the St. Albans lot by deed of trust to respondent, or for him to make a loan thereon.

[3] It was not error for the trial court to permit parol testimony to be introduced as to the contents of the contract of March 8th. A contract in writing may be altered by a contract in writing, or by an executed oral agreement, and not otherwise. Civ. Code, § 1698. Proof was made that a written contract had been made, and that two copies had been executed; that demand had been made upon the appellants to produce the copy claimed to have been in their possession, and that the copy held by respondent had been surreptitiously taken from his files. The admission of the testimony as to the contents of the contract was proper under the provisions of section 1855 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and respondent's testimony as to the contents of the written instrument was amply corroborated.

The point has been made that the findings are in part inconsistent, and that the court failed to make findings upon all the issues. The findings are unnecessarily prolix and involved; but upon an examination of the entire record, we are of the opinion that the court found upon all material issues, and that its findings are fully supported by the evidence. We consider it unnecessary, in view of the conclusions which we have expressed, to discuss the issues of agency advanced in the briefs of the respective parties.

It is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, Acting P. J.; CASHIN, J.

NOURSE, P. J.

Plaintiff sued for an accounting and for damages for the conversion of a note and deed of trust. The cause was tried by the court without a jury and went to judgment for the plaintiff upon the second cause of action. The defendant has appealed upon typewritten transcripts.

Briefly the facts are that plaintiff had placed in defendant's hands the note and trust deed as collateral security for the payment of an independent obligation of a third party to the defendant. This transaction was covered by a collateral agreement under the terms of which defendant was authorized to credit payments made under the note to the independent obligation and was required to return the note and trust deed to plaintiff when that obligation was satisfied. Payments were duly credited under this agreement until July 8, 1930, when the indebtedness of the third party was fully paid. Defendant failed to return the note and deed to plaintiff but commenced an action against this plaintiff upon a separate obligation of plaintiff to defendant. An attempt was made to attach the note and deed but no valid levy was effected. Thereafter defendant obtained judgment against plaintiff, execution was issued, and the trust deed and note were sold to the defendant under sheriff's sale for the sum of $5. The value of the note and deed, including the sums paid pending the suit and also appropriated by the defendant, was $721.39. For this sum plaintiff had judgment.

[1, 2] Appellant states that the principal question involved was whether there was a conversion, and, if so, when did it occur. There was a conversion which took place immediately upon appellant's assumption of ownership following the payment of the original obligation to secure which the note and deed were deposited with appellant. 21 R. C. L. p. 675; 49 Cor. Jur. p. 971. The appellant held the deed and note as trustee for respondent, and its purchase of this property at the execution sale at a price less than 1 per cent. of its real value was a plain fraud upon the respondent. But this act of fraud did not create in the appellant any new right in the property and did not lessen appellant's liability for its prior act of conversion.

[3] The judgment was not excessive in amount as it included the sums unlawfully collected by appellant with the unpaid balance due under the note.

[4] Appellant complains that it was not permitted to prove the market value of the note and deed as compared with their face value. The testimony tendered was that of one who was not shown to have been competent to testify on the subject.

The appeal is wholly without merit.

Judgment affirmed.

THOMASSON v. SAME.

Civ. 4650, 4651.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Sept. 15, 1932.

As Amended on Denial of Rehearing Oct. 15, 1932.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 14, 1932.

Schools and school districts ⇨133.

Teacher employed for school year of 1930–31, and who received no notice of dismissal prior to June 10, 1931, held employed for following school year, notwithstanding prior to June 10 another teacher ostensibly had been employed (School Code, §§ 5.401, 5.680, 5.681).

Teacher employed for school year of 1930–31 was legally employed teacher for the year 1931–32, since the trustees of school district could not remove teacher by simply employing another without taking steps required by School Code, §§ 5,401, 5,680, 5,681, to remove teacher then employed.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem.

On September 10, 1931, the plaintiff Lizzie B. Thibaut, a taxpayer of Antelope school district, Shasta county, began her action to have declared void a certain contract of employment of Mrs. Laura E. Moore, entered into between her and the trustees of said district on May 20, 1931, and to enjoin defendants from issuing, approving, or paying warrants as compensation for her services as teacher of said district. On the same date, plaintiff Helen M. Thomasson began her action for a writ of mandate to compel the trustees of said school district to reinstate her in the position of teacher of the school of said district for the school year of 1931–32. These cases were consolidated for the purpose of trial, and in each case judgment was, on October 17, 1931, rendered in favor of the plaintiff. These cases were also consolidated for the purposes of this appeal, and one brought up on the judgment roll in the Thibaut case alone.

On May 24, 1930, respondent Thomasson was employed by said trustees to teach the school of said district for the nine months' term beginning August 24, 1930, consisting of 170 school days, at a salary of $1,215 for the term. On May 20, 1931, the trustees of said school district entered into a contract with Mrs. Moore by which they employed her to teach the school of said district for the ensuing school term at a salary of $1,215 for the term, said school term beginning August 21, 1931. Section 18 of article 11 of the Constitution prohibits a school district from incurring in any year a liability in excess of the income and revenue provided for such year; therefore only one teacher could be legally employed by the trustees of said district to teach the school for the year 1931–32. The total income or revenue provided for said district for the school year of 1931–32 was the sum of $1,679, and the amount budgeted for teacher's salary was $1,215, and no election was held in said school district permitting it to incur an indebtedness in excess of the said sum of $1,679. No notice, written or otherwise, was given Miss Thomasson of her dismissal as such teacher prior to June 10, 1931.

It is apparent that the trustees of said school district were without authority to employ, or continue in employment, two teachers of the school of said district, for the school year of 1931–32. The question then to be determined is: Which one of these teachers was legally employed to teach said school for the said year of 1931–32?

Section 5.401 of the School Code provides that: "Persons in positions requiring certification qualifications may be elected on or after May second for the next ensuing school year, and each person so elected shall be deemed reelected from year to year except as hereinafter specified."

Section 5.681 of said Code is as follows: "On or before the tenth day of June in any year the governing board may give notice in writing to a probationary employee that his services will not be required for the ensuing year."

Section 5.680 of said Code provides that: "boards of school trustees, and city, and city and county boards of education shall have power and it shall be their duty to dismiss probationary employees during the school year for cause only, as in the case of permanent employees."

The court found that respondent Thomasson was employed by said trustees on August 24, 1930, to teach the school of said district for the school year of 1930–31, and that in pursuance of that employment, she performed her duties as such teacher and taught said school as prescribed by the contract of employment, and that she received no notice of dismissal as such teacher prior to June 10, 1931, or any notice at all, and that by reason of such failure, respondent Thomasson continued to be the legally employed teacher of the school of said district during the school year of 1931–32.

Appellants contend that the contract of employment of respondent Thomasson ended about the 1st of June, 1931, and that the failure to give her notice of dismissal prior to June 10th of that year could only have the effect, by operation of law, of entering into a new contract with her to teach said school as of the date of June 10, 1931, and that inasmuch as the trustees had, prior to that time, namely, May 20, 1931, already employed Mrs. Moore as the teacher of the school of said district for the year 1931–32, Mrs. Moore, by reason thereof, was the legally employed teacher for that year.

In the case of Blalock v. Ridgway, 92 Cal. App. 132, 267 P. 713, 714, the court quoting from Owens v. Board of Education, 68 Cal. App. 403, 229 P. 881, said: "This contract terminated with the school year 1921–1922, but was deemed continued in force unless, before the 10th of June the board should give the appellant notice in writing that her services would not be required for the following school year." Also, the court said: "It seems to us apparent from the authority and from the language of the act, that the legislative intent is manifest to give assurance to the teaching profession of some degree of certainty in their employment—something akin to civil service in other administrative branches of government. With this intent before us, having in mind that the statute provides that each teacher employed for one year shall be deemed reemployed, except discharged for cause after hearing, or in the case of a probationary teacher, by serving her with a notice in writing on or before June 10th, we conclude that the intent and meaning of the law is as though it read: 'Permanent teachers cannot be discharged except for good cause after hearing, and probationary teachers cannot be discharged except for good cause after hearing, or by serving them with written notice on or before June 10th, that their services will not be required for the ensuing year.'"

It would therefore seem to be clear that the employment of a probationary teacher for the school year of 1930–31 would thereafter be a continuing employment unless removed for cause after a hearing, or unless notice of dismissal was given on or before June 10th of the next succeeding year.

Respondent Thomasson having been employed as the teacher of said school for the year 1930–31, she would continue to be such teacher for that school term, and thereafter would continue to be such teacher unless removed for cause, or until she received notice on or before June 10th of 1931. Only one teacher could be employed by the trustees of said school district, the school law limiting them to that number. The employment of either respondent Thomasson or Mrs. Moore was therefore invalid. The trustees were without authority to employ another teacher until they had removed the one then employed as such. They could not remove such teacher by simply employing another, without taking the steps required by law to remove the teacher then employed.

We are therefore of the opinion that the trustees of said school district were without authority to employ Mrs. Moore to teach the school of said district for the year 1931–32, for the reason that respondent Thomasson was, for said year, the legally employed teacher of said district.

Appellants contend that the obligation to respondent Thomasson for the school term of 1931–32 was at most a contingent liability prior to June 11, 1931, and therefore was not a debt within the meaning of article 11, § 18, of the Constitution.

In view of the conclusions which we have reached, we deem it needless to discuss this contention.

The judgments are affirmed.

Order and judgment reversed.

Crop & Crop, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

CONREY, P. J.

Upon an information charging defendant with commission of the crime of burglary, the defendant was tried before a jury, which found him guilty of burglary in the second degree. Appellant made oral application for permission to file a written application for probation, which application was by the court denied, and defendant was sentenced to the state prison. He appeals from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] The defendant rests his appeal upon two alleged errors of the trial court. These are that the court committed prejudicial error in striking out the testimony of one John Bower, a character witness produced by appellant; and that the court abused its discretion and committed prejudicial error in refusing to appellant permission to file an application for probation. The testimony of the witness Bower, after he had duly qualified to answer on the subject, was that defendant's reputation for honesty was good. Nevertheless, this testimony was stricken from the record for the reason that the witness on cross-examination admitted that he had never heard the defendant's reputation discussed. It is conceded by respondent that the action of the court in granting the motion to strike this testimony was erroneous. People v. Stennett, 51 Cal. App. 370, 385, 197 P. 372; People v. Hoffman, 199 Cal. 155, 248 P. 504. This was a prejudicial error. The defendant's testimony, if believed by the jury, would have prevented a conviction. It may be that, with the addition of positive evidence of defendant's good reputation for honesty, the jury would have found that there was a reasonable doubt of his guilt. We do not agree with respondent's contention that appellant acquiesced in the court's ruling, in any such way that he waived his right of exception thereto.

[2] At the time when defendant's motion for a new trial was denied the defendant asked for permission to file an application for probation, but such permission was refused. The only reason given for such refusal was stated by the court in these words: "If he had honestly admitted his guilt, I would have permitted him to file his application for probation, but not after we have gone through the trial and the jury has found him guilty." Here again it is conceded by respondent that the court was in error; and this concession is clearly justified. People v. Miller, 112 Cal. App. 535, 297 P. 40. But this error is of no importance. The judgment must be reversed for the reason first given, so that there may be a new trial.

The order denying a new trial is reversed, and the judgment is reversed.

STURTEVANT, J.

On March 28, 1931, Griffith Roberts and Mary Roberts were man and wife residing in Oakland. They had two minor sons, Frank and Walter, both of whom were living with their parents. The parents were living together and both were employed by Mountain View Cemetery Association. The wife received $75 per month and the husband received $125 per month. When the pay was received, the husband delivered his pay check to the wife and out of the common earnings she paid the expenses of the household. On the date last mentioned Mary Roberts sustained an industrial injury from which she died on May 30, 1931. An application was made by the surviving husband to have the claim of each of said minors fixed. The respondent commission thereafter filed its findings and award and, among other things, found: "3. The employee left surviving her, wholly dependent, Frank Roberts, a minor child, who is entitled to a death benefit of $2,479.48. * * * 4. The employee left surviving her Walter Roberts, a minor, who was partially dependent upon her for support." The petitioner contends that under the facts the third finding was not sustained by the evidence. The respondent commission contends that it was and that said finding was made in direct compliance with section 14 (a) (2) of the Workmen's Compensation Act (as amended by St. 1919, p. 917, § 5). The petitioner replies that the statute is ambiguous and it cites and relies on Fox v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 194 Cal. 173, 228 P. 38. Merely because the minors involved in that litigation were domiciled in Japan, the respondent commission seeks to distinguish that case from the instant case. We think the distinction is immaterial and that the case cited by the petitioner is controlling and should be followed by this court. On the authority of that case the award should be and it is hereby annulled, and the proceeding is remanded for further action by the commission in accordance with this decision.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 28, 1932.

1. Larceny ⇐55.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction of larceny of shotgun.

Evidence disclosed that, three days after defendant visited prosecutor's home, prosecutor missed his shotgun which was there during defendant's visit; that the gun was found in a pawnshop in defendant's home town; that the handwriting in which the bill of sale was found was identified by a handwriting expert as defendant's; and that, before defendant left prosecutor's home, he went to the closet where the gun was kept.

J. M. Lopes, of Visalia, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

MARKS, J.

By an amended information filed by the district attorney of Tulare county, the defendant was accused of the crime of petty theft, and with having suffered two prior convictions of felonies. He pleaded not guilty to the charge of petty theft, and guilty to one prior conviction, but apparently not guilty to the second. It was stipulated that the second prior should not be considered during the trial. The appellant was found guilty as charged, and has appealed from the judgment pronounced upon him and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The appellant urges, as grounds for a reversal of the judgment, that the evidence does not support the verdict and judgment; that the trial court erred in its instructions to the jury; that it erred in ruling on objections to questions propounded to witnesses by counsel; and that it erred in denying appellant's motion for arrest of judgment.

[1] It appears from the record that appellant was a guest at the home of J. E. Smith, the complaining witness, in Visalia on April 23 and 24, 1932; that Smith was the owner of a twelve-gauge Winchester repeating shotgun which was in his home during the time of appellant's visit, and was missed by Smith about three days after appellant returned to his home in the city of Fresno. The shotgun was found in a pawnshop in the city of Fresno. Appellant was identified as the person who pawned the shotgun. He signed "John Smith, 204 Fresno St.," to a bill of sale of the shotgun. A handwriting expert testified that the words "John Smith, 204 Fresno St.," were in the handwriting of appellant. Another witness testified that appellant came to the closet where the gun was kept in the Smith home just prior to his leaving. Under the authority of People v. Luchetti, 119 Cal. 501, 51 P. 707, evidence of this character has been held amply sufficient to sustain the verdict and judgment.

We have carefully reviewed the instructions given by the trial court. They are fair, full, and complete and we find no error in them.

The rulings of the trial court upon objections made to questions asked witnesses by counsel, of which appellant complains, were proper and need not be considered at length here.

We cannot determine the grounds of appellant's contention that the trial court erred in denying his motion for arrest of judgment. He fails to set forth any such grounds or supporting argument in his brief, merely incorporating a quotation from the case of In re Rosencrantz, 211 Cal. 749, 297 P. 15. An examination of the record discloses that the only reference to this motion is contained in the clerk's transcript as follows: "Counsel for defendant moved the court for an order for arrest of judgment in said cause, and said motion was by the court denied."

[2] It is self-evident that from this record no error is made to appear from the denial of the motion. We cannot presume error in order to reverse a judgment of the trial court.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

Action by C. R. Titus against F. W. Strehl and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Frank V. Kington, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Ira J. Darling, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

On January 8, 1926, defendant Strehl was the owner of a parcel of real property in Alameda county. He was indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $775. On that date Strehl conveyed the property to defendant Eleanor Le Conte, who on April 23, 1926, conveyed the same to the Stockholders' Auxiliary Corporation by a deed of trust to secure the payment of the sum of $1,250. Previous to the first transfer plaintiff brought suit on his claim, and on June 23, 1927, procured a judgment against defendant Strehl therefor. An execution issued, by virtue of which the interest of Strehl in the property was levied upon and sold at sheriff's sale; the plaintiff being the purchaser. Thereafter a sheriff's deed to the property was executed to plaintiff, following which the present action was brought to have the transfer from Strehl to Le Conte adjudged void as to plaintiff, it being alleged that the same was voluntary and without consideration; that it was made in contemplation of insolvency and resulted in the insolvency of the grantor; also that the transfer was made with intent to delay and defraud creditors; and that the grantee took with notice of the facts alleged in the complaint. It was also alleged that defendants Frank Le Conte, Leren Powers, and Mrs. Leren Powers claimed an interest in the property, which interest was subordinate to plaintiff's claim.

The trial court found in accordance with the complaint, but that the trust deed mentioned was executed to and accepted by the above-named corporation for a valuable consideration and without notice of the facts alleged. Judgment was entered adjudging the transfer from Strehl to be void, and plaintiff to be the owner of the property subject to said deed of trust.

Defendant Strehl died previous to the trial, and the other defendants, with the exception of the corporation, have appealed from the judgment. As grounds therefor it is claimed that the evidence was insufficient to support the findings.

The evidence shows that for some time previous to the transfer by Strehl he had been cared for by plaintiff and his wife at their home, and that they had expended sums on his behalf. Disputes arose, following which Strehl left without paying and went to reside with defendants Powers, the parents of defendant Eleanor Le Conte. According to the latter, she paid nothing for the conveyance, but she and others testified that her parents had rendered services and had agreed to care for Strehl during his lifetime, and that by agreement the conveyance was made to her, she undertaking to care for him in case he outlived her mother.

[1, 2] Under section 3442 of the Civil Code any transfer or incumbrance of property made voluntarily or without a valuable consideration by a party insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency is fraudulent and void as to existing creditors (Lefrooth v. Prentice, 202 Cal. 215, 259 P. 947), and without reviewing here the testimony of other witnesses it will suffice to say that the circumstances disclosed by the evidence sufficiently support the court's findings as above stated. The question of the weight to be given this testimony was for the trial court; it being the exclusive judge of the credibility of the witnesses. Code Civ. Proc., § 1847.

It is further urged that a communication, objected to on the ground that it was privileged, was improperly admitted in evidence. However this may be, the communication was of such a character that its admission, if erroneous, resulted in no miscarriage of justice.

The findings are fairly sustained, and no valid reason for reversing the judgment appears.

The judgment is affirmed.

St. 1895, p. 364, § 43, subd. 15, provides, in effect, that the council should have power to pass ordinances to try and remove from office appointees against whom charges have been preferred, and to remove without the preferring of charges any appointee at any time when, in the judgment of the council, the public service will be promoted, improved, or benefited thereby.

Appeals from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Harry W. Falk, Judge.

Affirmed.

Henry L. Ford and Puter & Quinn, all of Eureka, for appellants.

James W. Henderson, of Eureka, for respondents.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem., delivered the opinion of the court.

These proceedings for writs of mandate were brought by plaintiffs to compel defendants, in their official capacity, as the mayor and city council of the city of Eureka, to abstain from refusing to permit plaintiffs to perform their duties as policemen of the said city of Eureka, and to abstain from refusing to permit them the use, enjoyment, and emoluments of said offices. Upon the hearing of the said matters, judgments were rendered for defendants, and from these judgments plaintiffs have appealed. The plaintiff Harry E. Abers having dismissed his appeal, the cases of plaintiffs Coffey and Ward were consolidated for the purposes of this appeal.

Appellants were duly appointed and acting policemen of the said city of Eureka, and on Saturday, February 2, 1929, at about the hour of 3 o'clock p. m. of that day, a special meeting of the said city council was held, and an ordinance was passed removing appellants from said offices as policemen of said city, upon the ground that such removal was for the improvement of the public service. This removal was made without notice to appellants and without a hearing.

Appellants contend that they should have been given the opportunity of being heard before the city council passed the order ousting them.

[1] The city of Eureka is governed under a freeholder's charter adopted by the people and approved by the Legislature in 1895, St. 1895, p. 355. Section 113 of the charter provides that: "The policemen shall be appointed by the mayor, by and with the consent of the council, and shall hold office during good behavior, unless removed for cause or for the improvement of the public service, as in this charter provided." Section 43, subdivision 15, of the charter, provides that the council shall have power to pass ordinances "to try and remove from office appointees against whom charges have been preferred; and to remove without the preferring of charges any appointee at any time when, in the judgment of the council, the public service will be promoted, improved or benefited thereby."

Section 109 of the charter provides that the chief of police may prefer charges against a member of the police force, and, if found guilty, he shall be dismissed from the force.

Appellants cite the case of Boyd v. Pendegast, 57 Cal. App. 504, 207 P. 713, in support of their contention that they were entitled to a hearing, but the provisions for the removal of the officer contained in the charter then under consideration are not similar to those in the instant case. The charter considered by the court in that case provided that the removal of the officer should not be made except for cause, and further provided that the cause for such suspension should be stated in writing and filed with the board, and also provided that, upon application of the officer so removed, the board would investigate the grounds for removal. They also cite Bannerman v. Boyle, 160 Cal. 197, 116 P. 732, 735, but neither in that case are the provisions of the charter similar to those contained in the charter in the instant case. In the case of Bannerman v. Boyle, supra, the charter provided that the officer should be appointed for a specified term, and that he could be removed by the mayor for cause. In that case the court said: "The great weight of authority is to the effect that where an officer is appointed for a fixed term and it is provided that he may be removed during the term 'for cause,' without other qualifying words, such removal cannot be made except after notice and hearing." And in this same case the court quoted with approval the following language found in Mechem on Officers, p. 454: "Where the appointment or election is made for a definite term or during good behavior, and the removal is to be for cause, it is now clearly established by the great weight of authority that the power of removal cannot, except by clear statutory authority, be exercised without notice and hearing."

Section 16 of article 20 of the Constitution provides as follows: "In the case of any officer or employee of any municipality governed under a legally adopted charter, the provisions of such charter with reference to the tenure of office or the dismissal from office of any such officer or employee, shall control."

We find in the charter of the city of Eureka clear statutory authority for the removal of appellants from their appointive offices, without notice and without a hearing, as set forth in subdivision 15, section 43 of said charter.

[2] The officer takes the office with the knowledge that he may be removed therefrom without notice or hearing, whenever, in the judgment of the council, his removal will promote the public service, and, if he is removed in strict accordance with the law, it is no objection to the validity of the removal to say that it was done without notice or investigation, where the law does not require it. Matter of Carter, 141 Cal. 316, 74 P. 997.

[3] The next contention of appellants is that the city council had no authority to adopt the ordinance on a legal holiday. Section 25 of the said charter provides that, if at any time a regular meeting falls on a holiday, such regular meeting shall be held on the following day, and provides that special meeting shall be called by the mayor, etc., but does not provide that such special meetings shall not be held on a holiday.

Section 10 of the Political Code provides that: "Every Saturday from 12 o'clock noon until 12 o'clock midnight is a holiday as regards the transaction of business in the public offices of this state, and also in political divisions thereof where laws, ordinances or charters provide that public offices shall be closed on holidays."

There is no provision in the charter of the city of Eureka that the public offices of said city shall be closed on holidays. Nor can it be successfully contended that the act of the city council in passing the ordinance removing appellants from their offices was a judicial act. Having made up their minds that the removal of appellants from office was necessary for the improvement of the public service, they held a special meeting and passed the ordinance resulting in said removal. The passing of this ordinance under these conditions was purely executive; nor was it in any manner a judicial act.

In this state a municipality possesses powers both legislative and executive. Such executive powers are frequently committed to the city council, and they are sometimes exercised by declarations in the form of an ordinance or resolution. Hopping v. Council of City of Richmond, 170 Cal. 605–610, 150 P. 977; Hyde v. Wilde, 51 Cal. App. 82, 196 P. 118.

In the case of In re Heckman, 90 Cal. App. 700–708, 266 P. 585, the court cited with approval the case of Mueller v. Egg Harbor City, 55 N. J. Law, 245, 26 A. 89, wherein it was held that an act which made Saturday afternoon a legal holiday did not apply to proceedings taken before a common council. The act there considered provided that certain days should be considered holidays as far as transacting business in public offices of the state was involved.

[4] Appellants have cited no authority sustaining their position that the act of the city council in merely passing the ordinance on Saturday afternoon was illegal. Appellants further contend that the city council never adopted an ordinance providing for the procedure to be followed in the removal of its officers. So far as concerns the removal of an appointed officer, where the officer is not appointed for a fixed term, we see no merit in this contention. The passage of an ordinance to do that which the city council was already authorized to perform would be an idle act. Thomas et al. v. City of Petaluma, 33 Cal. App. 547, 165 P. 1021; City of Petaluma v. Hughes, 37 Cal. App. 473, 174 P. 336.

The judgments are affirmed.

Ex parte KEPFORD.

Cr. 1215.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Minimum penalty for driving automobile without owner's consent where defendant had previously been convicted of felony held 7 years (Pen. Code, §§ 18, 667, and § 1168, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1491).

2. Habeas corpus ⇐30(3).

Prisoner cannot complain because prison board reduced penalty from previous 10-year term to 7-year term authorized by law, even if original term was unauthorized (Pen. Code, §§ 18, 667, and § 1168, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1491).

Petition by Edward Kepford against the Warden of Folsom State Prison for writ of habeas corpus.

Writ denied.

Edward Kepford, in pro per.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This is a petition for a writ of habeas corpus. The petitioner contends he is illegally restrained of his liberty for the reason that he has served the maximum time of imprisonment prescribed by law as a penalty for the offense of which he was convicted.

June 6, 1929, the petitioner was convicted by a jury in San Joaquin county, of the felony of "driving an automobile without the consent of the owner," for the purpose of temporarily depriving the owner of the possession thereof. At the same time he pleaded guilty to two former convictions of other felonies. He was sentenced to imprisonment in Folsom state prison for the indeterminate period prescribed by law. The prison board subsequently fixed his penalty at ten years' imprisonment. That order was rescinded by the prison board May 14, 1932, and his term of imprisonment was fixed at seven years.

[1] The petitioner contends that the maximum penalty for the offense of which he was convicted, together with the prior conviction of a felony, was but five years; that the term of imprisonment which was fixed by the prison board was excessive and void and that the credits which he has earned for good behavior entitle him to a discharge at this time.

Section 146 of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 564), the violation of which led to the conviction of the petitioner, reads in part: "Any person who shall drive a vehicle not his own, without the consent of the owner thereof and in the absence of the owner, and with intent to either permanently or temporarily deprive the owner thereof of his title to or possession of such vehicle, whether with or without intent to steal the same, shall be deemed guilty of a felony."

The penalty for this felony is prescribed by section 18 of the Penal Code, as it then existed, as follows: "Except in cases where a different punishment is prescribed by this code, every offense declared to be a felony is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, not exceeding five years."

The maximum penalty for the offense of feloniously driving a vehicle without the presence or consent of the owner is therefore fixed at five years of imprisonment in the state prison. This penalty is, however, increased in the present case on account of the prior conviction of a previous felony, which was also suffered by the petitioner. The term of imprisonment in this case was properly fixed by the prison board, pursuant to the mandate of section 1168 of the Penal Code as it existed in 1928 at the time of the commission of the offense and the conviction of the defendant therefor. That section of the Code then provided that one who was convicted of a crime "shall be sentenced to be confined in the state prison, but the court in imposing such sentence shall not fix the term or duration of the period of imprisonment. * * * The governing authority of the reformatory or prison in which such person may be confined, or any board or commission that may be hereafter given authority so to do, shall determine * * * what length of time * * * such person shall be confined, * * * but the following shall be the minimum term of sentence and imprisonment in certain cases, notwithstanding any other provision of this code or any provision of law specifying a lesser sentence. * * * For a person previously convicted of a felony, but not armed with a deadly weapon at the time of his commission of the offense or a concealed deadly weapon at the time of his arrest, seven years." This statute then provides that this term of imprisonment may be fixed by the prison board at any time after one year from the commencement of the service of sentence, and that the prisoner may be allowed credit for good behavior. In the present case the prisoner was allowed and is entitled to credit of one year and five months to be deducted from his term of sentence, for good behavior.

The petitioner contends that the order of the prison board fixing his term of imprisonment at seven years is unauthorized by law and void. He asserts that the maximum penalty which is authorized by law in the present case is five years' imprisonment, and that the term fixed by the prison board in excess of that period is void. If this contention be true, then the petitioner has earned credits to be deducted from his time of imprisonment, which will entitle him to his discharge. In support of this assertion, the petitioner relies on section 667 of the Penal Code, relating to prior convictions, which reads in part:

"Every person who, having been convicted of any offense punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, and having served a term therefor in any penal institution, commits any crime after such conviction, is punishable therefor as follows:

"1. If the offense of which such person is subsequently convicted is such that, upon a first conviction, an offender would be punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, such person is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for the maximum period for which he might have been sentenced, if such offense had been his first offense."

The petitioner claims that the language of the last-quoted section of the Code is controlling, and that since five years of imprisonment is prescribed by section 18 of the Penal Code as the maximum penalty for feloniously driving an automobile without the consent or presence of the owner thereof, that period of time may not be extended because of his previous conviction of another felony. The last-quoted section of the Code was enacted in 1909. It is specifically modified and controlled by the language of section 1168 of the Penal Code, which was enacted in 1917 (St. 1917, p. 665) and amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1491), declaring that the penalty for a felony committed by "a person previously convicted of a felony, but not armed with a deadly weapon * * * [is] seven years," "notwithstanding any other provision of this code or any provision of law specifying a lesser sentence." It is conceded the petitioner was not possessed of a deadly weapon. The last-quoted provision definitely and specifically fixes the minimum penalty under the circumstances of the present case at seven years. The minimum penalty for a felony accompanied by evidence of a prior conviction of another felony, when the possession of a deadly weapon is not involved, is seven years. The defendant was charged and convicted of a felony under the provisions of section 146 of the California Vehicle Act. It may not be said he was convicted of a mere misdemeanor under section 499b of the Penal Code. People v. Norman, 62 Cal. App. 219, 216 P. 402. He was not charged with taking an automobile under the provisions of the last-mentioned section.

[2] The petitioner may not complain because the prison board reduced his penalty from a previous term of ten years to the present fixed term of seven years. Assuming that there is no legal authority for the prison board to have originally fixed the term of imprisonment at ten years, that order was, nevertheless, valid to the extent of the minimum term of seven years, which is specifically fixed by law. The petitioner was not harmed by the correction of the original order of the prison board.

The writ is denied.

Complaint alleged that mortgagor owned an apartment house and plaintiff a ranch; that mortgagor made false representations as to value of his property to plaintiff, and stated that it was encumbered with a $100,000 mortgage held by defendant mortgagee; that, in reliance on the representations, plaintiff entered into an agreement of exchange of properties under terms of which provision was made for creation of an escrow by the parties with mortgagee to consummate the exchange; that the reasonable mortgage value of the property was $68,000; that mortgagor informed mortgagee of the exchange contract and mortgagee agreed to receive a note and mortgage for $100,000 and credit to mortgagor's account the moneys received therefrom; that such a mortgage was made and placed of record; that plaintiff was thereby induced to believe that apartment house possessed a bona fide loan value of $100,000, and to consummate such exchange when otherwise he would not have done so.

This appeal is from a judgment of dismissal entered after an order sustaining defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's complaint. The demurrer was sustained by the trial court with leave to the plaintiff to amend, but plaintiff elected to stand on his complaint, whereupon, by stipulation setting forth such election and reserving to plaintiff the right to appeal, the order was entered dismissing the action. The sole question presented upon this appeal is whether the original complaint states a cause of action. Defendant's demurrer was general. The complaint alleges the corporate existence of defendant bank and its predecessor banks, of whose various rights and liabilities defendant bank is alleged to have become the successor. Where, hereafter in this opinion reference is made to defendant bank, it is deemed to include as well the banking institutions which preceded defendant in this transaction, and to whose rights and liabilities it has succeeded. Then follow allegations that one Zuckerman owned a certain apartment house; that plaintiff owned a ranch; that one Gordon acted as Zuckerman's agent and broker to negotiate a sale or exchange of his apartment house to plaintiff. It should be noted that neither Zuckerman nor Gordon are parties to this action. The complaint then alleges that Zuckerman made representations as to the value of his property to plaintiff, and stated that it was encumbered with a mortgage in the amount of $100,000, held by defendant bank, and that said bank renewed the loan from year to year and in the future would so renew the loan. The next allegation is to the effect that plaintiff, in reliance upon the said representations of Zuckerman, entered into a written agreement of exchange of his (plaintiff's) ranch for Zuckerman's apartment house, subject to a mortgage of $100,000, held by defendant bank. Under the terms of this agreement, it is alleged that a provision was made for the creation of an escrow by the parties with defendant bank to consummate the exchange. There is then an allegation that the representation as made by Zuckerman that there was a mortgage in the sum of $100,000 on the apartment house held by defendant bank was false and untrue; that the reasonable mortgage value of said property was $68,000; that defendant bank made an appraisal of said property at $132,000, and offered to loan Zuckerman $75,000 on the same; that Zuckerman informed defendant bank that he was about to exchange the property with plaintiff for his ranch, subject to the mortgage of $100,000 held by defendant bank, and defendant bank agreed to receive a note and mortgage for that amount and credit to Zuckerman's account the moneys received therefrom; and that such a mortgage was duly made and placed of record. The next allegation is as follows: "That thereby and as a result of such plan and of such actions upon the part of the Merchants National Trust and Savings Bank (a predecessor in interest of defendant bank) the plaintiff was induced and caused to believe that the Knickerbocker Apartments were of the value that had been represented to plaintiff by the said H. Lew Zuckerman and S. E. Gordon, and that it possessed a bona fide loan value of $100,000, and said plaintiff was thereby induced to consummate such exchange, when otherwise and had he been advised of the true facts he would not have done so." Then follows an allegation that plaintiff had been damaged in the sum of $114,000, and a prayer for judgment as against defendant bank for that sum. Defendant's demurrer, as hereinbefore stated, was that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Appellant in his argument, as presented here, tacitly admits that the alleged cause of action set up in his complaint falls short in some of its material essentials of stating a cause of action for actual fraud, as defined in our law (Civil Code, § 1572), but advances the theory that it does state a cause of action for constructive fraud. Constructive fraud is defined by section 1573 of the Civil Code as follows: "Constructive fraud consists: 1. In any breach of duty which, without an actually fraudulent intent, gains an advantage to the person in fault, or anyone claiming under him, by misleading another to his prejudice, or to the prejudice of anyone claiming under him. * * *"

It is appellant's contention that defendant bank, by becoming the escrow holder thereafter, stood in a fiduciary relationship to plaintiff, and owed to him a duty to disclose all facts that would materially tend to cause him to consummate the exchange upon the basis proposed by Zuckerman. Both appellant and respondent in their briefs devote considerable space to discussion of the question of the status of escrow holders and their obligations to their principals. It would seem, from an examination of the facts, as alleged in the complaint, that there is a far broader principle involved than that which would arise solely from defendant's acts as escrow holder. Plaintiff's cause of action, as stated in his complaint, is that defendant bank became the record mortgagee in a mortgage upon property for which plaintiff was about to exchange certain property then owned by him, and that this mortgage so accepted and recorded by defendant bank was in fact taken for the benefit and credit of the owner of the property seeking the exchange with plaintiff. Defendant is not alleged to have made any statement or representation in regard to this mortgage to plaintiff, other than that it acted in the capacity of escrow holder while the exchange was made. There is an allegation that defendant had notice that it was necessary that there be a mortgage of the amount stated and held by it to induce plaintiff to complete the exchange. The existence of this mortgage, its parties, and terms, clearly appear as one of the material inducements which secured plaintiff's consent to the completion of the existing exchange agreement. The cause of action thus alleged fails to aver facts which amount to actual fraud, nor are there facts stated which would directly show a violation of the express terms of the trust relationship alleged to have existed. In the last analysis the question here presented would seem to be this: Does the term "breach of duty" as found in the definition of constructive fraud in section 1573 of our Civil Code include within its scope cases where one has aided in the creation of or has created an untrue condition or statement of material fact, with knowledge that the condition or statement would be made use of in inducing a known person to continue or complete a contractual obligation, and which in fact did have that result and in fact did cause detriment to the person so induced to act? It will be noted that, if the facts alleged in the complaint in the instant case are construed as sufficient to allege a "breach of duty," the other essential elements necessary to constitute constructive fraud, as defined in the Code section just referred to, are adequately alleged in the complaint. Counsel in their briefs have not cited any authorities having a direct bearing upon this question, nor has an examination of our reported cases disclosed any such authority.

It may fairly be argued that "breach of duty" as made use of in the section of the Code quoted, when considered with the context of the paragraph, means but the correlative for injury suffered by one and caused by the participation or co-operation in the wrong by another. The cases of Blair v. Guarantee Title Co., 103 Cal. App. 260, 270, 284 P. 719, and Mox, Incorporated, v. Woods, 202 Cal. 675, 677, 262 P. 302, would seem to sustain this conclusion.

[1-3] The defendant in accepting the mortgage is alleged to have acted in the capacity of agent for the mortgagor, and would be liable to plaintiff for its wrongful acts. Civ. Code, § 2343. Before accepting employment as agent for plaintiff, defendant was under an obligation to disclose to plaintiff any adverse interest it may have had. This it failed to do before accepting the escrow. This was clearly a "breach of duty" within the intention of the section. There is no merit in the argument advanced that the plaintiff suffered no detriment. A party to a contract is entitled, under the circumstances of the instant case, to know the party with whom he contracts. The act of the defendant debarred him from this information. Under somewhat similar circumstances to those present here, complaints have been upheld in the following cases: Continental Insurance Co. v. Mercadante, 222 App. Div. 181, 225 N. Y. S. 488; Doyle v. Chatham & Phenix Nat. Bank, 253 N. Y. 369, 171 N. E. 574, 71 A. L. R. 1405; Ultramares Corporation v. Touche, 255 N. Y. 170, 174 N. E. 441, 74 A. L. R. 1139.

Nothing in this opinion contained is to be construed as approving or disapproving the measure of damages as alleged in the complaint. "We are not concerned with the question of the ability of the plaintiff to prove the allegations of the complaint, and this would be true even though we could foresee insuperable difficulties in making such proof. We are merely to pass upon the sufficiency of the complaint as a pleading." Mox, Incorporated, v. Woods, supra, at page 676 of 202 Cal., 262 P. 302.

For the reason herein stated, the judgment entered herein is reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by Ann D. Holmes against Edward F. Hughes and the Indemnity Insurance Company of North America. From the judgment for plaintiff, the Indemnity Insurance Company appeals.

Affirmed.

Bronson, Bronson & Slaven, of San Francisco, for appellant.

P. L. Benjamin, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

On February 27, 1930, judgment was entered in the above action in favor of plaintiff and against the defendant for $2,500 and costs. The action was one for personal injuries caused by the negligent operation of an automobile by the defendant. The latter was insured against loss or damage due to such negligence by a policy of liability insurance issued by the Home Accident Insurance Company of Arkansas. Therein the insurer agreed "to defend in the name and on behalf of the assured any suit brought to enforce a claim for damages, * * *" and the policy also contained the following provision: "The assured, whenever requested by the company, shall aid in securing information and evidence and the attendance of witnesses and in prosecuting appeals, but the assured shall not voluntarily assume any liability either before or after an accident, nor shall he, without the written consent of the company previously given, incur any expense or settle any claim except at his own cost, nor interfere in any negotiations for settlement or in any legal proceeding conducted by the company on account of any claim. * * *" Further, that in the event of a judgment being recovered against the assured, an action might be brought on the policy by the injured person against the insurer.

The evidence shows that the insurer employed attorneys and carried on the defense without interference by defendant. Upon the entry of the judgment, an appeal was taken therefrom by the insurer, acting through its attorneys, and a bond was filed for the purpose of staying execution pending the appeal. This bond was procured by the insurer from the Indemnity Insurance Company of North America, which at the insurer's request became sole surety thereon. Thereafter the insurer became insolvent, and the appeal was dismissed, whereupon a remittitur issued and was filed in the Superior Court. The judgment passed by assignment to J. C. Hughes, who, on June 17, 1931, filed in the Superior Court a written application for entry of judgment against the Indemnity Company as surety upon the bond. The application was granted, resulting in a judgment under section 942 of the Code of Civil Procedure against said company for $2,639.04, with costs and interest, which it paid.

[1] Following such payment, the Indemnity Company, pursuant to section 1059 of the Code of Civil Procedure, requested the clerk of the Superior Court to issue execution against the defendant for the amount paid. The writ issued and was levied upon property standing in defendant's name. Thereupon he moved the court for an order directing entry of satisfaction of judgment as against himself and recalling the execution. This motion was upon the ground that the Indemnity Company did not by executing the said bond on appeal become surety for him but for the insurer, and that therefore it had not become subrogated to any right to enforce the judgment against him. Affidavits in support of the motion, and counter affidavits by the Indemnity Company, were filed. Those in favor of the defendant, who was the prevailing party, must be taken as true. Doak v. Bruson, 152 Cal. 17, 91 P. 1001. From these it sufficiently appears that the defendant was satisfied with the judgment and desired its payment, but that without his knowledge or consent an appeal was taken therefrom by the insurer, and upon its application alone the bond in question was procured and filed; further, that the insurer agreed to hold the Indemnity Company harmless against any liability for loss thereunder, and that the latter company until the insurer became insolvent considered it and not the defendant to be its principal. It also appears that all the facts of the transaction were known to the Indemnity Company when its bond was executed, and that a discount from the regular premium was allowed the insurer.

The motion was granted, and the Indemnity Company appealed from the orders entered in that connection.

[2] While the policy contained the provision that the assured, if requested by the company, should aid in the prosecution of appeals, by no reasonable construction did this provision require defendant to furnish a bond to stay the execution of a judgment pending an appeal, or to place himself in a position where he would be subject to a claim of the character made in this proceeding; and it has been held to be the duty of an insurer, in case it elects to appeal, to furnish the bond. Pacific Coast Casualty Co. v. General Bonding & Casualty Co. (C. C. A.) 240 F. 36. It has also been held that an insurance company, in exercising its right to defend an action brought against the assured, is not the latter's agent, but rather in the position of an independent contractor. Attleboro Mfg. Co. v. Frankfort, etc., Ins. Co. (C. C. A.) 240 F. 573; Bell v. Greenwood, 229 App. Div. 550, 242 N. Y. S. 149.

The Indemnity Company contends, however, that, having paid the judgment, it became substituted to the rights of the judgment creditor under said section 1059, which provides that any surety on an undertaking on appeal executed to stay proceedings on a money judgment, who pays the same after its affirmation, is substituted to the rights of the judgment creditor, and may enforce the judgment in all respects as if he had recovered it.

[3-6] A surety is one who at the request of another, and for the purpose of securing him a benefit, becomes responsible for the performance by the latter of some act in favor of a third person, or hypothecates property as security therefor (Civ. Code, § 2831); and it is the general rule that, in order to recover, he must show that he became such at the express or implied request of the principal; otherwise he will be deemed a mere volunteer, and cannot thus make himself a creditor of him whose debt he pays. Spencer, Suretyship, § 118; 50 Cor. Jur. Principal and Surety, § 404, p. 249; Mitchell v. Chambers, 43 Mich. 150, 5 N. W. 57, 38 Am. Rep. 167; White's Ex'r v. White, 30 Vt. 338; Ricketson v. Giles, 91 Ill. 154; McPherson v. Meek, 30 Mo. 345; McCabe v. Montgomery, 131 Ark. 523, 199 S. W. 548; Anderson v. Hendrickson, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 610, 95 N. W. 844. Here there was no request by defendant, and as between him and the companies he received no benefit from the filing of the bond, nor was it the intention of the Indemnity Company that he should; the sole beneficiary as understood by both companies being the insurer. Under such circumstances, as held in McCabe v. Montgomery, supra, so far as the companies were concerned, the bond was not for defendant's benefit, and as to him the Indemnity Company was a volunteer. While subrogation is founded upon principles of justice, and may be decreed so as to secure such without regard to form, a person claiming the benefit of the doctrine must establish a superior equity, which appellant has failed to do, and it will not be permitted to work an injustice. 23 Cal. Jur. Subrogation, 917; Bell v. Greenwood, supra. The facts of the case last cited closely resemble those in the case at bar; and it was there held that a surety on an appeal bond obtained by an insurer was not entitled after payment of the judgment to recover against the principal defendant on the theory of subrogation, citing City Trust, etc., Surety Co. v. Haaslocher, 101 App. Div. 415, 91 N. Y. S. 1022, which declares that after judgment the insurer is as between it and the judgment debtor to be regarded as the principal debtor, and that an appeal bond which it had caused to be filed should be deemed to have been executed on its behalf as principal. Literally, the Code section covers all cases where such a bond is filed irrespective of any question of privity between the parties, and regardless of whether the judgment debtor knew of the fact. However, the right of a surety to be subrogated to the rights of the original creditor as against the judgment debtor upon payment of the judgment has long been recognized and enforced in equity

(37 Cyc. Subrogation, 419; 25 R. C. L. Subrogation, § 69, p. 1387; 16 L. R. A. page 118, note); and, as has been said with regard to section 709 of the same Code (Forsythe v. Los Angeles Railway Co., 149 Cal. 569, 87 P. 24; Williams v. Riehl, 127 Cal. 365, 59 P. 762, 78 Am. St. Rep. 60), section 1059 gives to a surety the summary remedy of using the judgment itself to enforce his rights against the judgment debtor. It is but a method of procedure based upon the doctrine of subrogation and governed by the same equitable principles. The letter of the statute will not be followed where the result of such an interpretation will be absurd and unjust; it being the rule that the spirit and reason of the law should prevail. 23 Cal. Jur. Stats. § 113, p. 735. Here, although the defendant was named as principal in the bond, this was without his knowledge or consent, and the insurer was, regardless of the form of the transaction, the real principal and the Indemnity Company its surety. It is our conclusion in view of the facts that as to defendant the Indemnity Company was not a surety within the meaning of the Code section.

The orders appealed from are affirmed.

Eminent domain ⊂=258.

Motion to dismiss condemnation proceedings filed after perfecting appeal from judgment held properly dismissed by trial court, since court had lost jurisdiction (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 949, 1251, 1255a).

Petition by Frank M. Bailey for a writ of certiorari to review the order of the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Humboldt, Hon. T. H. Selvage, Judge, dismissing petitioner's motion to dismiss an action for condemnation of a right of way.

Order affirmed.

Hugh K. McKevitt, of San Francisco, for respondents.

Mr. Justice R. L. THOMPSON delivered the opinion of the court.

This is a petition for a writ of certiorari to review the order of the Superior Court of Humboldt County dismissing petitioner's motion to dismiss an action for condemnation of a right of way for failure to pay the amount of money assessed, within thirty days after the rendering of final judgment, pursuant to section 1251 of the Code of Civil Procedure, after an appeal from the judgment had been perfected.

The petitioner is the owner of certain real property in Humboldt county. The state of California, acting through its department of public works, brought an action in the Superior Court of that county to condemn a fraction of one acre of that land for highway purposes. January 25, 1932, judgment of condemnation was rendered and entered in that action assessing the value of the land to be taken at the sum of $12,200. On February 9, 1932, within thirty days after the entry of judgment, the plaintiff perfected an appeal from the judgment of condemnation. No money was paid upon this judgment by the plaintiff pursuant to section 1251 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or at all. On February 25th this petitioner, who was the defendant in the condemnation proceeding, moved the trial court for a judgment of dismissal of the action in eminent domain on the ground that the failure of the plaintiff to pay the sum of money which was assessed within thirty days from the entry of judgment pursuant to section 1251, supra, constituted an abandonment of the condemnation proceedings and a waiver of all rights affected by the decree. On application of the plaintiff the motion to dismiss the condemnation suit was dismissed by the trial court on the ground that the perfected appeal stayed proceedings in that action, and that the court was without jurisdiction to dismiss the proceeding in eminent domain. This petition for a writ of review was then instituted.

The petitioner contends that the decree which was rendered in the eminent domain proceedings on January 25th was a "final judgment" of condemnation, and that failure to pay the judgment within thirty days from the entry thereof constituted an abandonment of the proceedings, in spite of the pending appeal from that judgment.

With respect to judgments in condemnation proceedings, section 1251 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads, in part: "The plaintiff must, within thirty days after final judgment, pay the sum of money assessed." That portion of section 1255a, of the same Code, upon which the petitioner relies reads as follows: "* * * Failure to comply with section 1251 of this code shall constitute an implied abandonment of the proceeding."

The petitioner's motion to dismiss the condemnation proceedings was presented to the wrong court. After an appeal from the judgment had been perfected to the District Court of Appeal the trial court was without jurisdiction to entertain the motion to dismiss the action. Section 949, Code Civ. Proc.; 2 Cal. Jur. 415, § 178; Colusa, etc., R. R. Co. v. Superior Court, 31 Cal. App. 746, 161 P. 1011; Mt. Shasta Power Corp. v. Dennis, 66 Cal. App. 186, 225 P. 877. In 2 California Jurisprudence 415, § 178, it is said: "The service and filing of a proper notice of appeal from final judgment in an action transfers the action from the superior court to the appellate court, and divests the superior court of further jurisdiction in the cause except as to matters not affected by the judgment or order appealed from. The trial court has no longer any power or control over the action, and cannot proceed further as to matters embraced in the judgment until the appeal is heard and determined and its jurisdiction is restored."

The well-settled rule above mentioned has been applied to condemnation proceedings. Colusa, etc., R. R. Co. v. Superior Court, supra. In the Mt. Shasta Power Corporation Case, above cited, a similar motion to dismiss the proceedings in a condemnation action was properly addressed to the appellate court and not to the trial court. If the result of a failure to pay the money assessed by the trial court in the present action amounted to an implied abandonment of the proceedings, that abandonment did not occur until thirty days had elapsed after the judgment was rendered and entered. In the meantime the cause was transferred to the appellate court by the perfecting of an appeal, and the trial court thereby lost jurisdiction to entertain a motion to dismiss the proceedings on account of an implied abandonment or otherwise. The order of the trial court dismissing the petitioner's motion to dismiss the condemnation proceedings was therefore properly made. That order amounted to a denial of his petition to dismiss the condemnation proceedings.

In view of the fact that the trial court was without jurisdiction to dismiss the condemnation proceedings, it is unnecessary for this court to determine the question as to whether a failure on the part of the state to pay the amount of money which was assessed by the judgment in this case constituted an implied abandonment of the cause.

The order denying petitioner's motion to dismiss the condemnation proceedings is affirmed.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 6, 1932. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Nov. 3, 1932.

1. Assignments ⇐8.

Under Indiana law, wife's inchoate interest in husband's lands is not present estate, and so long as title remains in husband her inchoate right alone cannot be conveyed (Burns' Ann. St. Ind. 1926, §§ 3337, 3349).

2. Descent and distribution ⇐69.

Under Indiana law, husband may dispose of his personalty without wife's consent, except in expectancy of death to defeat her statutory distributive right (Burns' Ann. St. Ind. 1926, § 3343).

3. Descent and distribution ⇐5.

Wife having only expectancy in decedent's personal estate under law of matrimonial domicile, and decedent having established his domicile in California, wife held not entitled to portion of decedent's personalty which she could have claimed under law of matrimonial domicile (Burns' Ann. St. Ind. 1926, § 3343; Civ. Code Cal. § 129).

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

PER CURIAM.

An appeal from an order and decree sustaining the demurrer of respondent executor to appellant's petition for a decree of partial distribution and denying said petition.

Appellant is the widow of decedent, who at the time of his death was a resident of California. They were married on March 28, 1925, at which time, according to the petition, both had their legal residence and domicile in Indiana. Within a few days after the marriage they separated, and decedent came to California, where he established his residence. Thereafter he commenced in Los Angeles county an action for a divorce from appellant, but died testate befor the action terminated. Proceedings for the administration of his estate are pending in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. The petition alleged:

"That prior to her marriage with decedent the decedent represented to the petitioner that he owned stocks, bonds and other securities of an amount in value in excess of $200,000, which stocks, bonds and securities were issued by corporations having their domicile in said state of Indiana; that said decedent did in fact own said securities at and prior to the time of said marriage, and he made said representations to the petitioner as inducements for her engagement to marry him, and they were intended to and in fact did operate as a part of the consideration for the consummation of said marriage on part of the petitioner.

"That at, prior to and continuously since the time of said marriage it was and is the law of said state of Indiana that if a man dies testate leaving a widow, one-third of his personal estate shall descend to said widow subject to its proportion of the debts of said decedent, and that any such widow shall have the right to reject and renounce the provisions made for her under the terms of the will and elect to take under the laws of said state; that it was and is further provided by the laws of said state that any surviving wife desiring to renounce the provisions made for her in any such will shall file her election in writing, duly signed and acknowledged before some officer authorized to take acknowledgments of deeds. and cause such election to be filed within one year after such will has been admitted to probate in said state.

"That similar statutory provisions were made in favor of a husband with reference to property and property rights owned by a wife, with like right of election in favor of a surviving husband to take under the law instead of any provisions made for him by will; that under the decisions of the courts of said state having final jurisdiction over the subject matter thereof, said statutory provisions have been construed as modifying the common law property rights as between husband and wife, and holding it to be the law of said state that by virtue of the marital contract and the rights accruing therefrom the law casts upon each a contingent interest in the other's property which in the event of death becomes fixed in the survivor and which can be abridged or taken away only to the extent stipulated in a marriage settlement; that your petitioner herein has duly executed and filed or caused to be filed her renunciation of the decedent's will and the provision therein made for her and her election to take under the laws of their matrimonial domicile, being said state of Indiana, which renunciation and election was filed within the time and in the manner required by law.

"That after the separation between your petitioner and the decedent as hereinbefore stated, the decedent disposed of the stocks, bonds and securities so owned by him at the time of their marriage and converted the proceeds thereof into the property, stocks and bonds described in the inventory filed by the executor herein, and that the property and property rights represented by said inventory are in legal effect the same as those owned by the decedent at the time of their marriage; that the petitioner is entitled to a distributive share of the funds remaining for distribution after the payment of the decedent's debts, in an amount equal to one-third thereof."

Appellant contends that she is entitled to the portion of decedent's personal estate which she could have claimed under the laws of Indiana notwithstanding his attempted disposal thereof by his will.

By the Code of 1852 dower was abolished in Indiana. May v. Fletcher, 40 Ind. 575. But with regard to the wife's interest in her deceased husband's real estate it is provided by statute that "if a husband die testate or intestate, leaving a widow, one-third of his real estate shall descend to her in fee-simple, free from all demands of creditors * * *" (Burns' Annotated Indiana Statutes 1926, § 3337 [3014]); and that "a surviving wife is entitled * * * to one-third of all the real estate of which her husband may have been seized in fee-simple at any time during the marriage, and in the conveyance of which she may not have joined, in due form of law, and also of all lands in which her husband had an equitable interest at the time of his death: Provided, That if the husband shall have left a will, the wife may elect to take under the will instead of this or the foregoing provisions" (Burns' Annotated Indiana Statutes 1926, § 3349 [3029]).

[1] It has been held with respect to said section 3337 (3014) that the wife acquires her title thereunder by descent as an heir of her husband; but that under section 3349 (3029) her title is by purchase by virtue of her marital rights and not as an heir, and that in both cases her title vests at the same time and by virtue of the happening of the same event, namely, the death of her husband (May v. Fletcher, supra; Bowers v. Lillis, 187 Ind. 1, 115 N. E. 930), so that, while her inchoate interest in the lands of her husband is an estate in the land itself and not a mere incumbrance (Clements v. Davis, 155 Ind. 624, 57 N. E. 905), it is not a present estate, and so long as the title remains in the husband her inchoate right alone cannot be conveyed (Davenport v. Gwilliams, 133 Ind. 142, 31

N. E. 790, 22 L. R. A. 244; Unger v. Mellinger, 37 Ind. App. 639, 77 N. E. 814, 117 Am. St. Rep. 348). The community system does not prevail in Indiana, and appellant admits that prior to 1891 there was no statute of that state giving to a surviving widow an interest in her deceased husband's personal estate akin to the common-law right of dower and not subject to be defeated by will. See Pond v. Sweetser, 85 Ind. 144; Loy v. Loy, 128 Ind. 150, 27 N. E. 351. She claims, however, that the Act of March 9, 1891, Acts 1891, p. 404, c. 185 (Burns' Annotated Indiana Statutes 1926, § 3343 [3025]), gives such right.

This act provided as follows: "If a man die testate leaving a widow, one third of his personal estate shall descend to said widow, subject, however, to its proportion of the debts of said decedent: Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be construed to reduce the interest which the law now gives a widow in the estate of a deceased husband: And provided, further, That such widow may elect to take under the will of said decedent instead of this or any other law of descent of this state, which election shall be made within ninety days after said will has been admitted to probate in this state, and in the same manner as widows are now required by law to elect." This section was referred to in Crawfordsville Trust Co. v. Ramsey, 55 Ind. App. 40, 100 N. E. 1049, 102 N. E. 282, an action involving the validity of a gift. The gift was conditioned on the event of the donor's death, with a reservation of the use of the property during his life and was testamentary in character. It was also made with the intention of defeating his wife's right to share in his personal estate at his death, and was held to be void. The court, with respect to the husband's power of control over his personal property in that state, held that there could be no question but that as a general rule he had the absolute control of his personal property during his life and could give and otherwise dispose of it without his wife's consent free from any claim of hers, but that where the transfer was a mere device by which he sought to deprive his wife of her distributive share under the statute the same rule should apply as in cases of conveyances of real property for the purpose of defeating the wife's right to dower. In its opinion the court cites cases from other jurisdictions which refer to the right of a wife to share in her deceased husband's personal estate as a dower right. An examination of these cases shows that with one exception, namely, where by statute "dower" was given in the personal estate of the husband, the court used the term to describe the widow's statutory right to a distributive share of her deceased husband's personal estate. That the term is sometimes so used is shown in Howard v. Strode, 242 Mo. 210, 146 S. W. 792, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1057.

Appellant cites other Indiana cases which she contends support her claim. In Carroll v. Swift, 10 Ind. App. 170, 37 N. E. 1061, 1062, the court said that "prior to the Act of March 9, 1891 * * * a surviving wife took no absolute interest in the personal estate of her husband, except as to the statutory allowance of $500. He might dispose of the surplus, after the payment of debts, by will." This case involved the right of a widow to the distribution of part of her husband's personal property, and the question of her interest therein was not necessary to the decision, or decided.

In Murphey v. Brown, 159 Ind. 106, 62 N. E. 275, a widow claimed the whole of her husband's estate under the provisions of a statute; but the question of her interest in his personal property other than her right to a distributive share thereof upon his death was not involved.

In Unger v. Mellinger, supra, the validity of a postnuptial contract was considered, and the court in its opinion speaks of the "contingent" and "inchoate" right of each spouse in the property of the other, but the character of such right in personal property was not considered. None of these cases appear to us to have decided the question presented in the case at bar.

[2] As stated, a husband may under the Indiana laws dispose of his personal property during his lifetime without his wife's consent and free from any claim by her, provided it be not done in expectation of death and for the purpose of defeating her distributive right under the statute (Crawfordsville Trust Co. v. Ramsey, supra), and no statute or decision from that state has been called to our attention which provides or holds that the wife enjoys any ordinary rights of ownership in her husband's personal property during his lifetime, or has a more complete interest therein than that of an expectancy as heir if she survives him.

Appellant concedes that the property in question if governed by the California law would be the separate property of decedent and subject to his testamentary disposition; also that as a general rule the descent of personal property is governed by the laws of the state where decedent was domiciled at the time of his death; but she insists that the contract of marriage in relation to property rights should be governed, as other contracts, by the laws of the jurisdiction where it was to be carried out—in this instance by the laws of Indiana.

This doctrine has been recognized and applied in instances where rights in the property of one spouse were held to have vested at the time of the marriage. The rule is stated in Wharton on Conflict of Laws, § 193a, as follows: "While * * * it is undoubtedly true that the intestacy laws of the last domicile of the deceased govern the distribution of the personal estate of either husband or wife in case of intestacy, a distinction is to be observed between the mere inchoate rights of either spouse to share in the distribution of the other's estate at his death and a vested right which attaches at the time of marriage though its enjoyment may be postponed until the death of the other spouse." The author says further that the latter right is not divested by a change of domicile, but that a mere statute of distribution of the original matrimonial domicile, or any domicile other than the last, by which either spouse is to share in the other's personal estate upon the latter's death creates no vested right, and therefore offers no obstacle to the application of the statute of distribution of the last domicile.

Appellant in this connection cites a number of decisions. Kraemer v. Kraemer, 52 Cal. 302, holds that where there is no express contract the law of the matrimonial domicile will govern as to personal property everywhere. See, also, Estate of Drishaus, 199 Cal. 369, 249 P. 515. Bonati v. Welsch, 24 N. Y. 157, was an action by a widow to recover from her husband's estate the amount received by him from the sale of certain real property situated in France. The spouses were married and living in that country when plaintiff inherited the property from her mother. She was later abandoned by her husband, who died domiciled in New York. It appeared that by the French law the property which came to her by succession belonged to her, but that her husband had the management of it, with the right to retain the avails of the sale during the existence of the community, which terminated upon his death, whereupon she would have a valid claim against his estate. It was held that as a creditor of her husband under the laws of France her rights continued and attached to the property of her husband situated in New York.

Harral v. Harral, 39 N. J. Eq. 279, 51 Am. Rep. 17, was a similar case. The parties married and established their domicile in France without any contract as to property. By the laws of that country, where there was no contract and the marriage was followed by a conjugal domicile the property of married persons became subject to the community law. Under this law the husband, who had the management of the community property, might dispose of his share by will, but not the share of his wife to which she became entitled upon his death. After the marriage the husband became insane and was brought to the United States, where he died. It was held by reason of the above facts that his personal property became subject to the law mentioned, and that his widow was entitled to a half thereof notwithstanding that by his will he had bequeathed the whole to others.

It was held in Doss v. Campbell, 19 Ala. 590, 54 Am. Dec. 198, that where the wife acquired separate property under the laws of California and removed with it to Alabama, where she could not have acquired a separate interest in the property under the same facts, that the removal did not destroy her property interest.

So in Holmes v. Holmes, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 295, a wife who had obtained a decree a mensa et thoro inherited a legacy from her father. Under the law then in force her husband was entitled to the legacy, which he received. A subsequent act would have made the wife the owner, but it was held that the later statute did not apply, as "the marriage of the parties and the vesting of the money were prior to the passage of the act."

In Noonan v. Kemp, 34 Md. 73, 6 Am. Rep. 307, a citizen of Maryland left a legacy to his daughter, who resided in Kentucky. The latter died before the distribution of her father's estate, leaving a husband surviving. Under the Kentucky law the husband succeeded to the entire personal estate of his deceased wife. It was held that the legacy, like any other personal property owned by the daughter, was deemed to be situated in Kentucky and governed by its laws.

Other cases declaring similar principles decided in Indiana and other jurisdictions are cited by appellant, but none involved the question presented here.

In addition she cites cases dealing with the question whether or not the provision made by law for the wife is in the nature of an inheritance and subject to a succession tax, which cases hold that such a provision is not an inheritance but belongs to her independent of any right of inheritance or succession. These cases are contrary to the California rule that upon the death of the husband the wife took one-half of the community property as heir. Estate of Moffitt, 153 Cal. 359, 95 P. 653, 1025, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 207; Estate of Dargie, 176 Cal. 720, 169 P. 360.

[3] The mere fact that under the Indiana laws (section 3343 [3025]) the power of the husband to dispose of his personal property by will was subject to the right of his wife at her election to claim a third thereof gave her no more than an expectancy in this portion of his estate. As was held in Spreckels v. Spreckels, 116 Cal. 339, 48 P. 228, 36 L. R. A. 497, 58 Am. St. Rep. 170, such a limitation of the husband's right would give the wife no interest in his property during his lifetime. We are satisfied that appellant had no present fixed right or interest in decedent's personal estate, or more than a mere expectancy, which depended upon survivorship to become a vested right. This being true, and he having established his domicile in California, as he might do (Civ. Code, § 129), the property was subject to the law of this state, which governs its disposition and distribution whether he died testate or intestate.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

TAPPAAN, Justice pro tem.

The plaintiff had judgment below, and defendant appeals therefrom. The facts involved in this case are comparatively simple and relate to a transaction whereby defendant acquired from plaintiff certain shares of stock. Plaintiff was the owner of shares of stock of the Cawston Ostrich Farm, and had had negotiations with defendant looking toward the sale or exchange of the same to defendant. On February 28, 1925, plaintiff submitted to defendant a statement of the terms and conditions upon which he would sell his stock interest in the Cawston Ostrich Farm to defendant. This written proposal so made by plaintiff to defendant was duly accepted in writing by said defendant, and in evidence of such acceptance he wrote upon the document "Accepted: R. K. Snow."

Among other items mentioned in this written proposal, which plaintiff proposed to accept from defendant for his stock, was the following: "3. Assignment of note, C. L. Clinch, for $9,000.00 (Drawing seven per cent interest), secured by collateral already submitted, said note to become due in about six months, and be guaranteed by yourself." (Italics ours.) Some days later the note referred to in the agreement just quoted was by defendant's direction tendered to plaintiff by a trust company which held the same under some agreement with defendant. Plaintiff authorized this same trust company to accept the note and hold it for his account, which it thereupon did. The note as thus transferred to plaintiff had upon it the blank indorsement of defendant. Thereafter, default being made in the payment of this note, the collateral given to secure payment of the note was realized upon and the sum thus secured applied upon the note. Defendant had notice of this fact, and co-operated with plaintiff in the conversion of the collateral into money and the application of the fund thus derived to the reduction of the balance due upon the note. The sum claimed by plaintiff here is for the balance remaining unpaid after deducting from the face of the note and unpaid interest the sum secured from the sale of the collateral.

The complaint filed herein sets forth three causes of action, all based upon the same facts, but differing as to allegations of the effect thereof. The first cause of action thus set up pleads a guaranty and the breach thereof. The second cause of action sets forth a contract to guarantee and the breach thereof. The third cause of action alleges an indorsement of the note by defendant and his failure to pay on default of the makers. The trial court dismissed the second cause of action, but found for the plaintiff on both the first and third causes of action.

[1, 2] The first point relied upon by appellant on this appeal is that the court failed to find on material issues raised by the pleadings. Appellant contends that the court should have included findings covering certain allegations contained in his answer and in the amendment to such answer. The allegations to which appellant thus directs the attention of the court have to do with certain transactions appellant is alleged to have had with the note, here in question, at a time prior to the transfer of this note to respondent. Briefly it is alleged that appellant caused said note to be placed in trust with a trust company to be held by it in trust for appellant and others; that at the time it was so placed in trust appellant indorsed said note in blank, so that it could be transferred to the trust. There is also an allegation that the note was not duly presented to the makers for payment, and that defendant had no notice of nonpayment. There is no allegation that plaintiff at any time had notice of the alleged transaction had in reference to the note and its alleged transfer in trust or the purpose of its indorsement at that time. In view of the fact that the court found that the note was, at a time subsequent to the date of these alleged transactions, duly sold and transferred by defendant to plaintiff, these allegations cited by appellant were immaterial to the issues involved in the controversy, and the court was not required to find as to them. The note so transferred contained upon its face an express waiver of presentment, demand, protest, notice of dishonor, and diligence, and, as the court found in favor of the regularity of the transfer to plaintiff, a finding on question of failure to present and give notice was also immaterial. Civ. Code, §§ 3190 and 3191.

[3] Appellant in his next two specifications attacks the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings as made by the trial court. Appellant first contends that the evidence shows that, on the date of the transfer of the note to respondent, the note was in trust, and, as a conclusion from said fact, argues that therefore appellant could not on said date have been the owner of the note. The evidence is conclusive that on or about said date the note was transferred to respondent's agent by the trust company at the direct order and request of appellant, and for appellant's account and benefit. There is ample evidence to support the finding that as of that date appellant was the owner of the note, either legal or equitable. There is no merit in the contention that the finding that the note was "delivered duly indorsed" is unsupported. Appellant made no attempt to show that respondent had notice of the alleged transaction which he had had with the trust company in reference to the note. He had indorsed the note for some purpose, and must have had notice of the condition of the note at the time he directed it to be transferred by his agent, the trust company, to respondent. His written agreement was to guarantee the note. Appellant's testimony that he notified an alleged agent of respondent that he would not be bound by his written agreement to guarantee the note, when considered in connection with the admitted fact that thereafter he directed the indorsed note to be delivered to respondent, at best, but presents a question of fact. The court's finding, therefore, is conclusive and not open to question here.

[4] An examination of appellant's other specifications of alleged insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings discloses that they relate, in most instances, to testimony as to appellant's acts and motives in transferring the note in question to the trust company. As has been heretofore pointed out, such matters were immaterial under the circumstances of this case. Respondent was entitled to rely on the face of the note as it was transferred to him, and could not be charged with facts and circumstances which occurred at some prior time unless and until they were brought to his notice, which nowhere appears to have been done. On the other hand, appellant is equally bound by the note as of the date of its transfer, and must be charged as well with notice of its legal effect. He cannot bind respondent nor limit his rights by any secret or uncommunicated act or intention upon his part. It should be noted that there was nothing in or upon the note itself nor the indorsement of appellant thereon which gave notice, actual or constructive, of any limitation of the legal effect of the note or its indorsement. The indorsement was regular in form (Civ. Code, § 3112) and the act of the trust company in the delivering of the note as appellant's agent, made effective the indorsement (Civ. Code, § 3097).

If the transactions had in the instant case are to be considered as evidencing a relationship of guaranty, this may be established, under the circumstances here present, by acts and declarations of the parties as well as by a written instrument. Civ. Code, § 2794, subd. 5. When we consider that the note here involved is of questionable negotiability, containing as it does many collateral undertakings, but though indorsed in blank it contained a waiver of presentment notice and protest and was transferred in accordance with the terms of a written contract to guarantee the note, it cannot be fairly said that there was not sufficient evidence to support the court's finding in this regard. First Nat. Bank v. Falkenhan, 94 Cal. 141, 29 P. 866; Kendall v. Parker, 103 Cal. 319, 324, 37 P. 401, 42 Am. St. Rep. 117; Nuetzel v. Mackie, 80 Cal. App. 768, 772, 253 P. 166. There is evidence to be found in the record sufficient to support the findings questioned by appellant.

Appellant's next point is that the indorsement at the time it was made or written was a restrictive indorsement. Appellant's argument is based upon the facts alleged to have surrounded his transfer of the note to the trust company. As has been heretofore stated, these facts are immaterial, in the absence of notice to respondent. The only material facts on this phase of the case are those arising upon the transfer of the note to plaintiff. We have already pointed out that there was nothing disclosed by those facts which could be construed as giving notice to respondent of any limitation upon his rights under the note and indorsement thereof.

[5-7] Appellant complains that the court committed error in that it refused to permit him to file, at the time of trial, an amendment consisting of an amendment to his answer, then on file, and a counterclaim. The court permitted the filing of the amendment to the answer, but refused to permit the filing of the counterclaim. The motion to amend is one directed to the sound judicial discretion of the trial court, and, unless there appears an abuse of this discretion on the part of the trial court, its judgment will not be disturbed. The record here fails to disclose any such abuse of discretion as will justify a reversal of the judgment here. The facts alleged in the counterclaim occurred some four years before the date of trial. They, if true, would constitute fraud. No adequate excuse is alleged for the failure to present these facts in a proper pleading at a reasonable time before the date of trial. Appellant frankly states: "We concede that a large amount of time passed between the time of the filing of the action and the time we asked leave to file the counterclaim, but it was only the very day or the night before that the case finally came to trial that we concluded that a counterclaim would lie." The action of the trial court in denying appellant's motion to amend by filing a counterclaim was not error under the circumstances existing here.

Appellant's attempted appeal from the order denying his motion for a new trial is dismissed. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem., delivered the opinion of the court.

This action was brought by plaintiff to set aside a conveyance of personal and real property from defendant Jessie E. Lavery to defendant Emma Lucretia Barnett upon the ground that the said conveyance was executed in fraud of creditors. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff setting aside and annulling this conveyance, and from this judgment the said Emma Lucretia Barnett has appealed.

On November 25, 1925, Jessie E. Lavery executed a contract naming W. C. Barnett as trustee and giving to respondent the exclusive right to sell a tract of land known as tract 8304, containing 57 lots, respondent to receive a commission for his services in selling the said lots. Pursuant to the terms of said contract, respondent proceeded with the sale of said lots until about August 1, 1927, at which date he received notice from Jessie E. Lavery canceling the said contract. In the meantime, on March 26, 1926, Jessie E. Lavery had conveyed the said property, by her deed, to her daughter, Emma L. Barnett, and this deed was recorded in the early part of 1927. Thereafter, on January 28, 1928, respondent commenced an action for damages for breach of contract against Jessie E. Lavery, Emma L. Barnett, and W. C. Barnett for the breach of said contract, and judgment was rendered in his favor against Jessie E. Lavery. From this judgment the said Jessie E. Lavery appealed, and it was reversed by the Supreme Court on June 23, 1932. Thomas v. Lavery (Cal. Sup.) 12 P.(2d) 636.

[1] The rule is general that the creditor must first reduce his claim to a judgment before he is entitled to resort to an equitable action to reach property fraudulently transferred by his debtor. 12 Cal. Jur. 1033; Moore v. Schneider, 196 Cal. 380, 238 P. 81, and James v. Schafer, 70 Cal. App. 372, 233 P. 70.

A creditor can avoid the act or obligation of his debtor for fraud only where the fraud obstructs the enforcement by legal procedure of his right to take the property affected by the transfer or obligation. Civ. Code, § 3441.

[2, 3] While it is a general rule that until a judgment becomes final by affirmance on appeal, or the lapse of the time within which an appeal might be taken, such judgment is not admissible in evidence, and cannot be relied upon as the foundation of the rights declared in it (Feeney v. Hinckley, 134 Cal. 467, 66 P. 580, 86 Am. St. Rep. 290), yet a judgment creditor who has endeavored without avail to collect the judgment may attack a transfer as made with intent to defraud creditors, although the judgment has not become final by affirmance on appeal, or by expiration of the time in which to appeal, and although he have no specific lien on the property transferred independent of the judgment. Rossen v. Villanueva, 175 Cal. 632, 166 P. 1004.

But in the well-considered case of Sewell v. Johnson, 165 Cal. 762, 134 P. 704, 707, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 645, in which all of the justices concurred, where it appeared that the judgment for the debt had been reversed, the court held on appeal from the judgment in favor of the judgment creditor setting aside and annulling a transfer of the debtor's property on the ground of fraud that the latter must also be reversed. In the course of the opinion in that case, the court said: "It is to be observed that the sole basis sustaining the right of this respondent in the present appeal to maintain his action against this appellant in the court below was the judgment in Sewell v. Christie, Price et al. [163 Cal. 76, 124 P. 713], which we have reversed. The present action against the defendant arising out of such judgment is in the nature of a creditor's bill. It could only be maintained after a judgment at law against Price, which was in effect its essential basis. As a general creditor, with a mere legal demand not merged into a judgment, plaintiff could maintain no action against appellant. But the judgment which alone constituted the basis of the present action has been reversed; the respondent has lost his position as a judgment creditor as effectually as if it never existed. He has no judgment." Further along in this opinion the court held that it must take judicial notice of the reversal, and to that extent overruled the decision in the case of Sewell v. Mary L. Price et al., 164 Cal. 265, 128 P. 407.

[4] It is a well-settled rule of law that a cause of action upon a judgment does not accrue until the judgment becomes final. Willard v. Dobbins, 191 Cal. 287, 216 P. 1008; Jones v. Summers, 105 Cal. App. 51, 286 P. 1093.

[5] And the reversal of the judgment places the parties in the trial court in the same position as if the cause had never been tried, with the exception that the opinion of the court on appeal must be followed so far as applicable. Central Savings Bank of Oakland v. Lake, 201 Cal. 438, 257 P. 521.

[6] The judgment in the case of Thomas v. Lavery having been reversed and that judgment being the basis of the judgment in the instant case, we are of the opinion that this court cannot do otherwise than also reverse it.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

Mr. Justice R. L. THOMPSON delivered the opinion of the court.

The petitioner seeks to review an award of damages which was rendered by the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of Lenocio Alonso against the New York Indemnity Company and the State Compensation Insurance Fund, jointly, as separate insurers of co-employers of the claimant who was injured in the course of his employment.

William Crawford owned a tract of rice land in Yolo county. He lacked experience in raising rice. He had been engaged in milling rice under the firm name of Woodland Rice Milling Company. He was desirous of attempting to produce rice on his Yolo county farm. There were three brothers by the name of Santos, residing in Yolo county, who were experienced rice growers. They were organized as a copartnership for the purpose of conducting a rice-growing business. Through the aid of Mr. Crawford, a lease of 151 acres of rice land adjoining his ranch was procured for the Santos brothers. In 1931, Mr. Crawford and the Santos brothers entered into an oral agreement to conduct a joint enterprise of cultivating and harvesting the rice crops which were growing upon their respective adjoining ranches. It was agreed that Crawford would supply the necessary farm machinery, and that Santos brothers should keep the machinery in repair and select and superintend a crew of farm hands to perform the labor of harvesting the rice crops on their respective adjoining ranches. Crawford agreed to finance this joint adventure. The employees were to be paid a reasonable per diem wage, which was to be charged against, and finally paid by, the respective owners for the work which was performed on the property of each of them. John Santos, who was one of the partners, was designated to superintend the operations on both ranches. Regarding this agreement to jointly employ a crew of men and co-operate in harvesting the rice crops on both ranches, William Crawford testified: "I was instrumental in securing (the lease of the 151 acres adjoining my ranch) for the Santos boys * * * in order to have them adjacent (and) to consolidate our work and experience. We entered into an agreement. * * * I owned * * * certain equipment, threshing machines, binders. * * * The Santos boys would have the free use of the same in the harvesting of their rice crop. * * * I had had no experience. * * * I spoke to John Santos * * * and asked that he assemble a crew (for our work) and supervise the same during the harvest. He was also to superintend and see that the equipment * * * (was kept in condition for use). * * * Alonso was one of the crew that John Santos assembled under this arrangement. * * * (I told) him to get a crew that would be sufficient to carry on the work efficiently, to get as efficient a crew as possible to minimize expense." Crawford further testified he "would see that sufficient finances were given (Santos brothers) to carry through their crop and mine to completion."

This agreement was made with the common purpose of using one crew of men on both ranches to expedite the work and economize the expense. The harvesting of the crops of rice on these adjoining ranches was a joint enterprise. The petitioner, New York Indemnity Company, was the separate insurer of Santos brothers. The State Compensation Insurance Fund was the separate insurer of William Crawford.

Pursuant to the foregoing agreement, Santos brothers selected a crew of about six men. This crew included the claimant, Leoncio Alonso. Under the supervision of John Santos, the work of harvesting the rice crop was commenced with this crew on the Santos property. The soil of this ranch proved too wet for satisfactory harvesting. The same crew of men was therefore transferred to the adjoining Crawford property, where they proceeded to harvest his crop of rice, under the supervision of John Santos. The claimant, Leoncio Alonso, was engaged in driving a Fordson tractor to which a rice binder was attached. On the third day of his employment on the Crawford ranch, Alonso was attempting to cross a ridge when the tractor upset, falling upon him and fracturing a leg and causing severe burns about the thigh. He was taken to a hospital by John Santos and paid by the Santos brothers for the services which he performed on the Crawford ranch. His wages while engaged upon these premises were charged to Crawford and subsequently paid by him. A demand for compensation was made in due time, and an award was allowed the claimant against both the New York Indemnity Company and the State Compensation Insurance Fund, on the theory that they were separate insurers of joint employers of the claimant. The commission found that "Leoncio Alonso, while employed as a tractor driver * * * by Santos brothers, as general employer, and William Crawford, as special employer, sustained injury arising out of and in the course of his employment," and that the New York Indemnity Company, as the insurer of Santos brothers, and the State Compensation Insurance Fund, as the insurer of William Crawford, were jointly liable for the payment of this compensation.

The petitioner contends that these findings are not supported by the evidence; that the claimant was injured while working on the Crawford premises for his exclusive benefit and under the supervision of his foreman, John Santos; that the New York Indemnity Company was not an insurer of Crawford; and that the award of damages against the petitioner is therefore erroneous and void.

[1, 2] When the record contains substantial evidence to support the findings of the commission, the award should be sustained. We are of the opinion the findings are amply supported by the evidence in the present case. It satisfactorily appears that Santos brothers and Crawford were engaged in a joint enterprise of harvesting their respective crops of rice growing upon separate adjoining premises, when the claimant was injured, and that they united in employing him for that service. By their oral agreement Crawford supplied the machinery and financed the enterprise. Santos brothers, who were experienced in rice growing selected the crew of workmen, superintended their work through John Santos, one of the partners, and kept the machinery in repair. It is immaterial that the wages of these workmen were charged to and ultimately paid by the respective owners for the time actually employed on their separate ranches. The workmen were employed to harvest both crops for the mutual benefit of both owners. It was therefore a joint enterprise.

[3] Where two or more parties engage in a joint enterprise, in the performance of which they unite in the employment of workmen, one of whom is injured in the course of that employment, both joint adventurers are liable for compensation just as the members of a copartnership are liable under similar circumstances. This liability will attach to both parties to a joint enterprise even though one may be the general employer and the other a mere special employer. It is held that, when two or more parties are mutually benefited by an enterprise, for the conducting of which they hire workmen who are injured in the performance of their duties, even though one of the parties is a general employer and the other a mere special employer, both may be liable for compensation. Employer's Liability Assur. Corp. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 179 Cal. 432, 177 P. 273; Diamond Drill Contracting Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 199 Cal. 694, 250 P. 862; Independence Ind. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 203 Cal. 51, 262 P. 757; Umsted v. Scofield Eng. Const. Co., 203 Cal. 224, 263 P. 799. In attempting to distinguish these causes from the facts of the case at bar, the petitioner asserts that the Santos brothers received no benefit from the agreement to co-operate in the harvesting of the respective rice crops. We think the petitioner is mistaken in that regard. Crawford agreed to furnish the machinery and finance the enterprise. This was a distinct benefit to the Santos brothers. One crew of men was employed for both ranches. By this means they were enabled to expedite the work and economize the expense. When they found the soil of the Santos place too wet, instead of discharging or laying off the men, they were transferred to the Crawford property, and the harvesting proceeded without delay. They were able to perform the work with one foreman. John Santos acted in that capacity without pay. His service as foreman and the experience of the Santos brothers as rice producers were offset by the furnishing of machinery and the financing of the enterprise by Crawford. This furnishes ample evidence of adequate benefit secured by the Santos brothers to support the agreement for this joint enterprise and bind both employers.

There is sufficient evidence to support the respondents' contention that both employers had a right to exercise control over the conduct of these employees. The respondents do not deny the joint liability of Crawford John Santos selected the workmen and superintended their services on both ranches. He took the claimant to the hospital for treatment after the accident occurred. Santos brothers paid his wages for the time during which he was employed on the Crawford ranch, although that sum was charged to, and ultimately paid by, Crawford. During the examination of John Santos, he testified regarding the right of Santos brothers to direct and control the action of the claimant while he was employed on the Crawford ranch, as follows:

"Q. Could Crawford have come in there and stopped Alonso from working at any time he wanted to? A. Why, I do not think so. * * * He would tell me, and it would be up to me. * * *

"Q. During the time that you were working on Crawford's land did Crawford ever actually give any orders to the men that you had furnished? A. No, not that I know of. * * *

"Q. Did you consider that you had the right to fire any of those men at any time? A. Sure."

This furnishes sufficient evidence, in conjunction with the testimony of Mr. Crawford respecting the agreement to co-operate in the joint enterprise of harvesting the separate crops of rice, to support the findings to the effect that Santos brothers were joint employers of the claimant together with Crawford, that they had authority to control the services of the claimant, even to the extent of discharging him, and that they were therefore jointly liable with Crawford for compensation for his injuries, in spite of the fact that the accident occurred on the premises of Crawford.

The award is affirmed.

Francis Herbert Dam, of San Francisco, in pro. per.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco (Kenneth Ferguson, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal by Francis Herbert Dam, as an heir at law of the above-named decedent and also as residuary devisee and legatee under the last will of said decedent, from the decree of partial distribution made September 22, 1931, in the matter of said estate. The appeal has been taken on the judgment roll alone (that is, on the clerk's transcript of the record in his office pertinent to said distribution and constituting the judgment roll in such matter), without a bill of exceptions or the transcript in lieu of a bill of exceptions under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure. The clerk's transcript contains a copy of the following, viz.: (1) Petition for partial distribution filed September 8, 1931. (2) Order of the clerk indorsed thereon setting the hearing for September 22, 1931, 10 o'clock a. m. (3) Clerk's 10-day notice dated September 8, 1931, posted on the same day pursuant to section 1200 of the Probate Code, to all persons interested in the estate of the deceased. (4) Affidavit of the deputy county clerk made September 10, 1931, annexed to said notice setting forth that on September 8, 1931, he posted a correct and true copy of the notice at the courthouse in the county, etc. (5) Decree of partial distribution made on September 22, 1931, and filed on the same day. (6) Notice of appeal. And to the said transcript the clerk has certified: "That the foregoing, to-wit, the petition for partial distribution, the affidavit of posting notice of hearing thereof and the annexed notice, and the decree of partial distribution, constitute the judgment roll in my office in the appeal taken in and by the foregoing notice of appeal (under decision in Estate of Broome, 169 Cal. 604, 147 P. 270); that no opposition to said petition, no counter petition, no paper or papers in the nature of pleadings, notices, affidavits, or findings of the court, and no order or paper of like character to those mentioned in section 670 of the Code of Civil Procedure of California, relating to said petition or said proceeding for partial distribution, other than the foregoing, has or have been filed in my office; and that the foregoing papers, and the endorsements thereon, are full, true and correct copies of the originals thereof on file in my office."

It appears that the petition for partial distribution was filed September 8, 1931, which was after the Probate Code became effective; and that seven petitioners, one of whom, Cora Dam Ferguson, was a coexecutrix, joined in the petition; and that on the hearing, distribution was made to the seven petitioners as prayed for in the petition.

The decree, in addition to making distribution as prayed, determines and sets forth, among other things, the following facts concerning said petition and the matters heard and considered: "* * * And the same now coming on this day duly and regularly to be heard, from the proofs taken and examination had therein this court finds as follows: That notice of this hearing has been given as required by the order of this court and by law, and that said notice is in all respects due, proper and sufficient; that the above named Frances Leoni Dam died on February 15, 1930, and that she was at the time of her death a resident of the County of Alameda, State of California, and left estate therein and elsewhere; that thereafter such proceedings were duly taken and had in and by the above entitled court in the above entitled matter that by an order and judgment of said court duly given and made on April 21, 1930 [1931], the will of said Frances Leoni Dam, deceased, was duly admitted to probate, with Etta Pearl Dam and Cora Dam Ferguson as executrices; that thereafter said Etta Pearl Dam and Cora Dam Ferguson duly qualified as such executrices and on said 21st day of April, 1931, letters testamentary upon the will of said deceased were duly issued to them; that thereupon they immediately entered upon the discharge of their duties as such executrices and they ever since have been and now are the duly appointed, qualified and acting executrices of the will of said deceased. * * That more than four months have elapsed since the will of said decedent was admitted to probate and letters testamentary thereon issued to said executrices as aforesaid; that the time for presentation of claims against the estate of said decedent has expired; that there is ample property in the hands of said executrices to pay any and all debts of said deceased, expenses of administration, taxes and to satisfy all other claims against said estate; and that a partial distribution of the assets of said estate as hereinafter set forth can at this time be made to said petitioners without loss to any creditor or creditors of said deceased or of her estate. * * And, good cause appearing therefor, it is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that no bond be required of said persons, or any of them, and that bond is hereby dispensed with. * * *"

[1-6] The appeal taken constitutes a direct attack on the said decree, and requires an answer as to whether or not want of jurisdiction or error or irregularity compelling reversal is shown by the judgment roll herein. Sections 1000 and 1200 of the Probate Code —which became effective August 14, 1931— prescribe what must be done to acquire jurisdiction. These sections obviously must be construed together. If on appeal from a probate decree such as this and under such a situation as is presented herein, the said sections 1000 and 1200 of the Probate Code must be construed as meaning that jurisdiction for the decree can be shown and supported in no way other than by the actual presence in the judgment roll of affidavits showing affirmatively the taking of all the steps that constitute all the notice prescribed by these sections, i. e., the posting of the 10-day notice and the mailing of the copies thereof to the different persons mentioned and the service of citation on the executor, etc., and that under the situation presented by an appeal taken on the judgment roll as here, the reviewing court must entirely ignore and disregard, when inspecting the judgment roll, all presumptions incident to the judgment and all recitals and findings in the judgment and decree concerning the service of the prescribed notice and the acquiring of jurisdiction by the court, then, of course, in this case under such view, manifestly, it could not be held that the law has been complied with or that jurisdiction has been shown; for there appears in the judgment roll but one affidavit, namely, that of the clerk that the 10-day notice of the hearing was duly posted. But we do not think that the meaning of said sections 1000 and 1200 of the Probate Code as applied to the present situation is so restricted. (In the case of Vail v. Jones, 209 Cal. 251, 254, 287 P. 99, wherein the trial court upon evidence not appearing in the judgment roll by affidavit as prescribed by sections 411, 415, and 670 of the Code of Civil Procedure, found that "Annie H. Vail was in fact served with summons attached to a copy of the complaint in said action," the Supreme Court apparently giving effect to such parol evidence and to the presumptions of service arising from the recitals of the judgment in the record attacked and under the view that jurisdiction does not depend upon the proof of service, but upon the fact that service has been made, declined to disturb the finding of the trial court.) Section 1200 of the Probate Code, as to the notices therein mentioned, provides that, "Proof of the giving of notice must be made at the hearing." What shape must that proof take? Must it all be in the form of affidavit so that under section 670 of the Code of Civil Procedure it may be incorporated into the judgment roll? As heretofore mentioned, sections 1200 and 1000 of the Probate Code obviously must be construed together. At the hearing on September 22, 1931, on the petition, the court was required to hear and consider evidence bearing on various matters, i. e., bearing on the terms of the will and on the condition of the estate, etc., pertinent to the distribution asked for, in addition to the primary matters of notice and of jurisdiction. What that evidence was we do not know, for it has not been brought up by bill of exceptions. It must, however, be presumed that the evidence was competent and that it warranted any finding thereon made by the court within the scope and issues of the petition. Williams v. Savings & Loan Society, 133 Cal. 360, 65 P. 822; Lane v. Tanner, 156 Cal. 135, 103 P. 846; Morgan v. Morgan, 190 Cal. 522, 213 P. 993. It does not appear on the face of the decree what notice or proof of service formed the basis of the recital that "the same now coming on this day duly and regularly to be heard, from the proofs taken and examination had therein this court finds as follows: That notice of the hearing has been given as required by the order of this court and by law, and that said notice is in all respects due, proper and sufficient," but it is declared generally in the recital that the determination was based on "the proofs taken and examination had." The statute required proof that the notice was duly posted at the courthouse. Such proof appears by the clerk's affidavit; but that affidavit goes only to a part of what had to be done; on its face it purports only to be a showing that the 10-day notice was duly posted, and is not contrary to or inconsistent with the finding of the court made from the proofs taken and examination had "that notice of the hearing has been given as required by the order of this court and by law, and that said notice is in all respects due, proper and sufficient." Moreover, the recital that the matter came on "regularly to be heard" must be presumed to be true, in the absence of anything inconsistent or to the contrary in the record. Estate of Espinosa, 179 Cal. 189, 175 P. 896; Estate of Schulmeyer, 171 Cal. 340, 153 P. 233. The finding of the court does no violence to the facts presented by the clerk's affidavit, for it is not contradictory of anything in the affidavit. Canadian, etc., Co. v. Clarita, etc., Co., 140 Cal. 672, 74 P. 301; County Bank v. Jack, 148 Cal. 437, 83 P. 705, 113 Am. St. Rep. 285. Where there is nothing in the judgment roll inconsistent with the findings by the court of due service, it must be presumed on appeal in support of the judgment that the finding was based upon a service made in pursuance of the statute. La Fetra v. Gleason, 101 Cal. 246, 35 P. 765. The affidavit in the judgment roll establishes that the 10-day notice was posted by the clerk as required by sections 1200 and 1000 of the Probate Code. That was a notice to "all persons interested in the estate of said deceased," and constituted what is commonly called a notice in rem. With such a notice admittedly duly given, it would seem that the further requirement that copies should be mailed, etc., and that citation should be served, etc., was "an extra protection provided by the statute." S. F. Protestant Orphan Asylum v. Superior Court, 116 Cal. 443, 453, 48 P. 379, 382. There is no showing by affidavit in the judgment roll that copies of the notice were mailed or that citation was served on any one or that anything else mentioned in sections 1200 and 1000 of the Probate Code was done; there is no affidavit showing that any such other proof was made, neither is there any affidavit showing that it was not made. Consequently as against such silence, it would seem that the recitals of the judgment finding that "said notice is in all respects due, proper and sufficient" must be accepted as true and that it must be held that the record sustains the jurisdiction of the lower court even on this direct attack by appeal, for the judgment and its recitals will be presumed to be correct upon appeal unless the contrary is made to appear. Catanich v. Hayes, 52 Cal. 338. Every intendment and presumption not contradicted by nor inconsistent with the record on appeal must be indulged in in favor of the judgment. Kovacevich v. Fischer Motor Body Co., 94 Cal. App. 405, 271 P. 351; Throop v. Weaver, 180 Cal. 335, 181 P. 55.

Prior to August 14, 1931, the requirement as to notice on petition for partial distribution was as follows: "Notice of the application must be given to the executor or administrator, personally, and to all persons interested in the estate, in the same manner that notice is required to be given of the settlement of the account of an executor or administrator." Section 1659, Code Civ. Proc.

Under the Probate Code, the requirement as to notice is set forth in sections 1000 and 1200; and section 1000 contains the following language: "The clerk shall set the petition for hearing by the court and give notice thereof for the period and in the manner required by section 1200 of this code, and to the executor or administrator by citation."

Section 1710 of the Code of Civil Procedure provided that: "When personal notice is required, and no mode of giving it is prescribed in this title, it must be given by citation." And in Spencer v. Houghton, 68 Cal. 82, 8 P. 679, that section was construed to mean that where actual service is directed to be made on the party personally and not by publication, it must be made by citation. The language of said section 1710 of the Code of Civil Procedure has been reincorporated in section 1206 of the Probate Code. Sections 1206 and 1207 of the Probate Code contain substantially all the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure that had to do with citations. The law is now and for many years has been that a citation "must be served in the same manner as a summons in a civil action," that is, as provided in section 411 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The sections of the Code of Civil Procedure that dealt with citations contained nothing concerning the proof of service of citation and how made, and the Probate Code contains nothing concerning such proof. In section 415 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is expressly provided how the proof of service of summons shall be made. Can it therefore be said that the proof of service of citation is restricted to the method set forth in section 415 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the service of summons? In the early days of California when in the probate of wills citations were directed to be issued to the heirs of the testator resident in the county, it appears that the probate court proceeded to hear the testimony in proof of the will, at the time appointed or at any time to which the hearing was continued, upon proof being made, by affidavit or otherwise to the satisfaction of the court, that notice had been given as required. Belknap's Probate, p. 39, § 17. Hence it would appear that in such matters parol testimony as to the service of citation and notice was admitted and considered competent under the law and that the rigid rule as in the case of summons that proof could be not otherwise than by affidavit, was not applied. Judge Temple, in dealing with the status of the citation in probate matters in California, says: "But I think the statute shows on its face that no provision in regard to summons applies to citations. Everything in regard to citations is provided for in title 11. Section 1707 states what it must contain; 1708 provides for its issuance; 1709, that it shall be served in the same manner as a summons. This would be unnecessary if the provisions as to the summons applied, and on that supposition no operation can be given this section. * * * As a rule, its functions are very unlike those of a summons. It is simply a notice which may be molded to suit the occasion, and not a process which a party may sue out or not. * * The office of the citation * * was not like that of a summons, to give the court jurisdiction. It was an extra protection provided by the statute. * * *" S. F. Protestant Orphan Asylum v. Superior Court, supra, at page 451 of 116 Cal., 48 P. 379.

It not appearing that any law prohibits the making of proof of mailing notices and of service of citations other than by affidavit, and no such law being called to the attention of the court, it would seem that the situation presented here under the judgment roll is in this particular much the same as that appearing in Estate of Twombley, 120 Cal. 350, 382, 52 P. 815, wherein the court, as against the contention that the judgment roll should show affirmatively that the notice of probate was served either by mail or personally, held that the statute did not require that fact to appear of record; the requirement being simply that the proof "must be made at the hearing." If as restricted to the matter of the mailing of the copies of the notice, etc., and the matter of the service of the citation, a like construction is to be given the words "proof of the giving of notice must be made at the hearing" (section 1200, Probate Code), the judgment roll would seem to sustain the decree in this particular.

[7-9] It is further contended that the petition is insufficient in its statement of facts to authorize either the distribution made or the dispensing with the bond. While the allegations are general we do not think that for that reason they are insufficient. We think that the allegations of the petition were sufficient under the demands of section 1001 of the Probate Code to invoke and warrant the action of the court. An intelligible statement of an existing substantial right, which the court has jurisdiction to enforce, is a sufficient allegation of all matter necessary to sustain a judgment. Estate of Murphy, 145 Cal. 464, 78 P. 960. Section 1001 of the Probate Code states that: "When the time for filing or presenting claims has expired, and all valid claims have been paid or are sufficiently secured by mortgage, and the court is satisfied that no injury can result to the estate, the court may dispense with the bond." Reciting "good cause appearing therefor," the court dispensed with the bond. We must assume in the absence of a bill of exceptions that the evidence measured up to the requirements of the statute and that the court was satisfied that no injury could result to the estate and that such constituted the "good cause" that was made to appear. Orders and decrees in probate proceedings need not recite the existence of facts or the performance of acts upon which the jurisdiction of the court or judge may depend. Section 1200, Probate Code.

The judgment is affirmed.

That court may have given instruction inapplicable to evidence held insufficient for reversal, absent showing of prejudice.

7. Criminal law ⊂⇒1172(6).

In murder trial, general instruction regarding impeachment by evidence affecting witness' character for truth and integrity, though inapplicable to evidence, held not prejudicial, where jury were instructed to consider question whether witness had lived with defendant as his wife solely in ascertaining witness' motive.

8. Homicide ⊂⇒254.

Evidence held insufficient to sustain conviction of second degree murder, but required modification to offense of manslaughter (Pen. Code, § 1181, subd. 6).

TAPPAAN, Justice pro tem.

[1] Appellant was convicted after a trial had before a jury of murder of the second degree, and appeals from the judgment as entered against him on the verdict and from the order denying him a new trial. Appellant also appeals from the order denying his motion for change of verdict from murder of the second degree to manslaughter. As to this attempted appeal from the order denying appellant's motion for modification of the verdict of murder of the second degree to one of manslaughter, it would appear that this is not an appealable order, as it was made before judgment (Pen. Code, § 1237), but the matter may properly be reviewed on the appeal from the judgment and the order denying appellant's motion for a new trial.

The facts and circumstances which culminated in the killing here involved, as disclosed by the record, are somewhat entangled, and the evidence produced at the trial, at times is sharply conflicting. Appellant shot and killed one Alex Usucke on Thanksgiving Day, 1931. The homicide occurred at the home of one Mrs. Eros, where both appellant and deceased lived. The deceased was shot at about 7 o'clock in the evening, after a day spent in a sordid celebration of the holiday. The participants in this so-called "party" were all Hungarian or made use of the Hungarian language. At about 8 o'clock in the morning of the day of the homicide, appellant, deceased, Steve Toth, and Julius Klemper gathered at the home of Mrs. Eros. Klemper had at one time lived at Mrs. Eros' house, but some little time before the events herein narrated had moved away, owing Mrs. Eros some room rent. At some time during the morning, deceased, Toth, and Klemper left the house and later returned with liquor, which was consumed by the persons at the house. Mrs. Eros then left the house and did not return until the late afternoon. At about 11 o'clock dinner was prepared and eaten. After the noonday meal, the four men engaged in a card game. Wine which appellant had made two or three weeks before was served. Toth and then appellant left the game. Appellant lay down upon a couch in the room where the game was being continued by deceased and Klemper. After a time, appellant jumped from the couch, turned out the light, and told Klemper to go home; that he did not pay any room rent there; that he did not belong there; and that he owed the landlady room rent. To this Klemper replied that he owed the landlady, but did not owe appellant anything. Klemper then said to deceased, "Let's go, Alex," whereupon appellant called him an opprobrious name. At this point deceased joined in the controversy and objected to the language used by appellant. Appellant and Klemper engaged in a scuffle, a knife being made use of by one of the combatants, and appellant receiving a cut upon his hand. At this point the evidence is conflicting, but, from the testimony of the witnesses other than Klemper, it appears that deceased, Toth, and Klemper left the house and proceeded some distance to the home of a friend where they had some wine before returning again to Mrs. Eros' house. During this same time appellant called the police, and was by them taken to a police station, where his hand was dressed by a police surgeon, and he then returned with a police officer to the Eros home. Mrs. Eros returned shortly before appellant and the officer arrived.

As to what occurred next, the evidence is in conflict. Klemper testified that the card game, hereinbefore referred to, took place, and that the deceased was shot by appellant as the culmination of the controversy that took place at that time; while appellant and Mrs. Eros testified that, after appellant and the police officer had returned to the Eros home, deceased and Klemper came into the house through the back door, and that, at this time, appellant was sitting in his room on the bed. Mrs. Eros testified that at this time

Klemper took a knife out of a drawer of the kitchen table and that deceased had his own knife, in his hand; that they said, "Your life is out, we go and get you"; that Klemper and deceased were in appellant's room fighting; that she heard Klemper say, while he had appellant by the throat, "I am out to get your life"; that then she heard the shot and saw deceased come out of the room and fall down, and Klemper run from the house. Appellant testified that he heard deceased say, "We do now finish Charlie"; that deceased then came into his room with a knife. Appellant does not deny the shooting, though at a later date he said it was accidental, and at another time he said, "Ya. Couldn't help it. He called me son-of-a-bitch 4 or 5 times." "He followed me and he called me son-of-a-bitch." After the shooting, appellant testified that he went to another house and tried to call the police. The police found appellant waiting in the front yard when they arrived shortly after the shooting, and appellant then gave them a number of unshot cartridges. There is some evidence that after the fatal shot appellant went outside the house and fired his gun a number of times in the air. There is also evidence that at a prior date Klemper and appellant had had words at a drinking bout held at the Eros home. It would seem that the theory of the prosecution was that appellant, while attempting to shoot Klemper, fired the shot that resulted in the death of deceased.

Appellant's specifications of error, some fifteen in number, refer in many instances to rulings made by the trial court in the giving and refusal to give certain instructions to the jury. In view of the decision reached by this court upon this appeal, it becomes unnecessary to review many of these alleged errors; the questions presented being now immaterial.

Appellant assigns as error the refusal of the court to give the following instruction: "As to verbal statements, or as they are sometimes called, extrajudicial statements, that is, statements made by the defendant out of court, you have a right to consider that there is danger of mistake and misapprehension of the witnesses; the misuse of the words; the failure of the party to express his own meaning; the infirmity of memory on the part of the witness attempting to relate all the conversation. It frequently happens also that the witness by unintentionally altering a few of the expressions used gives an effect to the statement completely at variance with what the party actually did say. The weight and effect, however, of this evidence is for you to determine."

[2] Appellant bases, in large part, his contention that he was prejudiced by the court's refusal to so instruct the jury, upon the fact that many of the persons involved in the transaction referred to spoke Hungarian as their mother tongue, and could converse but brokenly in the English language. From an examination of the record, it clearly appears that the witnesses, in testifying as to these statements of which appellant complains, gave their evidence in such a manner that the jury had before it not only the statements, but also the surrounding circumstances. In testifying as to the language used, the witnesses in most cases attempted to give words actually made use of rather than the proper English word. We find in the record, for example, "ya ya" used for "yes." The jury had the transaction placed before them, and it was their duty to consider this evidence with the same care as other competent evidence submitted to them. The subject-matter contained in the questioned instruction might have provided the basis for argument before the jury, but, under the circumstances presented in the instant case, would have withdrawn from the jury their right to consider this particular evidence in the same way as the other evidence produced at the trial. It should be noted that in the case at bar the statements were attributed to persons who had difficulty in "expression," and therefore should be differentiated from those cases in which cautionary instructions are sometimes given, where the statement is that of "a child of tender years." The court properly exercised its discretion in refusing to give the requested instruction.

[3] Appellant contends that another instruction requested by him should have been given. This instruction had to do with the jury's consideration of the testimony of the defendant. The court gave a general instruction pertaining to the credibility of witnesses, and in view of this it was not error on the part of the court to refuse to give the particular instruction so requested. People v. Miller, 112 Cal. App. 535, 538, 297 P. 40.

[4] The court was justified by the evidence introduced at the trial in giving the following instruction, and the statement of law therein contained was not open to criticism under the circumstances of the instant case (People v. Hecker, 109 Cal. 451, 462 et seq., 42 P. 307, 30 L. R. A. 403): "Whenever an assault is brought upon a person by his own procurement, or under an appearance of hostility which he himself creates, with a view of having his adversary act upon it, and he so acts and is killed, the plea of self-defense under such circumstances is unavailing."

Appellant attempted to impeach the witness Klemper by the introduction of his testimony given at the preliminary examination had in the cause. From an examination of the record it clearly appears that the testimony given at the preliminary hearing referred to a time other than that referred to in the answer made by the witness at the trial, and therefore was not impeaching, but immaterial as to the question presented.

[5] Appellant complains of the action of the court in the overruling of an objection interposed by him to a question asked of one of his witnesses upon cross-examination. This witness, Mrs. Eros, had just testified to the fact that appellant had lived in her home for thirteen years. She was then asked if she and appellant had not lived together as husband and wife. Over objection to this question, the witness answered, "No." This evidence was admitted for the sole purpose of showing motive, if any, on the part of the witness, and the jury at the time of the admission of the evidence were so instructed by the court. A witness is presumed to speak the truth, but this presumption may be repelled in a number of ways, among them by showing as to his motive. Code Civ. Proc. § 1847. Motive, being a condition of the human mind, is impossible of direct proof, but must be shown by condition, circumstance, act, or statement of the witness. If the witness had lived with appellant in the relationship of husband and wife, this circumstance would, without doubt, be one which the jury could rightly consider as a factor in arriving at the motive of the witness and the weight to be given to her testimony. There was no error committed by the court in the overruling of appellant's objection.

[6, 7] Appellant complains of a part of a general instruction given by the court on the credibility of witnesses: "A witness may be impeached * * * by evidence affecting his or her character for truth, honesty or integrity." The fact that the court may have given an instruction which had no application to the evidence, standing alone, will not justify the reversal of a judgment. In addition, it must appear that the appellant was in some way prejudiced by the instruction. Appellant contends that, when this instruction is considered in connection with the question asked of the witness Eros, whether she had lived with appellant as his wife, such prejudice is made to appear. With this contention we cannot agree. The jury were instructed by the court clearly and fully that the question and answer were to be considered by them for a limited purpose only—the ascertainment of motive. The question being properly asked and answered, the appellant cannot now complain. Appellant did not suffer prejudice within the rule.

Appellant's remaining specifications of error are directed to certain rulings of the court overruling objection interposed by appellant to certain questions asked witnesses upon cross-examination. From an examination of the record, it appears that appellant failed to make timely objection. People v. Gilman, 43 Cal. App. 451, 453, 185 P. 310. The evidence of itself was not of importance, and was not unfavorable to appellant. In the other instance cited by appellant, the matter was also unimportant, and the cross-examination was as to matters which could fairly be said to be implied from the testimony given in chief.

In People v. Tyren, 179 Cal. 575, at page 579, 178 P. 132, 134, it is said: "It was not error to permit the defendant to be cross-examined on this subject. Where a defendant testifies in his own behalf, he may be cross-examined 'as to all matters about which he was examined in chief.' Pen. Code, § 1323. 'The cross-examination may extend to the whole transaction, of which he gives a part' (People v. Teshara, 141 Cal. 633, 75 P. 338), and may be directed to the eliciting of any matter which may tend to overcome or qualify the effect of the testimony given by him on his direct examination."

The various specifications of error which we have discussed at length herein are, in most instances, of a highly technical character, and we cannot but agree with a statement contained in appellant's reply brief: "We do not claim that each of our Points are exceedingly weighty." In all fairness to appellant, it must be stated that this statement just above quoted was coupled with a statement to the effect that the verdict of murder of the second degree was "incomprehensible" under the evidence contained in the record here.

[8] Appellant contends that the evidence, taken as a whole, is insufficient to support the verdict of murder of the second degree. With this contention we are constrained to agree. We have examined the evidence in this case with minute care. Appellant was properly found guilty on competent evidence of a most serious offense, and the errors, if any, did not prejudicially contribute toward bringing about the finding that appellant killed the deceased. "No miscarriage of justice, therefore, resulted, except that, as a matter of law, the jury improperly fixed the degree of the crime and imposed the penalty therefor. That injustice may now be righted without subjecting the state and the defendant to the delay and expense of a new trial." People v. Kelley, 208 Cal. 387, 393, 281 P. 609, 611; Pen. Code, § 1181, subd. 6.

The facts of the case have already been stated, and further analysis of the evidence seems unnecessary. The record discloses that the homicide closed a long day of drinking and controversy had by appellant, the deceased, and the witnesses. It would appear that such days were not unusual in the home of Mrs. Eros, and that the actors in this tragedy had passed like days at her home at other times. The character, mentality, and surroundings of the persons who took part in the transaction but too clearly appear from the word picture presented in the record. The fact that appellant stood dumbly by, after the killing, waiting for the police officers to arrive, is strongly indicative of his mental condition. The following statement, found in the case of People v. Kelley, supra, at page 393, of 208

Cal., 281 P. 609, 611, applies with equal force to the case at bar: "Nor can we bring ourselves to believe that there was a willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing. * * * No express malice was shown, for there was not manifested a deliberate, or any, intention to unlawfully take the life of a fellow creature, and the circumstances attending the killing in this case, as proved, do not show an abandoned and malignant heart."

The appeal from the order denying appellant's motion for modification of the verdict, as heretofore noted, not being subject to review, is dismissed.

The judgment of the lower court of murder of the second degree is modified. The cause is remanded to the trial court, with directions to enter a judgment against the defendant finding him guilty of manslaughter, and to thereupon pronounce judgment upon him as prescribed by law.

WOOD v. ROACH et al.

Civ. 8544.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 1, 1932.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 1, 1932.

1. Courts ⇐198.

Originally, California probate courts were of limited and inferior jurisdiction.

2. Judgment ⇐475.

Orders and decrees of Superior Courts exercising probate jurisdiction are as conclusive against collateral attack as those in any other branch of their jurisdiction (Const. 1879, art. 6, § 5; St. 1858, p. 95).

3. Executors and administrators ⇐148.

Executor or administrator may negotiate sale of decedent's property without first procuring court order, but no title passes until confirmation (Code Civ. Proc. § 1556, and §§ 1536, 1552, 1554, as amended by St. 1919, pp. 1178, 1180, §§ 6, 10, 11).

4. Courts ⇐107.

Language of opinion should be confined to facts then before court.

5. Courts ⇐107.

Language of opinion, if plainly inconsistent with statute, cannot affect subsequent decisions.

6. Executors and administrators ⇐320.

Statutes held to manifest intention to establish complete new scheme respecting sales of decedents' property (St. 1919, p. 1177 et seq.).

7. Statutes ⇐167(1).

That statutes manifest intention to establish complete new scheme as regards subject-matter is equivalent to legislative declaration that whatever is embraced in new act shall prevail.

8. Statutes ⇐170.

Where statute is revised and some parts omitted with intention of covering entire subject, omitted parts are deemed annulled, and cannot be revived by construction.

9. Constitutional law ⇐93(1).

Legislature cannot, by amending law after decedent's death, authorize sale of decedent's property for new reasons or purposes, although it may prescribe different procedure.

10. Executors and administrators ⇐333.

Under statutes, neither allegation nor finding of statutory grounds for sale of decedent's property is necessary to jurisdiction (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1556, 1704, and §§ 1536, 1552, 1554, as amended by St. 1919, pp. 1178, 1180, §§ 6, 10, 11).

11. Executors and administrators ⇐375.

Statutory grounds for sale of decedent's property are necessary to support confirmation of sale, and court must ascertain their existence before acting (Code Civ. Proc. § 1556, and §§ 1536, 1552, 1554, as amended by St. 1919, pp. 1178, 1180, §§ 6, 10, 11).

12. Executors and administrators ⇐383.

Court's erroneous conclusion respecting existence of statutory grounds for sale of decedent's property constitutes error merely in exercise of jurisdiction, correctible on appeal (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 963, 1556, 1704, and §§ 1536, 1552, 1554, as amended by St. 1919, pp. 1178, 1180, §§ 6, 10, 11).

13. Executors and administrators ⇐333.

In proceedings to sell decedents' property, Superior Court exercises its general jurisdiction derived from Constitution (Const. 1879, art. 6, § 5).

14. Judgment ⇐496.

On collateral attack, same presumptions attach to Superior Court's decrees in probate matters as to judgments at law or in equity (Const. 1879, art. 6, § 5; St. 1858, p. 95).

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Warren V. Tryon, Judge.

Action by Mary Baldwin Wood, as executrix of the estate of William Sidney Wood, deceased, against Elizabeth Dihel Roach and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Luther Elkins, of San Francisco, and Chris B. Fox, of Oakland, for appellant.

William T. Paullin, and McKee, Tasheira & Wahrhaftig, all of Oakland, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

This action was brought to quiet the title to certain real property in Alameda county. The complaint alleged that William Sidney Wood died testate on January 30, 1908; that his will was admitted to probate in the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco, and that plaintiff and Baldwin Wood, now deceased, were duly appointed and qualified as executors thereof; that decedent first named was the owner and in possession of the property in suit, title to which upon his death vested in his heirs and devisees subject to administration, and that there has been no distribution thereof; that, pursuant to an order of the Superior Court in the matter of said estate made on March 20, 1922—which purported to confirm a sale of said property to E. J. Sittig—the said Baldwin Wood, in his own name and that of plaintiff, as executors executed a deed thereof to Sittig; that the order was based upon a return of sale and petition for confirmation; that the proceeding and sale were void for lack of jurisdiction, and the order obtained by means of extrinsic fraud.

Defendants and respondents Roach, Mercantile Securities Company and Mercantile Trust Company demurred generally and specifically to the complaint. The special grounds of demurrer were that several causes of action had been joined and not separately stated, that the complaint was ambiguous, uncertain, and unintelligible in certain respects, and that the causes of action alleged were barred by the provisions of subdivision 2 of section 336, and subdivisions 2 and 4 of section 338, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The demurrer was sustained with leave to amend, and, plaintiff having failed to do so, a judgment—from which she has appealed—was entered against her.

The ground of attack upon the proceeding for the sale of the property is that neither the petition for confirmation nor the order confirming the sale stated the jurisdictional facts, and that consequently the order and the deed based thereon were void.

[1] Originally the probate courts of California were of limited and inferior jurisdiction (Townsend v. Gordon, 19 Cal. 188; Pryor v. Downey, 50 Cal. 388, 19 Am. Rep. 656), and it was held that the power of the court over the sale of lands belonging to the estate of a decedent did not come from its general jurisdiction over the administration of estates but from the statute. Pryor v. Downey, supra; Richardson v. Butler, 82 Cal. 174, 23 P. 9, 16 Am. St. Rep. 101.

[2] By the Constitution of 1879 (article 6, § 5) Superior Courts were given jurisdiction of all matters of probate in like manner as of cases at law or in equity (Burris v. Kennedy, 108 Cal. 331, 41 P. 458, 459), and since 1858 the orders and decrees of Superior Courts in the exercise of their probate jurisdiction have been as conclusive against collateral attack as those in any other branch of their jurisdiction. Stats. 1858, p. 95; 15 Cal. Jur. Judgments, § 164, p. 92. According to the early cases, an application for the sale of land was a special, independent proceeding, and it was essential, to enable the court to act, that the application be made substantially as provided by statute. Pryor v. Downey, supra; Richardson v. Butler, supra. It was also held that the jurisdiction of the court rested upon the averments of the petition. Stuart v. Allen, 16 Cal. 473, 76 Am. Dec. 551; Haynes v. Meeks, 20 Cal. 288; Estate of Devincenzi, 119 Cal. 498, 51 P. 845. Under the statute, however, a failure to set forth the facts showing the sale to be necessary did not invalidate subsequent proceedings if the defect was supplied by proofs at the hearing, and the general facts showing such necessity were stated in the decree. Code Civ. Proc. § 1537; Stats. 1873–74, p. 370.

The Burris Case was an action to quiet title brought by an heir of James Kennedy, deceased, against defendants who claimed under a probate sale had in the matter of the decedent's estate. It was contended that neither the application nor the order of sale contained a statement of the jurisdictional facts, and that consequently the sale was void. It was concluded on appeal that facts showing a sale to be necessary were sufficiently alleged in the application; and, although the allegations were erroneous, the sale was not void for that reason. Further, that while an application to sell the real property of an estate was an independent proceeding, in that it was essential that the application be made substantially as provided by statute, nevertheless the court in entertaining the application and passing upon it was not acting as a special tribunal, but in the exercise of its general jurisdiction over the subject-matter, derived from the Constitution and not from the statute; and that the same presumption must attach to decrees in probate proceedings upon collateral attack as to judgments at common law or in equity, and that the sufficiency of the proceedings or petition must be decided by the same liberal rule which applies to the pleadings in an ordinary action upon such an attack. In the same connection, quoting from In re Burton, 93 Cal. 459, 29 P. 36, the court said: "The superior court, while sitting in matters of probate, is the same as it is while sitting in cases in equity, in cases at law, or in special proceedings; and, when it has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of a case falling within either of these classes, it has power to hear and determine, in the mode provided by law, all questions of law and fact, the determination of which is ancillary to a proper judgment."

Judge Van Fleet in his work, "The Law of Collateral Attack," section 275 (citing Culver v. Hardenbergh, 37 Minn. 225, 33 N. W. 792), says: "The administration of the estate of a decedent * * * is one indivisible judicial proceeding from the order appointing the administrator to that of his final discharge. The proceeding is one purely in rem, and all parties in interest—heirs, devisees, legatees, distributees and creditors—are necessarily in court at all times. Petitions to sell and mortgage land are simply motions in a pending cause, and in principle no want of form or substance ought to make the sale void. The adverse parties are given the opportunity to examine and object * * * to the entire proceeding on motion for confirmation of the sale, and the court is always open to their motions and petitions to compel the administrator to do his duty in the interim between the order to sell and the confirmation; and as the purchaser furnishes the money to pay their ancestor's debts equity and good conscience loudly demand an estoppel against their proceeding afterwards in a collateral action to recover the land thus sold."

[3] Previous to the amendment of 1919 (Stats. 1919, p. 1177), a sale of real property could only be had upon an order of court, to obtain which it was necessary to present a verified petition setting forth the facts enumerated in the statute, it being provided, however, that a failure to set forth such facts should not invalidate subsequent proceedings if the defect be supplied by proofs at the hearing and the facts stated in the decree. Code Civ. Proc. § 1537. The amendments of 1919 (St. 1919, p. 1177), which were in force when the proceeding in question commenced, repealed sections 1537, 1538, 1539, 1540, 1542, 1543, and 1544 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and provided that, when a sale of property was necessary to pay the allowance to the family or the debts outstanding against the decedent, or the debts, expenses, charges of administration or legacies, or when it was for the best interest of the estate or those interested therein, the executor or administrator might sell any of the real as well as personal property of the estate. Code Civ. Proc. § 1536; Stats. 1919, pp. 1178, 1179, § 6. It was also provided that notices of sale be given as prescribed therein, and that the executor or administrator after making any sale should make a return of his proceedings to the court, following which a hearing should be had upon notice. At such hearing the court was required to examine into the necessity for the sale or the advantage, benefit, and interest to the estate in having the sale made (Code Civ. Proc., § 1552; Stats. 1919, p. 1180, § 10), and confirm the sale if it appeared that there was reason therefor upon the grounds set forth in section 1536 of the Code of Civil Procedure, provided the sale was legally made and fairly conducted and the sum bid not disproportionate to the value and a sum above that specified in the statute could not be obtained (Code Civ. Proc. § 1554; Stats. 1919, p. 1180, § 11). These amendments contained no requirement that any of the reasons for making the sale mentioned in said section 1536 of the Code of Civil Procedure be stated in the return, nor was a finding that such reasons existed made necessary, the only finding required being that "before any order is entered confirming the sale, it must be proved to the satisfaction of the court that notice was given of the sale as prescribed, and the order of confirmation must show that such proof was made." Code Civ. Proc. § 1556. Since the above enactments, an executor or administrator can negotiate a sale without first procuring an order (Estate of Benvenuto, 183 Cal. 382, 191 P. 678), but no title passes until confirmation (Lass v. Eliassen, 94 Cal. App. 175, 270 P. 745).

In the present case the return of sale and petition for confirmation contained a description of the property, a statement of the notices given, and the expenses and terms of the sale, but no facts showing its necessity or the purpose or that it would be to the advantage or best interest of the estate or those interested therein, nor was there a finding on any of these matters in the order of confirmation. The order found, however, that notices of sale were given in accordance with the statute and a previous order of the court, and that due and legal notice of the hearing of the return had been given pursuant to an order appointing a day for that purpose; also that the amount bid was within 90 per cent. of the appraised value of the property to be sold.

No cases referring to the change in proceduce under the amendments, except the two last cited, have been called to our attention. Estate of Benvenuto, supra, was an appeal from an order confirming a sale of real estate by an administrator. It was held among other things that the amendment did not deprive the heirs of the right under section 1380 of the Code of Civil Procedure to a notice of the proceedings for a sale, and that section 1389 of the same Code remained applicable to the mode of sale under the amendment, since the sale "is ordered" when it is confirmed and the deed directed to be made. In discussing these matters, it was said that the questions whether a sale be necessary or for the best interest of the estate are under the new procedure to be decided upon the application for confirmation instead of upon the hearing of a petition for an order of sale as formerly. The sufficiency of the return of sale was not questioned on the appeal, but the court in passing said: "Such return must state the terms of the sale agreed on and the purposes for which the money is to be used."

[4] As shown above, the amendment directed a return of the proceedings and an inquiry by the court, but contained no provision requiring a statement as to how the money was to be used. The language found in the opinion must be construed with reference to the particular facts then before the court; and while in some instances a dictum is entitled to weight (Adams v. Seaman, 82 Cal. 636, 23 P. 53, 7 L. R. A. 224), in applying cases which have been decided, what may have been said in the opinion should be confined to the facts of the case under consideration and not extended to cases where the facts are essentially different (7 R. C. L. Courts, § 31, p. 1004), and it cannot affect subsequent decisions where it is plainly inconsistent with the statute (Cardenas v. Miller, 108 Cal. 250, 39 P. 783, 41 P. 472, 49 Am. St. Rep. 84).

[5-9] By the enactments of 1919 it was manifestly the intention to establish a new and complete scheme with respect to proceedings for the sale of the property of decedents' estates. This is equivalent to a legislative declaration that whatever is embraced in the new act shall prevail. State v. Conkling, 19 Cal. 501; Sponogle v. Curnow, 136 Cal. 580, 69 P. 255; In re Weymann, 92 Cal. App. 646, 268 P. 971. And, where a statute is revised and some parts omitted, and it was clearly the intention to cover the whole subject revised, the omitted parts cannot be revived by construction, but are to be considered as annulled. 36 Cyc. Stats., p. 1080; Carter v. Stevens, 208 Cal. 649, 284 P. 217; Stead v. Curtis (C. C. A.) 191 F. 529. This is, of course, subject to the rule that the Legislature cannot by amending a law after his death authorize the sale of the property of a decedent for new reasons or purposes, although it may prescribe a different mode of procedure. Estate of Benvenuto, supra.

[10-16] We are satisfied that by the repeal of the sections mentioned and the omission of the same provision from the new procedure it was the intention that no allegation or finding of the statutory grounds for a sale should be necessary to jurisdiction. Such grounds are, of course, necessary to support a confirmation of sale, and the court is required to ascertain their existence before acting; but an erroneous conclusion in that regard would constitute error in the exercise of jurisdiction, which might be corrected on appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 963) rather than a want of jurisdiction. As held in the Burris Case, supra, the Superior Court in such matters acts in the exercise of its general jurisdiction derived from the Constitution, and the same presumptions attach to its decrees in probate matters upon collateral attack as to judgments at law or in equity. Johnson v. Canty, 162 Cal. 391, 123 P. 263. In the present instance, the record is silent as to the existence of facts making a sale necessary or proper. In such cases, where the Superior Court is acting in the exercise of its general jurisdiction over the subject-matter, nothing will be intended to be out of its jurisdiction but what expressly appears to be so (Johnson v. Canty, supra; Estate of Schandoney, 133 Cal. 387, 65 P. 877); and it will be presumed on collateral attack that any facts consistent with the validity of its judgment existed (Estate of Twombley, 120 Cal. 350, 52 P. 815; Estate of Davis, 151 Cal. 318, 86 P. 183, 90 P. 711, 121 Am. St. Rep. 105; Estate of Ryan, 177 Cal. 598, 171 P. 297; Estate of Sankey, 199 Cal. 391, 249 P. 517; Fletcher v. Superior Ct., 79 Cal. App. 468, 205 P.

195). It has likewise been held that presumably, when property is sold by an executor or administrator, the sale was made for the purpose of paying costs and expenses of administration, or debts of the estate, or to pay specific cash legacies. Pendell v. Vesper, 85 Cal. App. 21, 258 P. 986. Moreover, at the time of the sale in question, section 1704 of the Code of Civil Procedure provided that orders and decrees in probate proceedings need not recite the existence of facts upon which the jurisdiction of the court depended, but that it should only be necessary that they contain the matters ordered or adjudged except as otherwise provided in title II, of which the repeal sections referred to above formed a part. Stats. 1921, p. 105.

[17] These rules apply to the present case; and we must therefore hold that the record on its face does not show the order in question to be void, and that therefore it was not subject to collateral attack. 15 Cal. Jur. Judgments, § 144, p. 59.

Plaintiff alleged that her signature was forged to the return of sale and to the deed mentioned. She also averred other acts of fraud and concealment on the part of her coexecutor, as the result of which she did not discover the facts alleged until after his death, on April 28, 1926. These allegations were relied on as grounds for her claim that the order of confirmation was procured by extrinsic fraud. It was not alleged, however, that the defendants were parties to the fraud, or purchased with knowledge thereof, and she now concedes that her pleading in this respect was insufficient. Doyle v. Hampton, 159 Cal. 729, 116 P. 39; Julien v. West, 96 Cal. App. 558, 274 P. 421. It is also conceded by respondents that the action was not barred by the statute of limitations (citing Murphy v. Crowley, 140 Cal. 141, 73 P. 820).

[18-20] Respondents urged another ground of demurrer; namely, that several causes of action were alleged and not separately stated. In addition to the allegations that the proceedings leading to the execution of a deed by her coexecutor were void, and upon which averments a decree quieting title were prayed, the complaint alleged the acts of fraud recited above. The latter were admittedly insufficient to constitute a cause of action, were not germane to the other allegations, and on motion might have been stricken from the pleading. Such defects are not grounds for demurrer, the proper remedy being a motion to strike. 21 Cal. Jur. Pleading, §§ 69, 173, pp. 111, 249; Henke v. Eureka Endowment Ass'n, 100 Cal. 429, 34 P. 1089. It is well settled that a complaint which seeks to quiet title, and incidentally to have the instrument under which defendant derived title declared void, states but one cause of action (Parsons v. Weis, 144 Cal. 410, 77 P. 1007); and, while the right to recover damages for the value of the use and occupation in such action has been questioned (51 Cor. Jur. Quieting Title, §§ 263, 264, pp. 274, 275; Polack v. Gurnee, 66 Cal. 266, 5 P. 229, 610), if the same be recoverable, the facts upon which the claim is based need not be stated as a separate cause of action (Keele v. Clouser, 92 Cal. App. 526, 268 P. 682).

There appear to be no grounds for respondents' special demurrer, but, for the reasons stated, their general demurrer was properly sustained, and the judgment must accordingly be affirmed.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeals from Superior Court, Humboldt County; T. H. Selvage, Judge.

Actions by Belle Pate and another and by Frank Pate against the Pickwick Stages System, J. Lima, and another. The actions were consolidated by stipulation of counsel. From adverse judgments, the named defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

B. P. Gibbs, of Los Angeles, and Barry J. Colding and Theodore Hale, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Cleveland R. Wright, of San Francisco, and Puter & Quinn, of Eureka, for respondents.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem., delivered the opinion of the court.

These were actions for damages for personal injuries suffered by plaintiffs through the alleged negligence of defendants. They were consolidated by stipulation of counsel. The jury found for the plaintiff Belle Pate in the sum of $5,000 and for Frank Pate in the sum of $1,000.

Judgments were thereupon rendered for said plaintiffs for said respective sums and from those judgments defendants appeal.

The facts are substantially as follows: Plaintiffs, in a Dodge coupé, were traveling north on the state highway, called the Redwood highway, and one W. S. Chisholm with two passengers was traveling south in a Ford coupé on said highway. The two cars collided at a point on said highway where the road was practically straight for a distance of 450 feet, the place of collision being about 150 feet north of the northerly end of said straight piece of road. This collision occurred at 7:30 p. m. on October 28, 1928. At the time of the collision it was dark and a misty rain was falling. According to the evidence produced by respondents, this collision was a slight one and inflicted no injury upon the occupants of the two automobiles. As a result of this collision the two cars were placed at an angle across said highway and both of them were stopped. Shortly after they had stopped they were both struck by a stage operated by the Pickwick Stages System and driven by its agent, J. Lima, and as a result thereof respondents' car was thrown from the road and landed about 25 feet down on a steep incline and both of the respondents were injured. There is a serious conflict between appellants and respondents as to the distance the stage was from the point where the Dodge and Ford automobiles had their collision. Lima, the driver of the stage, testified that he was 30 or 35 feet from the place where the collision between the Dodge and Ford cars occurred; that he was traveling about 30 miles per hour; that, when he saw the collision between these two cars, he started to apply his brakes; and that the brakes were set when the stage was 15 or 20 feet from them.

On the other hand, Chisholm and Meakin, passengers in the Ford car, testified that immediately after the collision between the Dodge and Ford cars, and after they had stopped, they saw the stage coming from the south, around the bend or curve at the southerly end of the straight piece of road. Chisholm placed this distance at 300 feet and Meakin at 150 to 175 feet. Lima telephoned a report of the accident the night it occurred to the superintendent of the Pickwick Stages System, and this report stated that the stage was 75 feet from the point where the Dodge and Ford cars collided at the time of said collision. Chisholm also testified that the stage was traveling fast as it came around the bend of the road, its speed being 40 or 45 miles per hour.

There was also evidence on the part of respondents that some time elapsed after the Dodge and Ford cars stopped before they were struck by the stage. Chisholm testified that he turned off the ignition and started to open the door of the Ford car before the stage struck the Ford, and Pate testified that he turned up his window and put his head out and called out to know what was happening before the stage struck his car. There was nothing to prevent the driver of the stage from seeing the position of the Dodge and Ford cars as the stage came around the southerly bend of the highway, and common prudence would have dictated the application of the brakes of the stage as soon as the position of the Dodge and Ford cars standing on the highway was seen or should have been seen by the driver of the stage.

[1, 2] If the driver of the stage did see the Dodge and Ford cars standing on the highway when he came in view of them, he was guilty of negligence in not then applying his brakes, and if at that point he did not see them standing in the highway, with no obstacle intervening obstructing his view, he was also guilty of negligence. We are of the opinion that there is substantial evidence supporting the verdict of the jury that the driver of the stage was negligent and that his negligence was the proximate cause of the injuries suffered by respondents. Such being the case, the decision of the jury is binding on this court. Gornstein v. Priver, 64 Cal. App. 249, 221 P. 396; Putnam v. Pickwick Stages, 98 Cal. App. 268, 276 P. 1055.

[3, 4] Appellants contend that the court committed reversible error in permitting respondents, over the objection of appellants, to ask the jurors the following question: "Are any of you interested as stockholders or otherwise in the California Highway Indemnity Exchange?" It is contended that the purpose of this question was to inform the prospective jurors that the appellants were insured. While evidence that a defendant in an action for damages is insured against loss is not admissible (Roche v. Llewellyn Iron Works Co., 140 Cal. 563, 74 P. 147), and it is improper for counsel to endeavor to get the fact before the jury by questions designed solely for that purpose, nevertheless it is proper for counsel to ask, in good faith, such questions as may be necessary to ascertain whether prospective jurors are free from bias or prejudice that might affect their verdict (Girard v. Irvine, 97 Cal. App. 377, 275 P. 840; Reneau v. Hirsch, 88 Cal. App. 1, 8, 262 P. 1100; Arnold v. California Portland Cement Co., 41 Cal. App. 420, 183 P. 171).

In Hasty v. Trevillian, 102 Cal. App. 405, 283 P. 148, 149, the court, after holding that asking prospective jurors whether or not they owned stock or bonds in any insurance company engaged in writing indemnity insurance, stated that such question standing alone was not error, and said: "The defendants argue that, if the verdict is excessive or the case made by the plaintiff is weak, such questions constitute prejudicial error. An examination of the record will disclose that the instant case cannot be said to fall within the rule last stated. As we have shown below, the verdict was not excessive; and the plaintiff introduced evidence tending to show that at the time of the impact the defendant driver was driving on her left-hand side of the street at a speed of 45 miles per hour. If the jury believed that evidence, then it cannot be said the case of the plaintiff was weak."

So, in the instant case, if the jury believed the evidence on the part of respondents that the driver of the stage saw or should have seen the Dodge and Ford cars standing on the highway when he was from 150 feet to 300 feet from them, and by the exercise of ordinary diligence could have stopped the stage in time to have avoided a collision with them, it cannot be said that respondents' case was weak.

[5] The next contention of appellants is that the damages are excessive.

Frank Pate testified that as a result of the impact of the stage with his car he suffered a broken jaw and a sprained wrist, the skin being torn loose almost all around it; that he and his wife were taken to a hotel in the town of Scotia, and there secured a physician, who after examination of his injuries took him to a hospital and had an X-ray made; that for a period of three weeks he could not open his mouth and for six weeks after the accident could not chew; that he suffered a great deal of pain; and that by reason of the injury to his wrist it is weakened.

[6] Belle Pate testified that her shoulder, arm, and neck were seriously injured and caused her great pain; that the muscles were torn loose; that for a long period, by reason of the pain, she could not sleep at night; that as a result of said injury she has to a large extent lost the use of her left arm and hand; that she cannot raise or put her hand behind her; that she is hampered in doing her housework; that she cannot do her ironing or washing or similar work; that she went to San Francisco and had treatment from a physician there, but that the pain and disability continued to exist.

Dr. John N. Chain made an examination of both respondents on December 6, 1930. His examination of Frank Pate showed that the wrist had not recovered from the injury, the grip of his hand had diminished 25 per cent. and was tender under pressure. He found a permanent disfigurement of the face and that the wrist would be permanently disabled.

From his examination of Belle Pate he found that the muscles of the left shoulder had been torn loose; that her left arm was disabled so that she could not raise it up and any attempt to do so caused her pain; that this disability was permanent.

[7] It is the well-settled law that, upon appeal, the decision of the trial court and jury, upon the amount of the damages, cannot be set aside unless the verdict is so plainly and outrageously excessive as to suggest, at first blush, passion or prejudice or corruption on the part of the jury. Lahti v. McMenamin, 204 Cal. 415, 268 P. 644; Hale v. San Bernardino, etc., Co., 156 Cal. 713, 106 P. 83. We find nothing in the record in these cases that indicates that the jury were influenced in rendering the verdicts by passion or prejudice or corruption.

The judgments are affirmed.

2. False imprisonment ⇐8.

Failure to take person arrested without warrant for grand larceny by police officer before magistrate for about 32 hours after arrest held false imprisonment (Pen. Code, §§ 145, 849).

Facts disclosed that police officer arrested prisoner without warrant for grand larceny between hours of 7:30 and 9 o'clock a. m., that prisoner was taken to police station and booked for grand larceny, and that prisoner was left in jail until about 2 o'clock p. m. on the next day, when he was arraigned before a magistrate and acquitted.

Action by Thomas E. Williams against the Zelzah Warehouse Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant G. A. Gray appeals.

Affirmed.

Thomas C. Ridgway, R. F. Bailey, Erwin P. Werner, and J. V. Lambert, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl D. Killion, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem., delivered the opinion of the court.

This action was brought by plaintiff against defendants for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution. The complaint contains two counts, the first count being for false imprisonment, and the second count being for malicious prosecution. The second count was dismissed by plaintiff, and a trial was had on the first count. Judgment was rendered in favor of defendants Zelzah Warehouse Company and Fred Cooper and against defendant G. A. Gray for damages in the sum of $100, and from this judgment the said Gray has appealed.

On the 27th day of October, 1924, appellant was a police officer in the city of Los Angeles, and on that day between the hours of 7:30 o'clock a. m. and 9 o'clock a. m. he arrested respondent, without a warrant authorizing him so to do. After making said arrest, appellant took respondent to the Van Nuys police station in said city, and had him imprisoned. He did nothing further until shortly before noon of the next day, when he went to the office of the district attorney and had a complaint filed charging respondent with a misdemeanor.

According to the evidence, appellant was informed by defendant Cooper, who was the manager of the Zelzah Warehouse Company, that the warehouse of said company, located in the city of Los Angeles, had been entered by a burglar and several sacks of grain were stolen therefrom; that upon investigation appellant found a trail of grain leading from the said warehouse to the vicinity of a residence where respondent was boarding, and, upon examining said premises, found grain sacks and grain corresponding to that taken from the warehouse.

It appears that the residence, to the vicinity of which the trail of grain led, was owned by a Mrs. Roe, and that respondent and two other men were boarding with her. Respondent was arraigned upon said charge at 2 o'clock p. m. on the 28th day of October, 1924, and thereafter was tried and acquitted.

The court found that, after he had arrested respondent, appellant took him to the Van Nuys police station in the city of Los Angeles, and there booked him for a felony, to wit, grand larceny, and that appellant was wrongfully and unlawfully imprisoned and confined therein for a period of about 32 hours without a legal or any warrant for respondent's arrest, or any legal process whatever.

Appellant contends that, when he booked respondent at the said police station, his liability for the confinement thereupon ceased. He bases this contention upon the rules and regulations of the police department of the city of Los Angeles, but no rules or regulations of the said city were produced in evidence, and none are contained in the record.

In the case of Korkman v. Hanlon Drydock, etc., Co., 53 Cal. App. 147, 199 P. 880, 884, commenting on the case of Gisske v. Sanders, 9 Cal. App. 13, 98 P. 43, the court said: "The court held that the arrest of the plaintiff was justified; also, that plaintiff consented thereto, and voluntarily accompanied the arresting officer to the station, where the sergeant made an independent investigation, and his incarceration was at the instance of the sergeant." It is said in that case: "The rule as to the responsibility of the arresting officer is otherwise where he has authority to and does direct the confinement of the prisoner, or where confinement is the direct result of the arrest."

Appellant testified that he took respondent to the Van Nuys police station after his arrest and left him there in jail, and that the next day he and defendant Cooper called at the office of the city prosecutor to get a complaint against respondent, which was secured about 11 o'clock a. m. of the 28th day of October, 1924. Section 849 of the Penal Code provides that: "When an arrest is made without a warrant by a peace-officer or private person, the person arrested must, without unnecessary delay, be taken before the nearest or most accessible magistrate in the county in which the arrest is made, and an information, stating the charge against the person, must be laid before such magistrate." Section 145 of the same Code is as follows: "Every public officer or other person, having arrested any person on a criminal charge, who willfully delays to take such person before a magistrate having jurisdiction, to take his examination, is guilty of a misdemeanor."

[1] In the case of Vernon v. Plumas Lumber Co., 71 Cal. App. 112, 234 P. 869, 872, the court said: "The rule is well established that a prisoner is entitled to a hearing within a reasonable time after his arrest, and that a delay for an unreasonable time in bringing him before the magistrate for examination constitutes false imprisonment"—citing authorities. The duty of an officer to bring the prisoner, arrested without warrant, before a magistrate, that proceedings for a trial may be instituted, and that he may have an opportunity to give bail or otherwise procure his release, is even more imperative than if a warrant had been issued before arrest. 11 R. C. L. 801.

There is no evidence that any efforts were made by appellant to comply with the requirements of said section 849 of the Penal Code, nor was there any evidence tending to justify this delay. It appears from the evidence that magistrates having jurisdiction of the offense for which respondent was imprisoned were easily accessible.

It has been held that a delay of from 1½ to 4 hours in failing to take a prisoner before the magistrate, arrested by an officer without a warrant, constitutes false imprisonment. Vernon v. Plumas Lumber Co., supra; Gomez v. Scanlan, 155 Cal. 528, 102 P. 12; Keefe v. Hart et al., 213 Mass. 476, 100 N. E. 558, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 716.

[2] In the instant case respondent was imprisoned for more than 30 hours prior to any charge being preferred against him, with no opportunity of being released on bail or otherwise procuring his release. This, according to the authorities, was manifestly an unnecessary delay. Nor was there any evidence offered by appellant tending to justify this delay. Respondent was confined in jail for an unreasonable length of time as the result of his arrest by appellant. The arrest was made without a warrant, and appellant failed to take respondent before a magistrate for upwards of 30 hours after the arrest had been made. This was a plain violation of law, and constitutes false imprisonment.

The judgment is affirmed.

3. Appeal and error ⇐422.

Erroneous date of order denying motion to vacate order appointing receivers in notice of appeal held no ground for dismissing appeal; order appealed from being sufficiently described therein (Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 2, and § 953a).

WASTE, C. J.

Motion to dismiss appeal or to affirm order appealed from.

Plaintiff instituted this action to recover possession of certain real property. The complaint, among other things, alleged that the defendant had violated the terms of a certain deed of trust in a manner warranting the requested relief. In accordance with the prayer of the complaint, the trial court on July 24, 1931, made its ex parte order appointing receivers to take possession of and care for the property pending the trial of the cause. Thereafter, and on August 12, 1931, the trial court overruled defendant's demurrer to the complaint, and denied his motion to vacate the order appointing receivers. On August 22, 1931, the defendant filed a notice of appeal, which notice reads as follows: "Notice is hereby given that the defendant herein does hereby appeal to the Supreme Court of the State of California from that certain order and decision and the whole thereof made and entered in the above entitled action on or about the 12th day of August, 1931, wherein and whereby Charles F. Allison and A. J. Showalter were appointed by said court as receivers and were ordered to take possession of the real property mentioned and described in said order."

Inspection of the transcript discloses that the order appointing receivers was not entered August 12, 1931, the date specified in the notice of appeal. That appears to be the date of entry of the order denying appellant's motion to vacate the order appointing receivers. Relying upon this apparent discrepancy in the notice of appeal, and contending that the order refusing to vacate is a nonappealable order, respondent moves to dismiss.

[1, 2] Notices of appeal are not strictly construed, and an appeal will not be dismissed because of a misdescription of the judgment or order to which it relates unless it appears that the respondent has been misled by such misdescription. Estate of Smead (Cal. Sup.) 10 P.(2d) 462; Harrelson v. Miller & Lux, 182 Cal. 408, 414, 188 P. 800.

[3] The present notice of appeal, while erroneously referring to the date of the order denying the motion to vacate, specifically declares that the appeal is from the order "wherein and whereby Charles F. Allison and A. J. Showalter were appointed by said court as receivers and were ordered to take possession of the real property mentioned and described in said order." A more definite description of the order appealed from could not be given. Any misdescription as to the date thereof could not have misled respondent, and should not serve to work a dismissal of the appeal. Wilson v. Union Iron Works, 167 Cal. 539, 541, 140 P. 250; 2 Cal. Jur. 318, § 110.

A perusal of the appellant's opening brief, filed herein prior to the noticing of the present motion, confirms our conclusion that the appeal is from the order appointing receivers, which order is made appealable by subdivision 2 of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The notice of appeal was filed well within the time specified in section 939 of the same code.

The clerk's transcript contains everything essential to a proper consideration and determination of the propriety of the order appointing receivers. Anything therein referring to the order refusing to vacate may, for the purposes of this appeal, be disregarded as surplusage.

[4] Respondent next urges that the appeal should be dismissed because the notice for preparation of transcript was not filed within the ten-day period prescribed in section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure. Assuming such notice to be essential to the preparation and certification of a clerk's transcript, as distinguished from a reporter's transcript (in this connection see Miller v. Price, 203 Cal. 772, 775, 265 P. 931, and Pioneer Truck Co. v. Hawley, 39 Cal. App. 481, 482–483, 179 P. 447), it has repeatedly been held that none of the proceedings prescribed in sections 953a, 953b, and 953c, is jurisdictional to an appeal already taken. Smith v. Jaccard, 20 Cal. App. 280, 287, 288, 128 P. 1023, 1026; Lynch v. Coe, 203 Cal. 422, 423, 264 P. 747; Tasker v. Warmer, 202 Cal. 445, 449, 261 P. 474.

As already indicated, the order appointing receivers was made ex parte, and recites on its face that it was made on the basis of the allegations of the complaint. The order may therefore be reviewed on the duly certified clerk's transcript now before us.

[5] Technical objections are not favored, and this court, whenever possible, seeks to review a cause on its merits. Lynch v. Coe, supra.

For the foregoing reasons, the motion to dismiss, and the motion to affirm are, and each is, hereby denied.

TYLER, Justice pro tem.

Action to recover the sum of $87,550 upon twelve promissory notes alleged to have been executed by defendant to plaintiffs. Plaintiff National City Finance Company alleges itself to be a common-law trust, organized under a declaration of trust dated the 14th day of June, 1924, with E. L. Junod, John L. Junod, and Myron J. Sophy as its trustees, and doing business under the name of National City Finance Company. Defendant, answering the complaint, alleged payment. As a separate defense, he further alleged that at the time of the execution of the notes he delivered to plaintiffs 1,700 shares of the preferred stock and 850 shares of the common stock of the Vanderbilt Newspapers, Inc., as collateral security for the payment of the notes sued upon. He then alleged that he had consented to have the said collateral stock sold, and plaintiffs did sell the same and received a sum therefor in excess of the face value of the notes. In addition thereto, he alleged there was a total failure of consideration for the execution of the notes. Thereafter John E. Frymier and Charles F. Keefe filed complaints in intervention, alleging themselves to be the owners by assignment of various of the notes set up in the complaint. Defendant filed an answer thereto, alleging lack of title in the interveners, and in addition thereto he filed a cross-complaint in which he asked for an accounting of the sums received by plaintiffs from the sale of the stock held by them as collateral. After trial, judgment went in favor of plaintiffs and interveners. Defendant moved for, and was granted, a new trial. Thereafter defendant applied for and was granted permission to file an amended answer to the complaint, and to the complaints in intervention. Under his amended pleadings he charged, among other things, that plaintiffs, upon receiving the stock deposited with them as security for the payment of the notes, had immediately sold the same for a sum in excess of the amount of the notes, contrary to their agreement; he also alleged that the notes were executed without consideration. As an additional, separate, and distinct defense he alleged that they were secured by fraudulent representations in the following manner: That plaintiff E. L. Junod, as the agent and trustee of plaintiff company, represented to him that such company was connected with the National City Bank of New York, and that the two organizations were identical in ownership and management; that, relying upon these statements, he was induced to execute the notes. He further alleged that plaintiffs had no legal capacity to sue or maintain the action, for the reason that the name "National City Finance Company" was a fictitious name, and the plaintiffs E. L. Junod, John L. Junod, and Myron J. Sophy, named as trustees of the company, had not complied with the provisions of sections 2466 and 2468 of the Civil Code pertaining to the filing and publication of a certificate of doing business under a fictitious name. Under his amended answer to the complaints in intervention, he denied that interveners held title to any of the notes, and he further alleged that interveners took with knowledge of the facts surrounding the execution thereof.

Trial was had, and it appeared in evidence that, in the year the plaintiff trust was organized, the Vanderbilt Newspapers, Inc., was engaged in the business of publishing a newspaper in Los Angeles, known as the Illustrated Daily News, and was offering its stock for sale to the public at $100 a unit, under a permit issued by the corporation commissioner, providing that it might sell its stock at the price stated, and might accept in payment thereof 50 per cent. in cash and the balance in notes of the subscriber. One Harvey was the executive head of the newspaper company which had engaged the services of James O. Allen, Inc., as its fiscal agent in selling its stock to the public. This agency had in its employ a salesman named Simpson. Some time prior to the execution of the notes is question, Harvey and Simpson had induced the defendant W. O. Lewis, an elderly and wealthy man, to subscribe for $30,000 worth of the stock. This transaction is not here involved. Shortly thereafter Simpson again approached defendant and induced him to subscribe for an additional $30,000 worth of stock. In payment thereof he executed three several promissory notes, each of which was in the sum of $5,150, payable to plaintiffs, and these notes were thereupon delivered by defendant to plaintiffs, together with the $30,000 worth of stock in the newspapers as security for the loan made by plaintiffs. Plaintiffs then paid to Vanderbilt Newspapers, Inc., the sum of $15,000, which the newspaper company credited to defendant on his purchase. Shortly thereafter defendant was again approached and induced to subscribe for a further $40,000 worth of stock. To make payment thereon he executed to plaintiffs four promissory notes each in the sum of $5,150. Plaintiffs thereupon paid to the Vanderbilt publication, on behalf of defendant, the sum of $20,000, which was credited to defendant on this subscription. Again, and for the fourth time, defendant was induced to subscribe for additional units at the price of $100,000. To make payment of this subscription he delivered five notes to plaintiffs, each in the sum of $10,300. Thereupon plaintiffs paid to the newspaper company the sum of $40,000 in cash, and defendant was credited with $50,000 by the newspaper on this subscription, plaintiffs receiving the difference of $10,000 as a commission from the newspaper company for making the sale of the stock.

Under all of these transactions, defendant deposited the stock he had received on account of his various subscriptions with plaintiffs as security for the loans. Thus there was a total of $170,000 worth of stock pledged as security for $87,550 worth of notes. As stated, in each of the transactions, plaintiffs loaned defendant one-half of the cost of the stock; the excess amount being for interest for six months in advance, at 6 per cent. Thereafter defendant failed to pay further interest on his notes, and this action was brought to obtain recovery upon the various notes.

It further appeared in evidence that plaintiffs had made false representations, through Junod, to defendant concerning their connection with the National City Bank of New York. It also appeared that, while the plaintiffs were authorized to sell the stock, Junod had assured defendant that they would not exercise this right unless the stock depreciated in value. Other evidence shows that, notwithstanding this agreement, Junod fraudulently sold the stock immediately upon receiving it, for a sum less than its cost price, but in an amount in excess of what had been advanced thereon, and out of the sums so received the advances or so-called loans had been made, and the difference retained by Junod. It likewise appeared that the interveners had placed valuable stock with Junod as security for loans made to them, and that their security had been immediately disposed of and a "loan" made to them out of the proceeds of such sale. There was also evidence to the effect that, when Junod demanded additional interest on the notes, which had been fully paid through the fraudulent acts of Junod, defendant had offered to pay him the full amount of his notes, at the same time demanding his stock. Junod did not possess it, he having disposed of the same in the manner above indicated, and he could not deliver it. Defendant thereupon accused Junod and Harvey of having defrauded him and of having loaned him his own money which they had received from the sale of his stock at a depreciated price.

A further discussion of the evidence would answer no useful purpose. The trial court found, among other things, that the notes in question were procured through fraud and misrepresentation; that defendant had relied upon such misrepresentations, and had been deceived in the execution thereof, and further that, at the time of the making of the notes, plaintiffs did not intend to return the stock. The court further concluded that National City Finance Company, E. L. Junod, John L. Junod, and Myron J. Sophy had no legal capacity to maintain the suit, having failed to comply with the provisions of sections 2466 and 2468 of the Civil Code requiring the filing of a certificate when doing business under a fictitious name. It also found defendant not to be entitled to an accounting. Judgment followed in favor of defendant and against plaintiffs and interveners.

[1] The appeals are by plaintiffs and interveners from the judgment. Several grounds are urged for a reversal. It is claimed that the trial court was influenced in rendering the judgment it did by the fact that Junod, as agent of the plaintiffs, had been found guilty and sentenced to the penitentiary at Folsom for his fraudulent transactions in managing the affairs of the National City Finance Company, and because of the further fact that the transaction as an entirety seems to be tainted by fraud. Whatever effect, if any, the conviction of Junod had on the mind of the court in reaching its conclusion we do not know, but certain it is, considering the evidence and all the surrounding circumstances, together with the reasonable and legitimate inferences to be drawn therefrom, that Junod's acts were but mere tricks and devices used by him as a means of fraudulently obtaining possession of securities for the purpose and with the intent of feloniously appropriating the same to his own use. The evidence speaks for itself, and fully supports the finding of fraud.

[2-4] Plaintiffs further claim that the trial court erred in granting defendant a new trial after the first trial of the action. The matter is not before us. The action was tried by the court sitting without a jury. Under such circumstances no appeal lies from the order, and appellants have noticed none. Moreover, such an order is not subject to review on an appeal from the judgment rendered on the second trial. Furlow Pressed Brick Co. v. Balboa L. & W. Co., 186 Cal. 754, 200 P. 625. Nor did the court err, as claimed, in granting defendant's motion to file his last amended answer. Such a motion is addressed to the sound discretion of the court in furtherance of justice. Trial was had eight months after the amended answer was filed, and the record shows that plaintiffs were not prejudiced or injured by the granting of the motion.

[5] A further discussion of the case is unnecessary. Interveners herein acquired title to the various notes recited in their complaints after maturity. They therefore stand in no better position than plaintiffs, and the judgment that they take nothing as against defendant was proper. Defendant at the trial claimed that the deposit by him of his stock with plaintiffs constituted a pledge, and that, the stock having been sold, he was entitled to an accounting. The trial court denied him this relief. Upon what ground it does not appear. However, respondent waives this point, considering the fact that the National City Finance Company is bankrupt and a recovery against it is hopeless. Considering the conclusion we have reached, it is unnecessary to consider or discuss whether or not the action should have been abated, for the reason that plaintiff National City Finance Company was doing business under a fictitious name, for which reason it should have filed the certificate required by section 2466 of the Civil Code.

The judgment is affirmed.

MURRAY v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

S. F. 14667.

Supreme Court of California.

Sept. 16, 1932.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 13, 1932.

1. Master and servant ⇐367.

Aviator, injured while delivering plane for purchaser over route he chose, but under purchaser's directions as to all other matters, and paid traveling expenses, held purchaser's "employee," not "independent contractor" (St. 1917, p. 835, § 8 (b).

St. 1917, p. 835, § 8 (b), provides that any person rendering service for another, other than as an independent contractor, or as expressly excluded herein, is presumed to be an employee within the meaning of the act, and defines the term "independent contractor" as any person who renders service, other than manual labor, for a specified recompense for a specified result, under the control of his principal as to the result of his work only and not as to the means by which such result is accomplished.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Employé" and "Independent Contractor," see Words and Phrases.]

2. Master and servant ⇐403.

Purchaser had burden of proving that aviator delivering plane for him for agreed compensation was independent contractor and not employee (St. 1917, p. 835, § 8 (b).

3. Master and servant ⇐417(7).

It was Industrial Commission's province to weigh evidence, and, if conflicting, commission's determination was final.

4. Master and servant ⇐367.

It is principal's right to exercise control and not exercise of that right which determines whether person performing service is employee or independent contractor (St. 1917, p. 835, § 8 (b).

5. Master and servant ⇐405(2).

Evidence showed that employment of aviator to deliver plane was not casual, but within purchaser's business.

Evidence disclosed that purchaser owned at least one plane before he purchased the one the aviator was employed to deliver; that purchaser held a dealership for the sale of planes from the seller, which was a contract which allowed him a discount or commission on planes purchased by him; that purchaser intended to sell the plane; that he authorized the aviator to sell it if he could find a buyer on the trip; and fact that he had not actually sold a plane did not render aviator's service without scope of purchaser's business.

6. Master and servant ⇐405(4).

Evidence sustained finding that aviator employee did not knowingly depart from course of employment when he accepted plane from seller other than one employer purchased.

A. I. Townsend, of San Francisco, and McIntyre Faries, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CURTIS, J.

Action to annul an award of the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of Carl R. Long and against the petitioner, Hamilton Murray.

Petitioner resides at Ross, Marin county, in this state. Some time prior to June 3, 1931, he purchased an airplane from the Curtiss-Wright Airplane Company, at its factory situated at Robertson, Mo. He desired some one "to fly" the machine from the plant of the company in Missouri to his home in California, and so informed the company. The company recommended Long, and thereafter Long and Murray arranged through correspondence that Long should fly the plane out to California for his actual expenses incurred in making the trip, which expenses were estimated to be $5 per day. Petitioner sent a certified check for $85, which was delivered to Long as expense money for the trip. On June 4, 1931, the Curtiss-Wright Company delivered to Long a plane for Murray, and Long began his trip therein to California. After his arrival in this state, and while he was near Los Alamos on his way to petitioner's home, he met with an accident in which the plane was wrecked and he was seriously injured. He made application to the Industrial Accident Commission for compensation, and, after a hearing thereon, the commission made an award for compensation in Long's favor and against Murray. The latter, after a motion for a rehearing was made and denied by the commission, brought this proceeding to review and annul said award.

In support of his petition Murray contends that the commission exceeded its jurisdiction in rendering said award in three particulars: (1) That Long was an independent contractor in his undertaking to bring the plane from Missouri to California; (2) that Long's employment was casual and not in the trade, business, or profession or occupation of Murray; (3) that Long stepped out of the course of his employment when he accepted delivery of machine No. 10984, instead of machine No. 10983, from the Curtiss-Wright Company at its plant at Robertson, Mo.

In its very essence the contract between Murray and Long was that Long should fly Murray's plane from the factory in Missouri to Murray's home in California, and that Murray should pay Long's actual traveling expenses during the time spent by Long in making the flight. Long was either an employee or an independent contractor. By section 8 (b) of the Workmen's Compensation Insurance and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 835, § 8 (b)), it is provided that: "Any person rendering service for another, other than as an independent contractor, or as expressly excluded herein, is presumed to be an employee within the meaning of this act. The term 'independent contractor' shall be taken to mean, for the purposes of this act: Any person who renders service, other than manual labor, for a specified recompense for a specified result, under the control of his principal as to the result of his work only and not as to the means by which such result is accomplished."

The evidence showed that Long insisted on traveling the southern route. In all other respects he followed the suggestions and directions of Murray as to the manner in which the trip should be made. On May 14th he wrote to Murray a letter and stated therein that: "I didn't know if you wanted ship hangared of a night, or just tie it down, although when staying over night at fields like this one everything has to be put in hangar at night. It is your airplane and you are paying the expenses of getting it to your vicinity, and I am not telling you what to do." On May 29th, probably in answer to Long's letter of May 14th, Murray wrote Long a lengthy letter in which he informed Long that he had sent to a Mr. Parks a check for $85 to pay Long's traveling expenses and the expense of operating the machine on the trip, and in which he gave Long numerous suggestions and directions to be followed on the trip out. As to the route to be traveled, Murray stated he would leave it to Long's discretion. He cautioned him to take plenty of drinking water and chocolate with him "when you hit a dry country." He wrote regarding the 4B-"B.G." plugs as the ones to use on the engine; they having been recommended by an acquaintance of his. He mentions "frequent valve oiling," and suggests that it would be less expensive to stop in smaller towns. He states also in his letter that he has known of some pilots who had stopped at ranches and had been guests for several days, giving the owners "a little hop." He informed Long that he (Murray) was going to Coronado, and, if Long traveled the southern route, maybe he might make there a connection—meaning a chance to fly a machine back to his home. In this event Murray would fly his own machine up to his home. Finally Murray closes his letter by stating that he is inclosing a note to the Curtiss-Wright people "so that they will turn over the ship to you," and adds a postscript directing that Long drop him a line by air mail the first day or two, and a wire on the morning of the last day, stating the time and place of his expected arrival.

In the case of Hillen v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 199 Cal. 577, 250 P. 570, 571, the question was before the court as to whether the person injured was an employee or an independent contractor. The injured person, Downing, at the time of receiving his injury, was shingling a house under a contract with Hillen, the owner of the building, who was engaged in the business of building and selling houses. The contract between Downing and Hillen was that the former should do the shingling on the house then under construction, and was to be paid at the rate of $1.25 for each 1,000 shingles laid. While so engaged, he sustained the injury complained of. In passing upon the question as to whether Downing was an employee or an independent contractor, this court said: "It is admitted that Downing was at the time of his injury actually performing service for Hillen. Consequently the burden of proof rests upon Hillen to establish that Downing was an independent contractor. Section 19 (d) (1). It was therefore necessary for him to show that Downing was, within the definition of the term, a person rendering 'service, other than manual labor, for a specified recompense for a specified result, under the control of his principal as to the result of his work only and not as to the means by which such result is accomplished.' Section 8 (b). Whether or not the relation of employer and employee existed in this case, under the oral contract entered into, is a question of mixed law and fact, to be proved like any other question. The finding of the commission, in effect, that the relation existed between Hillen and Downing, is binding on this court. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Industrial Accident Com., 180 Cal. 497, 499, 181 P. 788. Unless there is such an entire absence of evidence in the record as to render the finding unreasonable, or in excess of the powers of the commission, the court is not empowered to set it aside. Eastman Co. v. Industrial Accident Com., 186 Cal. 587, 598, 200 P. 17. The award of the commission may be annulled only if there is no substantial evidence in support of its findings. Press Pub. Co. v. Industrial Accident Com., 190 Cal. 114, 124, 210 P. 820."

[1-4] Applying the principles of law approved in that case to the facts in the instant action, we think it must be held that the evidence before the commission was sufficient to support its finding that Long was an employee, and not an independent contractor. He was rendering service for Murray, and for this service Murray paid Long compensation. The fact that the amount paid Long was only sufficient to meet his personal expenses during his employment does not affect his status as an employee. A person may work for his board and lodging, and during such employment he is just as much an employee as if he were paid a stipulated sum per day, or for any other fixed period of time. The sum paid might be only enough to pay his board and lodging, or it might be more, or even less. The amount of the wage has no bearing whatever upon the relation existing between him and his employer. As Long was rendering service to Murray for an agreed compensation, the burden was upon Murray to prove by competent evidence that Long was an independent contractor and not an employee. Assuming that there was evidence before the commission tending to establish that fact, it was the province of the commission to weigh that evidence, and, if there was a substantial conflict in the evidence on that issue, the determination of the commission was final. We think that there was not only such a conflict in the evidence, but that the evidence before the commission greatly preponderated in favor of Long's contention that he was an employee. Murray owned the machine. He was paying all expenses of its being removed from the factory to his home. He was in control of the whole enterprise. Not only did he have the right to control Long as to the results of the latter's work in delivering the plane to him, but he had control of the means by which the removal was accomplished, and he actually exercised this right of control. Nothing was left to Long's discretion except the choice of the route. As to all other matters Murray gave Long express directions. As the owner of the airplane and the person solely interested in having it brought from the factory to his home, he necessarily had complete right of control over all its movements. Whether he exercised this right in every respect is not decisive of the question. It is the right to exercise control, and not the exercise of that right, which determines whether the person performing the service is an employee or an independent contractor. Upon this question, this court said in the Hillen Case (page 581 of 199 Cal., 250 P. 570, 571): "One of the best tests to determine whether the relation is that of an independent contractor or that of employer and employee is the right of control. It is not the fact of actual interference with the control, but the right to interfere, that makes the difference between an independent contractor and a servant or agent. Tuttle v. Embury-Martin Lumber Co., 192 Mich. 385, 399, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 664, 158 N. W. 875. It is not a question of interference, or noninterference, not a question of whether there have been suggestions, or even orders, as to the conduct of the work, but a question of the right to act, as distinguished from the act itself or the failure to act."

In this case we have evidence that Murray gave Long numerous suggestions and some direct orders as to the method and manner to be followed by Long in flying the airplane on the proposed trip. Considering the relations of the parties, even the suggestions given by Murray were in reality orders, and Long would be justified in acting upon them, and would have been held legally responsible for failure to follow them. Taking the evidence as a whole, we think that there can be no question but that it was sufficient to justify the finding of the commission that Long was an employee of Murray at the time he sustained the injury for which he now seeks compensation. Some reliance is placed in support of the petition upon the recent cases of Becker v. Industrial Acc. Com., 212 Cal. 526, 298 P. 979, and New York Indemnity Company v. Industrial Acc. Comm. (Cal. Sup.) 1 P.(2d) 12. Neither of these cases is, we think, in conflict with the conclusion arrived at in the instant case. In the Becker Case the employee was killed by a passing automobile just after he had alighted from a street car. At the time of his injury he was engaged in an endeavor to serve a summons, given him by an attorney. The facts as recited in the opinion show that the attorney gave to the deceased two addresses where the defendant could possibly be found, but gave him no instructions or directions as to how or when the summons should be served. The deceased was to receive $1 for making the service, and was at liberty to adopt any means of travel and any method of procedure which suited his convenience and could use his own judgment in making the service. The decision holds that, while the deceased at the time he met his death was under the control of his principal as to the result of his work, he was not as to the means by which the result should be accomplished.

In New York Indemnity Company v. Industrial Acc. Comm. (Cal. Sup.) 1 P.(2d) 12, supra, the injured person was a newsboy selling papers on the streets of San Francisco. He bought his papers outright from the publishers and sold them to the public. His profit was the difference between what he sold the papers for and the amount he paid to the publisher for them. There was no contract of hire between him and the publisher as there was between Murray and Long. The publisher designated the corner to be occupied by the newsboy while selling his papers, and required him to be diligent and aggressive in his efforts to sell as many papers as possible. The publisher did not attempt, however, to direct or control the newsboy as to the means or method the latter might employ in selling the papers. This was left entirely to the discretion of the newsboy. That case differs radically from the present case. Here Murray owned the machine, hired Long to fly it, and paid the latter for his services. Not only so, but Murray not only had the power to control the actions of Long in making the trip, but gave the latter specific and detailed directions as to how the trip should be made.

[5] The further contention of Murray that Long's employment was casual, and was not within the trade, business, or profession of Murray, we think is equally untenable. Murray not only owned at least one plane before he purchased the one from the Curtiss-Wright Company, but the evidence shows that he held a "dealership" for the sale of airplanes from that company which was a contract which allowed him a discount or commission on planes purchased by him from said company. Asked what he intended to do with the plane purchased from the Curtiss-Wright Company, he said: "I had no definite actual sale made. I had been promised the very first machine. By having the first machine out here, I would have been in a very good position because it was about the newest thing out in aviation and supposed to be reasonable. * * * If I could have sold the thing, I would have sold it and made something out of it, it being the very first ship." He also authorized Long to sell the machine if he could find a buyer on the trip out. This evidence, we think, was sufficient to justify the implied finding of the commission that Long's employment was not casual. While Murray's regular business was that of land appraiser, it is quite evident that he had stepped out of his regular calling and was engaged in an endeavor to sell airplanes on the side. His employment of Long to assist him in this enterprise was not, therefore, casual, but, on the other hand, was in the course of a business in which he was endeavoring to establish himself. The fact that he had not up to that time actually made a sale of an airplane did not render the service performed by Long without the scope of that business. Hendrickson v. Industrial Accident Commission (Cal. Sup.) 8 P.(2d) 833.

[6] The third and last contention of petitioner in support of his petition to have the award against him set aside and annulled by this court is that Long departed from the course of his employment when he accepted delivery of a machine from the Curtiss-Wright Company other than the precise one purchased by Murray from said company. We have gone carefully over the record of the evidence introduced before the commission at the hearing of this matter. We fail to find any evidence that Long was ever informed by Murray or any one else that Murray had purchased any particular machine from the Curtiss-Wright Company or that Long was directed by Murray to get from the company any particular machine. Murray had purchased a machine from the company and he wrote Long to call, get the machine, and drive it to Murray's home. In Murray's last letter to Long, being the letter heretofore referred to, and dated May 29, 1931, Murray writes, "I enclose a note for the Curtiss-Wright people so that they will turn over the ship to you." The note referred to, omitting the formal parts, read as follows: "Mr. Carl Long, a transport pilot, would like to make the trip out and kindly has consented to fly the Junior out to San Francisco Bay District. I trust that you will have a ship ready for me as per your last letter." It will be noted that the only reference to the kind of a "ship" Long was to get from the Curtiss-Wright Company was that it was to be a "Junior." It is conceded that such a "ship" was delivered to Long by the Curtiss-Wright Company and that Long "flew" it out to the coast. It appears, however, that Murray in fact bought machine No. 10983, but that the company delivered to Long machine No. 10984. There is some dispute as to whether these two machines were not precisely alike except as to their serial numbers. Long, however, was not directed to get a machine bearing any particular number, and it does not appear that he knew the number which Murray's machine bore. When Long called at the office of the company and presented Murray's written order for a machine, he was told that Murray's machine would be ready for delivery the following Thursday. On that day Long again put in his appearance at the company's office, fixed up the necessary papers in order to have the machine delivered to him, and made ready to take the machine from the company. He was taken to the assembly room, and the machine intended for Mr. Murray was not ready. He was given another machine by the company. While there was some conversation within his hearing between the representatives of the company that Mr. Murray's machine was not ready and that he would be given another, Long testified that, "I didn't know the difference that it was not the ship that Murray was supposed to get. So about eleven o'clock I go right along in there and took off on my way out here with an airplane No. 10984." It seems that the machine which Murray was to receive from the Curtiss-Wright Company was to be numbered 10983, but, as we have seen, Murray did not inform Long of that fact, nor did he direct Long to accept from the company a machine bearing that or any particular number. He simply directed Long to secure from the Curtiss-Wright Company the machine purchased and fly it to California, and Long was given no power or discretion to determine whether the machine the company delivered to him was the right machine or not. In fact, he had no information from Murray, or from any other person, for that matter, which would have enabled him to determine whether the machine delivered to him was or was not the machine Murray purchased. Under the circumstances, he was justified in accepting from the company the machine it delivered to him as the machine which Murray had purchased and as the machine which Murray had hired him to fly to California. It is true that he testified that he heard one representative of the Curtiss-Wright Company say to another that the ship intended for Murray was not ready, and that he was told that he could take the other ship, but he also testified that he did not know the difference that it was not the ship Murray was supposed to get. Of course, if Murray had in fact purchased ship No. 10983, and had instructed Long of that fact, and had directed him to get a ship bearing that number from the company, or had given him any directions, which would have enabled him to determine whether the ship he accepted was the right ship, the situation would have been entirely different, and Murray might not have been liable to Long for any injury the latter might have sustained after he had departed from the instructions given him by Murray. As it was, however, in the absence of any definite instructions as to the particular machine he was to receive from the company, and in view of his testimony that he did not know the difference between the two machines and supposed he was getting the machine which Murray bought, we think there is substantial evidence to support the conclusions of the commission that Long did not knowingly depart from the course of his employment, but to the best of his knowledge and information was attempting to comply with the instructions of Murray, his employer, when he accepted machine No. 10984 from the company. As he was injured while flying this machine, the award of commission compensating him for his injuries so received should be sustained.

The award is accordingly affirmed.

Proceeding in review to annul an award of the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of the Globe Indemnity Company and against the State Compensation Insurance Fund. The State Compensation Insurance Fund was the insurance carrier of the Examiner Printing Company, the publisher of the San Francisco Examiner. On January 1, 1931, a paper carrier named Marc was injured while delivering Examiners on his regular newspaper route, which route is known as route 45. This route was being operated by T. O. Throndson under a lease thereof from Mrs. Abbie Paulsen. Mrs. Paulsen secured the route from her husband, Peter Paulsen, who in turn had secured it, on September 1, 1903, from Ed Delsani. In just what manner the latter became the owner of said route, the record does not indicate. This fact is not material, as all of the parties hereto agree that the route was owned and operated as stated above. The injured employee, Marc, was at the time of his injury employed by Throndson, whose insurance carrier was the Globe Indemnity Company. The Examiner Printing Company was a party to all of the above transfers; that is, it gave its written consent to said transfers. It was not a party to the lease from Mrs. Paulsen. It, however, was fully informed as to the nature of said lease, its circulating manager having witnessed the execution of the same, and thereafter recognized Throndson and dealt with him as the lessee of said route, and the person entitled to conduct and operate the same from April 30, 1928, the date of said lease, until the injury to Marc, which occurred on January 1, 1931. At the time of said injury, Throndson carried compensation insurance with the Globe Indemnity Company, which company settled in full with Marc for all compensation and other charges due him by reason of his said injury. An application was filed before the Industrial Accident Commission by the Globe Indemnity Company and Throndson against the Examiner Printing Company, and its insurance carrier, the State Compensation Fund, to determine the person or company legally liable for the payment of said compensation and charges. As already stated, Marc has been paid in full. Throndson and the Examiner Printing Company were each insured. This controversy, therefore, is solely between the Globe Indemnity Company on the one hand and the State Compensation Fund on the other.

There is no substantial conflict in the evidence. Therefore, the only question for our determination is whether the evidence before the commission was, as a matter of law, sufficient to justify the findings of the commission and its award based upon said findings. The commission found that, at the time Marc received his said injuries, he was in the employ of the Examiner Printing Company, and at that time the State Compensation Insurance Fund was the insurance carrier of the Examiner Printing Company. The award of the commission accordingly ran in favor of the Globe Indemnity Company and against the State Compensation Insurance Fund.

It is the contention of petitioner, the State Compensation Insurance Fund, that at the time Marc was injured he was in the employ of Throndson, and not in the employ of the Examiner Printing Company, while the respondents contend that he was not in Throndson's but in the Examiner's employ. In determining this question, it will be necessary for us to ascertain the legal relation existing between the Examiner Printing Company and Throndson, as well as the relation between Throndson and Marc at the time the latter was injured.

Throndson's regular business was the insurance business. He, however, conducted two newspaper routes for the Examiner Printing Company. These routes were known as route 31 and route 45. Route 45 he operated under the lease from Mrs. Paulsen. He paid Mrs. Paulsen $20 per month as rental under the lease, and was entitled to all the profits of the business. He bought his papers outright from the Examiner Printing Company, paying the company at the rate of $1.60 per hundred for the daily issues and 6 cents each for the Sunday issues. Under the assignment whereby Mrs. Paulsen acquired route 45, to which assignment the Examiner Printing Company was a party and gave its consent in writing, Mrs. Paulsen agreed to canvass the route regularly, and upon her failure to do so the Examiner Printing Company was given the right to put canvassers on the route and to make deliveries required in the course of the business at the expense of Mrs. Paulsen. She also agreed to comply with all the rules and regulations of the Examiner Printing Company, regulating the conduct of its business and that of the carriers of its papers and also to pay for all papers weekly at the then rate, or at such rate as might be established from time to time. The term of the lease from Mrs. Paulsen to Throndson was five years, with a proviso that either party might terminate the same after one year by giving sixty days' notice to the other. The lease further provided that, if it should appear to Mrs. Paulsen or the Examiner Printing Company that Throndson was guilty of any breach of the terms thereof, Mrs. Paulsen might, at her option, terminate the lease; also that at the expiration of the lease Throndson would furnish to Mrs. Paulsen and to the Examiner Printing Company the addresses of all subscribers on the route, and that he would render assistance to his immediate successor by "breaking in" said successor and by giving him full and complete information without remuneration or compensation on all particulars relating to the route. As stated above, the Examiner Printing Company was not a party to the lease from Mrs. Paulsen to Throndson. The terms of the lease, therefore, had no bearing upon the relationship existing between Throndson and the Examiner Printing Company. Throndson, however, was bound by the terms of the assignment of the lease to Mrs. Paulsen, to which the Examiner Printing Company was a party. As lessee of Mrs. Paulsen he stood in her place, and sustained the same relationship to the Examiner Printing Company as Mrs. Paulsen sustained prior to the execution of the lease. Throndson hired Marc and paid him $60 per month for the latter's services. Marc's duties were to get the papers at the office of the publisher and deliver them to subscribers throughout the territory within the route. He conveyed the papers from the office to his route on the street car. He paid his own street car fare and other expenses incident to the delivery of the papers. The Examiner Printing Company never paid him anything for his services in delivering the papers, or otherwise. He attended to all complaints, and had a box or pigeonhole in the office of the Examiner, where he would receive complaints and get the names of new subscribers. Throndson left the delivery of the papers entirely to Marc. He, however, attended to the collection of subscriptions from the subscribers, and paid the Examiner Company for the papers purchased.

It is clear from the foregoing facts that Marc, at least primarily, was the employee of Throndson. He was hired by Throndson, paid by him, and his actions were under the complete and direct control of Throndson. However, if Throndson was an employee of the Examiner Printing Company, with authority to hire Marc, then, while primarily Marc was in the employ of Throndson, in the final analysis of the situation, he was an employee of the Examiner Printing Company. It is apparent, therefore, that the vital question in issue in this proceeding depends upon the relation existing between Throndson and the Examiner Printing Company.

As we have seen from the facts stated above, the Examiner Printing Company did not pay Throndson any wages or compensation of any kind or nature. It sold outright to Throndson the papers which he circulated to the subscribers throughout his route. Throndson was not on the pay roll of the Examiner Company. His profits came from the sale of the papers which he had bought of the Examiner Company, after deducting the cost to him of the papers and the expense of delivering them to the subscribers. Section 8 (a) of the Workmen's Compensation, Safety and Insurance Act (Stats. 1917, pp. 831, 835) defines an employee as "every person in the service of an employer * * * under any appointment or contract of hire or apprenticeship, expressed or implied, oral or written." We think it would be an unwarranted extension of this definition of an employee to hold that one who is not hired but who simply purchases papers or other commodities of another for the purpose of reselling them comes within the terms thereof. In the recent case of New York Indemnity Company v. Industrial Accident Commission, 1 P.(2d) 12, we held that a "newsboy" who purchased papers from the publisher to sell them upon the streets was not an employee of the publisher, even though the publisher allotted to the newsboy a certain corner of the city where the latter would conduct his business of selling papers. We can see but little, if any, difference in principle between the relation existing between the newsboy and the publisher in that case and between Throndson and the Examiner Company here. Respondents rely, as did the commission in that case, upon the case of Globe Indemnity Company v. Industrial Accident Commission, 208 Cal. 715, 284 P. 661, but we pointed out the distinction between those two cases in our opinion in the case of New York Indemnity Company v. Industrial Accident Commission, 1 P.(2d) 12, 14, supra. That same distinction exists between the Globe Indemnity Company Case and the instant action. We there said in the more recent of those two cases: "Nor do we think that there is a sufficient analogy between the facts involved in this proceeding and those existing in the case of Globe Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 208 Cal. 715, 284 P. 661, to justify its application to the case at bar, since in that case the evidence showed that an express relation of agency for the distribution of the daily issues of the Oakland Tribune to its subscribers in San Rafael existed between the applicant for an award and the publishers of said newspaper, in pursuance of which the applicant not only received a percentage of the monthly price which the subscribers paid, but was also paid a regular sum in addition thereto to cover the cost of distribution in outlying territory."

We there held (New York Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission) that the newsboy was a sales agent as that term was employed in the authorities cited in that opinion. We further held that, while the publisher retained the right to sell papers to the newsboy only upon the latter complying with certain regulations adopted by the publisher respecting the conduct of the newsboy in making individual sales of papers to the public, the control thus reserved by the publisher was not as a matter of law sufficient to constitute the newsboy an employee of the publisher. The regulations under which the newsboys operated, as shown by the evidence in that case, consisted of the following: "That certain specified corners or places upon the public streets were allotted, when unoccupied, to particular newsboys applying for the same, who received instructions from the district manager not to intrude upon or interfere with the corner or place allotted to another. Each particular newsboy was expected and in fact required to be active and vigilant in making sales of a prescribed minimum number of each of said newspapers at or near his designated place; in short, to be a 'hustler' in making sales. Otherwise his allotted place or corner would be given to another newsboy and he would be refused further copies by the district manager." The control exercised by the Examiner Printing Company over those in charge of its delivery routes, including Throndson, may be briefly stated to include prompt and regular distribution of the paper to the subscribers residing in the respective routes; a thorough canvass of the residents thereof as prospective subscribers of the paper; prompt adjustments of all complaints made by subscribers; and compliance by the carriers with all the rules and regulations of the publisher respecting the conduct of its business and that of its carriers. We think it apparent from this statement that the control exercised by the Examiner Printing Company over the owners of its routes, or their lessees, did not convert them into mere employees of the company. The purpose of these regulations prescribed by the company was to insure a certain and definite result—the prompt and regular distribution of its publication to all persons in the several routes who might be secured as subscribers of said publication. The means by which this result was to be accomplished was left entirely to the route owner, or carrier, in each route. As long as he produced the result desired, the Examiner Printing Company did not interfere with the manner or means by which this result was accomplished. The carrier might personally make deliveries of the papers, or he might employ others to act for him. The carrier might use any manner of conveyance in his work, or he might make deliveries on foot. When we take into consideration the limited control which the Examiner Printing Company exercised over Throndson, with the further fact that the Examiner Printing Company paid Throndson no wages or salary, but simply sold him papers which the latter was to resell, we are forced to the conclusion that the relation of employer and employee did not exist between the Examiner Printing Company and Throndson, but that, on the other hand, Throndson, either as a sales agent, or, we think more properly, as an independent contractor, was performing the service of delivering papers in said route No. 45.

A case strikingly like the instant one is that of Gall v. Detroit Journal Company, 191 Mich. 405, 158 N. W. 36, 37, 19 A. L. R. 1164. In that case a newspaper carrier injured the plaintiff while the former was delivering papers for the defendant. That case was much stronger than the case before us, in that the carrier there was paid wages for his services, but was left free to employ any means or method which he might choose in the performance of said services. In deciding that the defendant was not liable for the acts of the carrier in injuring the plaintiff, the court said: "Rebtoy [the carrier] was to deliver the papers to such persons, at such places, and on such time as the company should from day to day, designate. Such delivery was the result to be obtained. And Rebtoy was to effect such delivery and obtain such result by any means and by any conveyance and in any way he saw fit. He could make the deliveries in person, or through others employed by him. It is shown by the evidence that those making deliveries for the company did occasionally employ others to do the work. He could use a horse, an automobile, or carry the papers on foot, provided he got them to the right persons, at the right places, and upon time. So far as the terms of the contract are concerned Rebtoy was certainly an independent contractor and not a servant. One whom the employer does not control, and has no right to control, as to the method, or means, by which he produces the result contracted for is an independent contractor"—citing authorities.

We have not overlooked the provision in the assignment to Mrs. Paulsen, whereby she agreed to comply with all the rules and regulations of the Examiner Printing Company, made to regulate the conduct of its business and that of the carriers and owners of its newspaper routes. This obligation was binding upon Throndson, the lessee of Mrs. Paulsen. In so far as these rules and regulations might apply to the owners of the newspaper routes, they were limited to the conduct of such route owners. They did not purport to deal with the means or methods employed by the route owners in making delivery of papers throughout their respective routes. In the "newsboy" case referred to above, it was shown that the district manager of the paper "supervised the daily conduct" of the newsboys in the selling of their papers, but we held that such control did not make them employees of the publisher.

Respondents rely with some assurance upon the cases of Globe Indemnity Company v. Industrial Accident Commission, 208 Cal. 715, 284 P. 661; Call Publishing Company v. Industrial Accident Commission, 89 Cal. App. 194, 264 P. 300; and Carlson v. Industrial Accident Commission (Cal. Sup.) 2 P.(2d) 151. We have already shown how the facts in the Globe Indemnity Company Case differ from those in the instant case, and further reference to that authority is unnecessary. The facts in the Call Publishing Company Case are more like those in the Globe Indemnity Company Case than in the case before us. In the Call Publishing Company Case, the injured employee, who was in the employ of that company, was paid, in addition to the receipts from the route covered by him, a regular weekly wage or salary of $32.50 per week for his services in delivering the papers on said route. His was a contract of hire. He held no definite agreement from his employer, but could be dismissed at any time. It is apparent that this case has no controlling effect upon the instant case.

In the case of Carlson v. Industrial Accident Commission (Cal. Sup.) 2 P.(2d) 151, supra, the court was asked to annul an award in favor of the dependents of a man named Rodgers, who was fatally injured while performing services upon the ranch owned by the plaintiff. The plaintiff, Mrs. Carlson, was the owner of the ranch, and had executed an instrument whereby she purported to lease the ranch to Rodgers. By the terms of this instrument Rodgers was to receive a share of the crops produced on the ranch as compensation for his services rendered in operating the ranch. Among other things, this instrument, termed a lease, provided: "That all work of every description shall be done under the supervision of the party of the first part [Mrs. Carlson], her agent, or representative, and in strict accordance with her wishes, ideas and instructions, and the different lines of work must be carried out in their proper time and season, as directed by the party of the first part." It was held by reason of this provision of the lease, as well as others of less potency, that Mrs. Carlson reserved control over the manner in which the ranch was to be farmed by Rodgers; that is, while Rodgers had agreed to work the ranch, Mrs. Carlson had reserved control of the means and method by which this work was to be performed. The evidence, therefore, was held to be sufficient to support the finding of the commission that Rodgers was an employee of Mrs. Carlson at the time of his injury and not her tenant. It will be noted that in the instrument whereby Mrs. Carlson sought to lease the ranch to Rodgers that she explicitly reserved control of the manner and means of doing all work performed by Rodgers. No such reservation of control exists in the instant case. On the other hand, as we have seen, Throndson had exclusive control of the means by which his work was to be done, and was responsible to the Examiner Printing Company only for the result to be accomplished. We find nothing in the Carlson Case helpful to respondents.

Another case which has been referred to in the briefs of the parties hereto is the case of Boehm v. Spreckels, 183 Cal. 239, 191 P. 5, 8. That case involved a controversy between the owner of a newspaper route and the publisher of the paper. It was there held that a contract whereby a publisher transferred and delivered to a carrier a certain route for the delivery of newspapers "created an agency and did not declare a sale of property." The plaintiff in that action contended that, by the purchase of a route by the carrier, he acquired an interest in the business of the publisher of the newspaper. The decision holds that no interest in the business was involved in such transaction. It is true the decision states that an agency was thereby created rather than that a sale was declared. However, the court was not in that action concerned with any question involved in the instant case, and we do not consider the decision therein determinative of any of the issues of this action. The term "agency" is a broad one, and may include every relation in which one person acts for another. It is frequently used in connection with an arrangement which does not in law amount to an agency, as where the essence of an arrangement is bailment or sale, as in the case of a sale agency exclusive in certain territory. Piper v. Oakland Motor Company, 94 Vt. 211, 109 A. 911, 912.

From the foregoing we conclude that there is no evidence in the record to support the finding of the commission that Marc was at the time of his injury in the employ of the Examiner Printing Company. The award, therefore, based upon said finding should be, and it is hereby, annulled.

PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

Civ. 8557.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 14, 1932.

Master and servant ⊜417(9).

Judgment annulling Industrial Commission's decision denying compensation, and remanding proceeding with directions was not court mandate that commission apportion award subsequently granted (St. 1917, p. 833, § 3, subd. 4).

Judgment annulling Industrial Commission's decision denying compensation, and remanding proceeding with directions was not a court mandate that, in making an award in compliance with the directions, the commission should apportion the award between injury and pre-existing disease as provided in St. 1917, p. 833, § 3, subd. 4, since the award under consideration by the court was an award that claimant take nothing and presented no issue of apportionment, and, in so far as the court spoke of apportioning, it was addressing itself to the issue whether the award should have been affirmative instead of negative.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Emma G. Mullane, claimant, for the death of Edward A. Mullane, her husband, opposed by the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, employer. To review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission, awarding compensation, employer brings certiorari.

Award affirmed.

Thomas J. Straub and John J. Briare, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Edmund J. Holl, of San Francisco, for respondent Emma G. Mullane.

A. I. Townsend and Frank J. Burke, both of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

STURTEVANT, J.

Heretofore Edward A. Mullane had suffered from tuberculosis but the disease ceased to progress. While the disease was quiescent, he took employment under the Pacific Gas & Electric Company. While so employed and within the course of his employment, he suffered an injury which resulted in the activation of the pre-existing tubercular condition in the laryngeal and spinal region. Soon afterwards he died. An application by his widow was made to the defendant commission to fix the compensation. After certain proceedings had, it filed an award denying any compensation. The widow filed a petition for a rehearing. The petition was denied and thereafter she applied for a writ of review. The writ was granted by the First Division of this court. Later the court handed down a decision, Mullane v. Industrial Acc. Com. (Cal. App.) 5 P.(2d) 483. After the remittitur went down, the application was again called up before the defendant commission. No further evidence was taken, but the matter was submitted to the defendant commission for it to make an award in compliance with the mandate of the court. Thereafter, on the 22d day of March, 1932, the defendant commission filed its decision. It fixed the compensation in the sum of $3,375.51. Paragraph 5 is as follows: "The evidence is insufficient to warrant an apportionment of the death benefit or to make an apportionment between injury and preexisting disease. This Commission now finds that all the disability found herein and said death were the direct result of the injury which forms the subject matter of this action." The employer filed a petition for a rehearing. The petition was denied, and it applied to this court for a writ of review. In its briefs it makes merely one point and that is that the defendant commission did not apportion its award (Workmen's Compensation Insurance and Safety Act, § 3, subd. 4 [St. 1917, p. 833]), as directed by the mandate of the court. We think the point may not be sustained. There was no mandate of the court to apportion. The award under consideration by the court was an award that the applicant take nothing. It presented no issue of apportionment. In so far as the court spoke of apportioning, it was addressing itself to the issue whether the award should have been affirmative instead of negative. Moreover, there was no evidence before the defendant commission on which an apportionment could have been based. The evidence was without conflict that before the accident the decedent had suffered from tuberculosis; but that at the time of the accident it was quiescent. There was evidence that the accident caused the quiescent tuberculosis to become active, and that such tuberculosis caused the death of the decedent.

The award is affirmed.

STEPHENS, Justice pro tem.

Defendant was convicted by a jury of the possession of "metal knuckles" (Stats. 1923, p. 695; Stats. 1925, p. 542, and Stats. 1931, p. 2316), and appeals from the judgment and from the denial of a motion for new trial. Several specifications of error are presented to us for consideration.

[1] The specification that the verdict is contrary to the evidence cannot be sustained, for the reason that the evidence is conclusive even to the extent of the admission by defendant himself that he was the owner and possessor of the knuckles for a long time prior to and at the time of his arrest.

[2] The specification that the statute is invalid for the reason that it acts as an ex post facto law cannot be sustained. People v. McCloskey, 76 Cal. App. 227, 244 P. 930.

The specification that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct is without merit.

[3] The specification that the statute is repealed by implication by the enactment of sections 417 and 467 of the Penal Code cannot be sustained, as those sections refer to the use and to the intention to use the weapons therein referred to, while the statute invoked herein refers to the possession of deadly weapons.

*For subsequent opinion see 18 P.2d 741.

The specification that the court erred in denying defendant's motion for a new trial is dependent wholly upon the rulings in the other specifications.

There is, then, but one point raised by the appeal which merits discussion: Is the statute, which makes the mere possession of metal knuckles a crime, within the police power of the state, or is it unconstitutional as being unreasonable and arbitrary? The evidence of defendant is that he acquired the knuckles from his father and brought them to California several years ago; that he has never carried them on his person, although he has moved them with him when removing from one residence to another; that during the last few months prior to his arrest they were kept in a dresser drawer, or upon a shelf in the house where he was living; and that he had always kept them as a keepsake or curio. The trial judge permitted this testimony over objection, but instructed the jury that possession was the test of guilt, and declined to instruct that their use or lack of use, or their being kept as a keepsake or curio, would affect the guilt or innocence of the accused.

In principle, the question has been conclusively answered by the appellate courts of this state. In People v. Gonzales, 72 Cal. App. 626, 237 P. 812, the constitutionality of the so-called Firearms Act (Stats. 1923, p. 695) was under consideration. In that case, as in the instant case, the conviction was sought to be reversed because the statute made criminal the mere possession of a weapon. Likewise in each case the appellant claims an entire lack of criminal intent. The court in the case cited, quoting from page 630, of 72 Cal. App., 237 P. 812, 813, said: "In the case of People v. Wolfrom, 15 Cal. App. 732, 115 P. 1088, it is said: 'When the intent is not made an affirmative element of the crime, the law imputes that the act knowingly done was with criminal intent, and it need not be alleged nor proven.' A perusal of the statute which is the subject of appellant's attack shows that the mere possession of a firearm by any person described in the act is sufficient to constitute a criminal offense. The language of the statute is that '* * * No person who has been convicted of a felony against the person or property of another or,' etc., 'shall own or have in his possession or under his custody or control any pistol, revolver or other firearm capable of being concealed upon the person.' By the statute, intent on the part of a defendant accused of the commission of the offense is not made an essential to the completion of the criminal act; and whether or not the act was committed knowingly would necessarily be a question of fact for determination by the jury." See Ex parte McClain, 134 Cal. 110, 66 P. 69, 54 L. R. A. 779, 86 Am. St. Rep. 243.

The general subject under discussion is treated in the following cases: People v. Gonzales, supra, 72 Cal. App. 626, 237 P. 812; People v. James, 71 Cal. App. 374, 235 P. 81; People v. Camperlingo, 69 Cal. App. 466, 231 P. 601; People v. McCloskey, 76 Cal. App. 227, 244 P. 930; People v. Rogers, 112 Cal. App. 615, 297 P. 924. We find the following in section 64, volume 5, California Jurisprudence: "Where the power exists to legislate, the court is not concerned with the wisdom or expediency of the law. If there is any theory upon which the provision might reasonably have been concluded by the legislature to be essential, the court may not interfere."

[4-6] Firearms have their legitimate uses; hence the law regulates their use and prescribes who shall be prohibited their possession. But there is impressed upon slungshots, sandbags, black-jacks, and metal knuckles the indubitable indicia of criminal purpose. To every person of ordinary intelligence, these instruments are known to be the tools of the brawl fighter and cowardly assassin and of no beneficial use whatever to a good citizen or to society. The Legislature may take note of and act upon such common facts. Ex parte Yun Quong, 159 Cal. 508, 114 P. 835, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 969. It can regulate and proscribe the use of a thing so that its beneficial use may be enjoyed and its detrimental use prohibited. It follows that, if the beneficial use of a thing is entirely lacking or grossly disproportionate to its harmful use, the police power may absolutely prohibit its possession. Ex parte Yun Quong, supra.

There is no question of mistake or unwilling or unwitting possession in this case. Appellant intentionally brought this unlawful weapon into this state, an offense in itself, and moved it about with him as he removed from place to place. Should he have resolved to use it for the cruel purpose for which it was made, it was ever in easy reach. His defense of innocent intention in its possession would in principle permit the same defense by one bearing concealed weapons. Such a defense would, in the main, necessarily be dependent upon the testimony of the accused as to his intention. The almost impossibility of proof is obvious, and in good reason may have been the primary cause for making "possession" the gravamen of the offense.

[7] The suggestion of the remote possibility that the keeper of a museum might be convicted under the terms of the statute may be grounds for an amendment to it, but the legality of statutes is not measured by extreme or unlikely possibilities. United States v. Kirby, 7 Wall 482, 19 L. Ed. 278. When the statute is read as a whole, it seems clear that the Legislature meant to enact no halfway measure, for it is therein provided that "blackjacks, slungshots, billies, sandclubs, sandbags, and metal knuckles are hereby declared to be nuisances and shall be subject to confiscation and summary destruction whenever found within this state." St. 1923, p. 698, § 7. It seems clear to us that the effective prohibition of the use of weapons of this sort depends upon the right to prohibit possession thereof. In such case there can be no doubt that the right to protect society must prevail over the mere individual desire to possess.

[8] The statute does not offend against the state or the national Constitutions, and we think the trial court was right in instructing the jury that possession under the facts of this case was the essence of the offense and in refusing to give instructions in conflict with that principle.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Jury ⇐29(6).

Assumption of waiver of jury from accused's counsel's statement that jury had been waived held ineffective, since accused must personally express consent to proceed without jury (Const. art. 1, § 7).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Reversed.

William G. Kenney and John E. Glover, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, Acting P. J.

The appellant was tried before the superior court sitting without a jury, and was found guilty, upon a charge of having violated section 112 of the California Vehicle Act (as amended by St. 1929, p. 537, § 44).

It is contended by the appellant and conceded by counsel for the people that the record fails to disclose any proceedings before the court below which constituted an express waiver by the defendant or by his counsel of a trial by jury. The transcript does disclose a notation of "jury having been waived," and of the following inquiry and response:

"The Court: Has the jury been waived?

"Mr. Glover: Yes, your Honor, we waived the jury over in Department 22."

At the conclusion of the trial it appears that the court stated previously to passing sentence:

"At both trials you joined the prosecution, the district attorney, in waiving a jury trial; the case was tried before the court without a jury. After evidence was received, the court finds that you are guilty of the offense as alleged in the information. Have you any legal cause now to show why judgment should not be pronounced against you?

"The defendant: No, sir."

It is suggested on behalf of the respondent that the observation of the trial court, relying upon the statement of the defendant's counsel, might justify an assumption that a jury was in fact waived, under the rule that all intendments are in favor of the regularity of the proceedings.

Section 7, article 1, of the Constitution provides in such cases: "A trial by jury may be waived in all criminal cases, by the consent of both parties, expressed in open court by the defendant and his counsel. * * *" No authority in this state of which we are aware tends to suggest that a departure from the strict construction of this constitutional provision may be justified. It would seem that an assumption of waiver from counsel's remark that a jury had been waived can be afforded no greater weight than an express waiver by counsel who may have been authorized to speak for a defendant. As to such delegation of authority the decisions have consistently held that the accused must personally express consent to proceed without a jury. In People v. Spinato, 100 Cal. App. 600, 280 P. 691, 692, quoting from People v. Garcia, 98 Cal. App. 702, 277 P. 747, the rule was expressed in the following language: "From previous rulings and the express language of the Constitution it is at once obvious that this inviolate constitutional right may not be taken away in disregard of the fundamental legal privilege and power of election guaranteed to the party charged, by attempting to vest in his representative the dual capacity and authority of counsel and accused. Not only is the Constitution explicit as to the parties who may consent to waive a trial by jury, but it is equally definite as to the form in which * * * it must be 'expressed in open court.'" And further: "The issue here presented, and one which was necessarily involved and finally determined in the Garcia Case, is not whether a jury may be waived, but how it may be waived. We repeat what was said in that decision, that where, as in this instance, the Constitution has prescribed the method and form of such waiver, it cannot be otherwise accomplished."

The contention that the corpus delicti was not supported by sufficient evidence aside from the defendant's admissions is untenable. There was positive evidence of the operation of the automobile in question in violation of the statute, and such evidence was not disputed.

The contention that the trial court erroneously denied the defendant the right to file an application for probation is also admitted by the respondent, and requires no discussion. It follows that the judgment must be reversed.

Judgment reversed.

1. Dismissal and nonsuit ⇐60(1).

Oral stipulation for filing of amended complaint over five years after filing of answer, and such complaint, not shown to have been filed, must be disregarded in determining propriety of dismissal for want of prosecution (Code Civ. Proc. § 583).

2. Dismissal and nonsuit ⇐60(6).

Oral understandings, extending time for trial, do not preclude dismissal of action for want of prosecution (Code Civ. Proc. § 583).

Dismissal of action, not brought to trial within five years after defendant filed answer, is mandatory, in absence of written stipulation for extension of time (Code Civ. Proc. § 583).

Application by the Mercantile Development Company and others for a writ of mandate, requiring the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Los Angeles, to dismiss an action against petitioner.

Writ granted.

Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and S. V. O. Prichard, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Louis N. Whealton, Fred Miller, and Raymond J. Kirkpatrick, all of Long Beach, amici curiae.

CRAIG, Acting P. J.

A civil action commenced in 1924 against the petitioner herein and others was continued from time to time, and was brought to trial on April 12, 1926; but the same was again continued owing to defective pleadings. On April 27 and 29, 1926, following amendments to the complaint, answers were filed. Numerous further continuances of the trial date followed, and on February 3, 1932, the action was dismissed. The order of dismissal was vacated upon motion of the plaintiff, and the defendants instituted the instant proceeding in mandamus, praying that said action be dismissed. The return to the alternative writ presents in resistance of the petition an asserted answer claimed to have been filed within five years next preceding said dismissal, and a stipulation in writing that the trial of the case might be held "on the 10th day of November, 1931, or such day subsequent thereto as may suit the convenience of the court."

[1] The answer mentioned was originally filed, as above stated, more than five years before the order of dismissal was entered; but in November, 1931, it was stipulated by the parties that a third amended complaint might be filed by the plaintiff, and that said answers of April, 1926, might be deemed the pleadings of the defendants thereto. However, so far as appears, such complaint was not filed, nor was the stipulation reduced to writing or delivered to the clerk of the trial court, and they must therefore be disregarded. Nor does it appear that the trial was commenced on the 10th day of November, 1931, as previously stipulated. Section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides in part, that: "The court may in its discretion dismiss any action for want of prosecution on motion of the defendant and after due notice to the plaintiff, whenever plaintiff has failed for two years after answer is filed to bring such action to trial. Any action heretofore or hereafter commenced shall be dismissed by the court in which the same shall have been commenced or to which it may be transferred on motion of the defendant, after due notice to plaintiff or by the court upon its own motion, unless such action is brought to trial within five years after the defendant has filed his answer, except where the parties have stipulated in writing that the time may be extended."

⇐For other cases see same topic and KEY NUMBER in all Key Number Digests and Indexes

[2-4] It is insisted that extenuating facts and circumstances which appear by affidavits tend to show that a dismissal would amount to an abuse of discretion. Oral understandings are not within the protection of the provisions of said section in such a case. Perrin v. Miller, 35 Cal. App. 129, 169 P. 426. The fact that the parties stipulated that the trial might be had on a date subsequent to the expiration of the five-year period does not preclude the defendants from insisting upon a dismissal, when it appears that numerous continuances during such period have been stipulated by the parties. Boyd v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 185 Cal. 344, 197 P. 58. The statute evinces an intent to cover the entire subject of dismissals for failure to bring an action to trial after answer filed, and after the expiration of five years a dismissal is mandatory. Romero v. Snyder, 167 Cal. 216, 138 P. 1002. Cited authorities warranting a different conclusion we think distinguish themselves from the facts here presented.

The writ of mandate is granted.

Pleading ⇐406(7).

Failure of propounders to demur to contestant's allegation of testator's general mental incompetency held waiver of alleged ambiguity, in contestant's pleading (Code Civ. Proc. § 434).

Failure of the propounders to demur to such allegation was, under Code Civ. Proc. § 434, a waiver of the ambiguity, if any, in contestant's allegation of testator's general mental incompetency, so that contestant was not bound to amend although given permission by the court to amend when propounders claimed contestant's pleading was ambiguous.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Proceeding by the Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Company, as executor of the estate of Alfred Fry Broad, deceased, for the probate of the purported will of decedent, under which Gerald Jackson and others were legatees, contested by Louise M. Broad, decedent's widow, and another. From the orders of the superior court, named contestant appeals. On motion to dismiss the appeal or to affirm the orders.

Motion denied.

Milton Marks, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Harry G. McKannay, of San Francisco, for respondent Harriet Kemp.

F. V. Keesling and Garton D. Keyston, both of San Francisco, for executor, etc.

STURTEVANT, J.

After the death of Alfred F. Broad a document purporting to be his will was admitted to probate. Afterwards his surviving widow filed a contest. At about the same time a surviving daughter filed a contest. The respondents did not demur, but filed answers. A jury was waived and both causes were tried together before the trial judge sitting without a jury.

Immediately after the cause was called for trial the contestants started to make an opening statement. They were interrupted by the respondents, who claimed that the pleadings were not clear, but were ambiguous. The trial court gave the contestants permission to amend and that the amended pleadings could be filed at a later date. Such pleadings were not filed. In their opening statement both of the contestants claimed that the testator was of unsound mind at the time he executed the document purporting to be his will. Later they introduced evidence to that effect. The trial court made findings of fact in favor of the respondents on that issue and other material issues. From the orders based thereon the surviving wife has appealed.

It is not claimed that she has not filed proper transcripts nor that her brief is not on file (Code Civ. Proc. § 954), nevertheless the respondents have filed a motion to dismiss or to affirm, relying on subdivision 3, rule V, as adopted May 6, 1932, Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal.

In support of the motion the respondents contend that this contestant did not plead general mental incompetency of the deceased and that she did not amend after permission was given to her to amend. We think the appellant attempted to plead general mental incompetency. If her pleading was ambiguous the respondents waived the attack by failing to demur. Code Civ. Proc. § 434. Therefore appellant was not bound to amend. As the motion rests on the assumption that this contestant did not plead that the decedent was of unsound mind, it follows that the motion is not well founded.

It is therefore ordered that the motion be and it is hereby denied, and it is further ordered that the respondents be and they are hereby given twenty days from and after filing of this order within which to prepare, serve, and file their brief.

Action by the A. S. O'Neil Construction Company against A. H. MacDonald. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Carroll Allen, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Cooper & Collings, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J.

Pursuant to a contract made between these parties, the plaintiff constructed for the defendant a hotel building at Las Vegas, Nev. This action was brought to recover an alleged balance claimed as due on the contract. Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff. Defendant appeals therefrom.

[1] There are no specifications of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings of fact. The findings are sufficient to support the judgment. Appellant contends that the court erred in holding that defendant waived any imperfections, alterations, etc., in the building, and was estopped from asserting any claim for damages or for breach of contract. But, since it does not appear that there were any valid claims for damages, the suggested point becomes immaterial.

[2] The only other point is that the court erred in admitting evidence, over objections, as to extras, etc., which were not the subject of any writing. Appellant has not presented enough of the record to enable us to see that, even if the court did err in this matter, the error would be of any importance in the consideration of this appeal. Apparently the court overruled the objection to the particular question then presented, and admitted the evidence because it showed an oral executed agreement, and also because the matter had been brought into the record by the defendant himself on cross-examination of a witness.

We think that the appeal is entirely without merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

This is an application for the writ of supersedeas. The action was commenced for the purpose of securing a writ of mandate to compel the appellants to permit an inspection of the books of two corporations. The writ was granted, and defendants have perfected an appeal and applied for the writ. An application for the writ of supersedeas is addressed to the sound discretion of the court in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction. Luckenbach v. Krempel, 188 Cal. 175, 204 P. 591; In re Albori, 95 Cal. App. 42, 272 P. 321. The appellants here have failed to demonstrate to us by portions of the record or otherwise a situation which warrants us in interfering with the ordinary processes of the law. It is claimed that certain findings are not supported by the evidence, but we are not furnished with anything further from which we may hazard a guess that the trial court was in error. A legal contention is advanced which may possibly have merit but which on its face seems rather barren of possibilities.

Suit by Hermine Heintz against August Henry Heintz, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint. From the decree, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Harry I. Stafford and Daniel R. Shoemaker, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

G. R. Perkins, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

An appeal by plaintiff from an interlocutory decree of divorce granted to her on the ground of defendant's extreme cruelty. The appeal is limited to that portion of the decree by which it is adjudged that certain real property on Hancock street in San Francisco is the separate property of the defendant and that plaintiff has no interest therein.

As stated, the complaint was based on allegations of cruelty, and defendant cross-complained upon like grounds; the findings in this regard being in plaintiff's favor. The court found that the community property of the marriage consisted of a promissory note, certain money, and a parcel of land in or near San Bruno in San Mateo county. Plaintiff was awarded a half interest in the land and note and a portion of the money. It was also found that she owned as her separate property certain household furniture and a parcel of land on Santa Marina avenue in San Francisco. The land in dispute was found to be the separate property of the defendant. Plaintiff claims that the evidence does not support this finding or the part of the decree based thereon, and that an interest in this property should have been awarded to her.

[1, 2] It has been held that where a divorce is granted for an offense of the husband the court, in view of section 139 of the Civil Code, has no power to award to the wife his separate property in kind, its power being limited to a money allowance (Tremper v. Tremper, 39 Cal. App. 62, 177 P. 868; McKannay v. McKannay, 68 Cal. App. 701, 230 P. 214; 1 Cal. Jur. Alimony, § 92, p. 1043); but if the decree is rendered on the ground of adultery or extreme cruelty the statute provides that the community property shall be assigned to the respective parties in such proportions as the court from all the facts of the case and the condition of the parties may deem just (Civ. Code, § 146). The record title to the property in dispute stood in plaintiff's name. Notwithstanding this she alleged in her complaint and testified at the trial that the same was community property, while defendant's pleadings averred the same to be his separate property. In support of his claim he testified that when the property was acquired in 1923 he gave in exchange a ranch which he owned before his marriage, and agreed to pay in addition $2,500; that $500 was paid in cash and the balance from rentals received from the property; further, that the cash payment was made from money which he acquired before his marriage. In addition he testified to payments either from his separate property or the community property of the marriage in satisfaction of a mortgage on plaintiff's Santa Marina avenue property and for improvements thereon. While his testimony was contradicted in many particulars by that of plaintiff, we cannot say that it was inherently improbable. The question of his credibility and the weight to be given his testimony were for the trial court, and the evidence was sufficient to support its finding. The judgment, which is sustained by the evidence, is fair to both parties, and nothing has been shown which would justify a reversal.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. Wills ⇨440.

Although will should be read so as to determine testator's intention, intention must be fairly found from wording therein.

Testator's intention must be found from the wording in the will itself, and courts cannot generally supply needed words or expressions nor dismiss from consideration words or expressions in order to arrive at maker's intention.

2. Wills ⇨456.

No strained meaning can be attributed to any word or phrase in will.

3. Wills ⇨446.

Wills should be construed to validate rather than to invalidate them.

4. Perpetuities ⇨4(15).

Provision in will that upon death of testatrix' nieces who were testatrix' grandnieces' cobeneficiaries under testamentary trust, trust should terminate provided grandnieces should have reached age of 50 or died, held not to violate rule against perpetuities (Civ. Code, § 715; Const. art. 20, § 9).

Such provision was not invalid so as to render the trust itself invalid as violative of Const. art. 20, § 9, relative to the rule against perpetuities, or of Civ. Code, § 715, relative to the rule against the suspension of alienation, since testatrix' evident intention as determined by considering whole will was to provide for each of the nieces during her lifetime and for each of the grandnieces, at least until she became 50 years of age; the intention not being that the provision for terminating the trust be limited to the moment of the death of last surviving niece.

STEPHENS, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal by Richmond A. Edwards, a nephew of decedent and a legatee under her will, from a final decree of distribution and from an order of the probate court denying his petition for a distribution of certain portions of the estate in accordance with his contention that certain trust provisions of the will are invalid.

Appellant is entitled to a one-twelfth share in any estate with respect to which the decedent died testate. The will provided for certain gifts which we need not consider. We shall quote such parts of the document as is necessary to a full understanding of the controversy: "Seventh: I give and bequeath to Security First National Bank of Los Angeles, a corporation, the sum of sixty thousand (60,000) dollars in trust nevertheless for the following uses and purposes: To collect, hold, manage, invest and reinvest the same, and to pay the net income therefrom as follows." ews.) "As each of my said nieces and nephews die, then the share of the principal of the trust fund of the one so dying in the trust fund created by this paragraph of my will shall be added to the residuum of my estate and be disposed of as provided in paragraph 8 of this my will. Eighth: All the rest, residue and remainder of my property, real, personal and mixed, and wheresoever the same may be situate or being, I give, devise and bequeath to Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles, a corporation, in trust nevertheless for the following uses and purposes: To collect, hold, manage, sell, lease, control and possess, invest and reinvest the same, and pay the net income therefrom to the following persons and in proportions as follows: To pay the sum of twenty-five (25) dollars per month to Miss Lolita Krug, or to the superintendent of such sanitarium or other institution as the said Lolita Krug may be confined in, for her benefit for and during the life of said Lolita Krug and upon her death such payments shall cease. The balance of said net income (and upon the death of said Lolita Krug, all of said income) shall be paid as follows"—one-seventh thereof to each of decedent's nieces and grandnieces, namely, Abby Edwards Randall, Dorothy Edwards, Margaret E. Agnew, Miriam B. Edwards, Patricia A. Ryon, and Anna Bermingham Edwards. "Should either of my said nieces or grand-nieces die leaving lawful issue her surviving, then the share of the income of the one so dying shall go to such issue; however, should either of my said nieces or grand-nieces die leaving no lawful issue her surviving, then the share of the income of the one so dying shall go to the survivor or survivors of my said nieces and grand-nieces. Upon the death of the last of my four nieces in this Paragraph 8 above named, this trust shall cease and terminate, provided my said grand-nieces shall have attained the age of fifty years (or shall have died) and the property so held in trust by my said trustee shall go to and vest per stirpes in my said grand-nieces and in the lawful issue of my said four nieces and in the lawful issue of any of my grand-nieces who may have died prior to the termination of this trust; and should all of my said nieces and grand-nieces die without lawful issue her or them surviving, then the property so held in trust shall go to and vest in my said nephews, Archie M. Edwards and John S. Edwards, or should they die prior to the termination of this trust, to their lawful issue, per stirpes, or as they, my said nephews, may by will designate." (Italics ours.)

Appellant claims that the part of the will italicized for convenience and reading, "Upon the death of the last of my four nieces in this Paragraph 8 above named, this trust shall cease and terminate, provided my said grand-nieces shall have attained the age of fifty years (or shall have died)," leaves the distribution of the property placed in trust under this paragraph subject to a condition that may never happen; that upon the death of the nieces the events mentioned in the proviso may not have occurred and for that reason is ineffective. If ineffective, then the trust sought to be created by paragraph 8 of the will is itself ineffective and invalid as violative of article 20, section 9, of the Constitution and section 715 of the Civil Code. The constitutional provision refers to the rule against perpetuities and the Code provision to the rule against the suspension of alienation.

The case presents only a controversy over the construction of language.

[1-3] It is apparent to us that decedent intended to dispose of all of her property by this will. It is also apparent that her primary intention in paragraph 8 was to provide an income for her nieces during their lifetime and for the younger generation, to wit, the daughters of her nieces, up to the ripe period of fifty years. After this had been accomplished she no longer sought to limit the use of her estate except to provide that it should be distributed to the heirs of those specifically mentioned in said paragraph. No other intention can be deducted from a careful reading of the whole questioned paragraph. Of course, while a will should be read so as to arrive at the intention of the maker, such intention must be fairly found from the wording of the will itself and courts cannot generally supply needed words or expressions nor dismiss from consideration words or expressions in order to arrive at the maker's intention. Then, too, construction of the English language is too inaccurate to arrive at the meaning of any phrase by a strict adherence to the dictionary definition of its component words or by isolating it from its context. On the other hand, no strained meaning can be attributed to any word or phrase used. Wills should be construed to validate them rather than to invalidate them.

[4] With these general principles in mind, and no authority seems necessary to support them, let us examine the paragraph and see whether or not the evident intention of the maker is within a reasonable interpretation of the language used. If we must conclude that the provision for terminating the trust is limited to the moment of death of the last surviving niece, then unquestionably the provision that the grandnieces shall either be dead or have then arrived at fifty years of age injects a condition precedent that may never be realized. But we think such a construction is contrary to the evident plan and, of course, acts to invalidate the whole paragraph and possibly paragraph 7 of the will, though we are not here deciding that point. If, however, we look upon the paragraph as saying in effect, "I want to provide for each of my nieces during her lifetime and for each of my grand-nieces at least until she is 50 years of age, after that the property to be distributed to my surviving grandnieces or the lawful issue of my deceased grand-nieces," we have not only done no violence to the simple rules and logic of construction, but have read the paragraph so as to keep all of its provisions valid and so as to effectively sustain the unmistakable intention of the testator. It is a question of how much of the passage modifies the word "upon." Appellant asks us to hold that no part of the passage modifies "upon" excepting that which refers to the death of the nieces, but such a construction vitiates the whole trust plan. It is just as reasonable from the standpoint of construction and much more reasonable, when the whole paragraph is considered, to hold that all of the passage modifies the word "upon." That is, the trust ends when the nieces are dead, and it is also true when the grandnieces are either dead or over fifty years old. Otherwise the trust shall continue according to the other terms of the paragraph.

We think appellant's petition for distribution of a part of the estate to him as property left intestate was properly denied and that the order of the distribution which sustained the trust provisions of both paragraphs 7 and 8 was correct.

The orders are affirmed.

Appellate court would not dismiss appeal for lack of diligence in preparing transcript, where court officer's oversight caused delay (Code Civ. Proc. § 953a; Rule VI of Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal).

2. Appeal and error ⇐628(2).

Where court officer's oversight caused delay in preparing transcript, respondent's remedy is to move trial court to terminate proceedings for preparing transcript, and, until terminated, appellate court will not dismiss appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 953a; Rule VI of Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal).

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County.

Action by M. W. Brashears against Frank Giannini. From the judgment, defendant appeals, and plaintiff files a motion to dismiss the appeal.

Motion denied.

Russell & Heid, of Tulare, for appellant.

Walker R. Flint, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BARNARD, P. J.

The respondent has moved to dismiss the appeal taken in this action upon the ground of lack of diligence in preparing and filing a transcript of the proceedings in the trial court.

It may first be observed that the moving party has failed to make any showing, by certificate or by affidavit, that no proceeding for the preparation of a transcript is still pending in the trial court. Rule VI of Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal.

In opposition to this motion, a showing has been made that the appellant filed on March 30, 1932, a notice to prepare the transcript on appeal in accordance with section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that he thereafter made arrangements with the official reporter for the payment of his compensation for the preparation of said transcript. It further appears that, through some oversight or inadvertence, the official reporter was not informed of the filing of this notice to prepare transcript until August 23, 1932, and that upon the application of said official reporter the trial court entered an order extending the time in which to prepare said transcript to October 1, 1932. By affidavit and by the certificate of the clerk, it appears that proceedings for the preparation of said transcript are still pending in the trial court, and have not been terminated or ended therein.

[1, 2] While there has been considerable delay in the preparation of this transcript, it would appear that such delay has occurred through some oversight or inadvertence on the part of some officer of the court, and no fault on the part of the appellant is shown. The law is well settled that under such circumstances the remedy of the respondent is by way of a motion in the trial court for the purpose of terminating the proceedings for the preparation of such a transcript, and that until such proceedings have been there terminated an appellate court will not dismiss the appeal. Mill Valley v. Massachusetts, etc., Co., 189 Cal. 52, 207 P. 253; Crocker v. Crocker, 76 Cal. App. 606, 245 P. 438; Engstrom v. Atkins, 102 Cal. App. 393, 283 P. 79.

For the reasons given, the motion is denied.

1. Executors and administrators ⇐111(1).

Probate court cannot allow executors for extraordinary attorney's services, except upon application of attorney who has already rendered services (Probate Code, §§ 900, 910, 911).

Creditor held not entitled to certiorari restraining allowance to executors for reporter's transcript for resistance of appeal from judgment on creditor's exceptions to executors' account (Probate Code, § 900).

Creditor was not entitled to certiorari, since executors did not need to secure the permission of the court to make this expenditure, nor was the permission of the court a final determination of the propriety of the expenditure, so that no good purpose could be served by vacating the order allowing the reporter's transcript at the expense of the estate; the creditor having his remedy in his right to except to the item on final settlement of the executors' account, and the right to appeal from an adverse judgment on his exception.

Petition for certiorari by Clarence Ludwig against the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Los Angeles, and Haakon Berg and another, executors of the estate of Stephen M. Meyers, deceased.

Judgment in accordance with opinion.

Pottle & Pottle, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Charles R. Dyer and Mark A. Hall, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, Acting P. J.

The executors of the estate of Stephen M. Meyers, deceased, filed with the Superior Court their first account and report, to which the petitioner interposed numerous exceptions, certain of which were overruled, whereupon said petitioner appealed and presented for settlement a proposed bill of exceptions. Thereafter the attorney for the executors made application for an order to procure the reporter's transcript of evidence adduced upon the hearing of the exceptions to said account and to employ special counsel to act in the place and stead of said counsel for the executors in resisting the appeal. This latter application was granted by the court below. The petitioner thereupon applied to this court for a review of such last-mentioned order, upon the ground, as stated by him, that the expenses of sustaining items of an executor's account which deprive an estate of money are not properly chargeable against the estate, and that the services of other counsel would not be rendered to said estate, nor would they be extraordinary services contemplated by the Probate Code.

[1] The respondents urge that articles 1 and 2 of chapter 15 (section 900 et seq.) of the Probate Code, and decisions upholding applications of executors or administrators for allowances of expenditures necessarily made for services and transportation of their counsel, justified the order in controversy in that respect. Section 900 (article 1) reads in part as follows: "The executor or administrator shall be allowed all necessary expenses in the care, management and settlement of the estate, and, for his services, the compensation hereinafter provided. * * *" Sections 910 and 911 (article 2), respectively, read as follows:

"Attorneys for executors and administrators shall be allowed out of the estate, as fees for conducting the ordinary probate proceedings, the same amounts as are allowed by the previous article as commissions to executors and administrators; and such further amount as the court may deem just and reasonable for extraordinary services.

"Any attorney who has rendered services to an executor or administrator, at any time after six months from the issuance of letters testamentary or of administration, and upon such notice to the executor or administrator and to the persons interested in the estate as the court or a judge thereof shall require, may apply to the court for an allowance upon his fees; and on the hearing the court shall make an order requiring the executor or administrator to pay such attorney out of the estate such compensation, on account of services rendered up to that time, as the court shall deem proper, and such payment shall be made forthwith."

It does not appear from the record before us that the executors' attorney claimed to have rendered services, nor that any attorney who had rendered services for which application to the court for an allowance upon his fees was authorized presented a claim therefor, upon notice or otherwise. In re Rose's Estate, 80 Cal. 166, 22 P. 86, 89, approved an allowance of a "credit for payments made for the services and traveling expenses of his [the administrator's] attorney, not exceeding a reasonable compensation for the labor actually performed," after the conclusion of two appeals. Other citations of respondents disclose no sanction of the allowance of a further amount for extraordinary services except upon application of an attorney who has rendered services to an executor or administrator. Painter v. Estate of Painter, 78 Cal. 625, 21 P. 433; Estate of Prather, 183 Cal. 314, 191 P. 521.

[2] The remaining question is as to whether or not an order should issue for a reporter's transcript, at the expense of the estate, for resistance of an appeal by a creditor. The executors did not need to secure permission of the court to make this expenditure. The giving of such permission, however, is not a final determination of the propriety of the expenditure nor of its being a proper charge. Since this is so, no good purpose can be served by vacating the order of which complaint is made. The petitioner has his remedy in his right to object to this item on final settlement of the executors' account, and if the question is then decided adversely to him, to an appeal from such decision. Estate of Smith, 118 Cal. 462, 50 P. 701.

The order is annulled as to the allowance of attorney's fees. With respect to the order for a reporter's transcript the writ is dismissed.

BROWN v. GOW.

Civ. 660.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 20, 1932.

1. Appeal and error ⇨801(5).

Appeal should be dismissed where question involved can be determined as unsubstantial from appellant's opening brief alone, but if examination of entire record is required dismissal should be denied (Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 5, § 3).

Motion to dismiss appeal should be denied if unsubstantiality of appeal cannot be determined from consideration of appellant's opening brief, together with the assistance of argument of counsel for respondent and the points and authorities filed in support of the motion to dismiss, because otherwise it would make of the motion to dismiss, in reality, a motion to advance on the calendar of the appellate court, appeals there pending, and would require the reviewing court to twice examine the entire record.

2. Appeal and error ⇨801(5).

Motion to dismiss appeal as based on unsubstantial question held denied where determination of sufficiency and admissibility of evidence and whether error was prejudicial required examination of entire record (Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 5, § 3).

Questions involved as set out in appellant's brief consisted of alleged errors in exclusion of certain book account, and of admission of certain receipts and checks without showing to whom such checks and receipts were delivered, or for what purpose, with appropriate reference to exhibits and to pages and lines of the reporter's transcript where the testimony referred to was to be found; error in declaring certain evidence immaterial because of production of other evidence; and question, although error may have been committed, whether such error was prejudicial to appellant's rights as to require a reversal of the judgment.

Motion denied.

JENNINGS, J.

[1] This is a motion to dismiss an appeal or to affirm the judgment of the trial court. The notice of motion filed herein specifies that the ground of the motion is that the questions upon which the decision of the cause depends are so unsubstantial as to require no further argument and the appeal is entirely lacking in merit. It is further specified in the notice of motion that it will be based upon "Appellant's Opening Brief, the Clerk's Transcript, the Reporter's Transcript, and the Points and Authorities of respondent in support of this motion served and filed herewith."

The motion is presented pursuant to the provisions of the new section 3 of rule V of the rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, which became effective on July 1, 1932. Unsubstantiality of questions involved in the appeal is made the principal ground for invoking the power of an appellate tribunal wherein the appeal is pending to dismiss such appeal or to affirm the judgment or order from which the appeal is taken. If this unsubstantiality is apparent upon consideration of appellant's opening brief alone, invocation of the power to dismiss an appeal or to affirm a judgment is manifestly proper and in strict conformity with the obvious purpose of the rule, viz., the more rapid disposition of appeals. If, however, consideration of appellant's opening brief, together with the assistance furnished by the argument of counsel for respondent and the points and authorities filed in support of the motion to dismiss, does not enable the appellate court to arrive at a decision that the appeal lacks merit and final decision of the motion requires examination of the entire record, a different problem is presented. The logical effect of the latter procedure will be to make of the motion to dismiss, in reality, a motion to advance, on the calendar of the appellate court, appeals there pending. A second and not less important effect produced thereby is that in all cases where the motion to dismiss or to affirm is denied the reviewing court will be required twice to examine the entire record. While the expeditious disposal of appeals is a "consummation devoutly to be wished for," the adoption of a policy with respect to the rule under consideration whose effect will be, in many instances, to double the labors of the reviewing court and materially to increase the time required for examination of appeals, may well defeat the very end desired. It is, therefore, our opinion that when it can be determined from appellant's opening brief alone that the questions involved in the appeal are so unsubstantial as to require no further elucidation, a motion of the character here considered should be granted. If, however, in the ordinary case, the unsubstantiality cannot be thus determined and an examination of the entire record is required for such determination, a motion to dismiss or to affirm the judgment should be denied.

In the appellant's brief filed herein the questions involved are thus stated:

"I. Is the evidence insufficient to support the findings:

"a. That the amount paid plaintiff was the agreed and reasonable wage where the only evidence is admissions by deceased that he owed plaintiff a larger amount, and where amount paid is not the wage prescribed by law for women.

"b. That plaintiff's claim was paid, where only evidence is receipt which the uncontradicted and only evidence shows was given in connection with another transaction.

"II. That said findings are erroneous.

"III. Did the court err in excluding evidence as to book account kept by plaintiff, and in admitting checks and receipts without foundation as to whom or for what given."

[2] Consideration will first be given to the third of the above-stated questions. It is the contention of appellant that the court committed two errors in the exclusion and admission of certain evidence and that these errors warrant a reversal of the judgment. The first of the alleged errors consists of the exclusion by the court of a certain book account kept by appellant. The second error charged consists in the admission by the court of certain receipts and checks without showing to whom such checks and receipts were delivered, or for what purpose or to cover what accounts. Objection is also made that the court erred in admitting sixteen check stubs from the check book of respondent's testator without any showing that the checks corresponding with the stubs were ever delivered to appellant, or that they were paid. Respondent, on the other hand, states that a proper foundation for the admission of the receipts and checks was laid and cites the name of a certain witness who, it is claimed, testified that each receipt was signed by appellant and that each check offered in evidence bore her indorsement. It is also declared that a second named witness identified the signature of respondent's testator to each check. Appropriate reference is made to the exhibits and to the pages and lines of the reporter's transcript where the testimony to which reference is made is to be found. As to the stubs from the check book, it is declared that they were immaterial because of the production of other evidence which, it is claimed, showed payment to appellant by respondent's testator during the period when the checks corresponding to the stubs were issued. It is apparent that, for the proper determination of this question of the admissibility of the receipts, checks, and check stubs, examination of the record is required, first, for the purpose of discovering whether a proper foundation for the admission of the instruments was laid, and second, whether, although error may have been committed in their admission, such error was so prejudicial to appellant's rights as to require a reversal of the judgment therefor.

With reference to the first and second questions, we are likewise of the opinion that proper determination of them will require an examination of the entire record herein.

In accordance therefore, with our hereinabove announced view of the rule here considered, it is our opinion that respondent's motion should be denied. It is so ordered.

STURTEVANT, J.

From a judgment in favor of the defendant in an action to quiet title, the plaintiff has appealed and has brought up a bill of exceptions. The complaint was in the usual form. In its answer the defendant interposed some denials, and then it pleaded affirmatively facts showing that on December 10, 1929, it purchased the property at a sale held by the trustee named in a certain deed of trust. On the trial evidence was introduced showing that notice was given that the sale would be held on October 29, 1929. On the latter date the sale was continued until November 29, 1929. On the 27th day of November, 1929, an order to show cause was issued in an injunction case directing the defendants in that case to show cause on December 5, 1929, why an injunction pendente lite should not issue restraining the holding of the sale. Said order contained a passage as follows: "It is ordered that the defendants and each, and all of them, and all their servants, agents and attorneys, and all other persons acting in their behalf, do desist and refrain from selling or attempting to sell, or continuing the sale, of the real property, or any part thereof, described in that certain deed of trust dated the 19th day of September, 1928." The order was served on the trustee, and, when the hour fixed for the sale arrived on November 29, 1929, the trustee continued the holding of the sale until the 10th day of December, 1929. On the date last mentioned the sale was held.

[1] The plaintiff calls attention to the fact that the act of the trustee in continuing the sale from November 29, 1929, to December 10, 1929, was in violation of the language of the restraining order, and he claims that the sale was therefore void. In support of his contention he cites Cohan v. Shibley (Cal. App.) 289 P. 169; Bagley v. Ward, 37 Cal. 121, 122, 99 Am. Dec. 256; Farnsworth v. Fowler, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 1, 55 Am. Dec. 718; Keys v. Alligood, 178 N. C. 16, 21, 100 S. E. 113. No one of those authorities supports the contention. Where, as here, the attack is collateral, it has been held that, where an injunction had issued restraining the holding of a sale by a trustee under a trust deed, a sale in violation of the injunction was irregular but not void. Bagley v. Ward, supra; Keys v. Alligood, supra; Powell v. Bank of Lemoore, 125 Cal. 468, 472, 58 P. 83. Those cases go further than we are called upon to go because in the instant case the sale was continued in violation of the restraining order, but the sale itself was not held until after the restraining order had been vacated.

[2] The second point made by the plaintiff is that the sale was never postponed from October 29, 1929, to December 10, 1929. In this connection the plaintiff calls attention to the fact that Mr. A. C. McIntyre was an "assistant secretary of the American Securities Company." He also calls attention to a part of the record to the effect that on the 27th day of November, 1929, Mr. McIntyre by letter requested L. W. Beede to postpone the sale from November 29, 1929, to December 10, 1929, and that he signed the letter as assistant vice president. The plaintiff then argues that there is nothing in the record to show that the American Securities Company, trustee in the deed of trust, ever authorized or consented to a postponement of the sale of plaintiff's property under said deed of trust. The point is without merit. The American Securities Company, being a corporation, could act only through its officers and agents. The fact that Mr. McIntyre was assistant secretary was not inconsistent with the fact that he was also an assistant vice president. There was not a particle of evidence that he or any one else exceeded his authority.

On March 26, 1932, the defendant served and filed a notice of motion to dismiss this appeal. The hearing of that motion was continued and was submitted for determination at this time. In view of what has been said above, it becomes unnecessary to pass on the motion.

The judgment is affirmed.

STURTEVANT, J.

[1, 2] The plaintiff commenced an action to recover damages for injuries suffered in an automobile collision. The action was tried before the trial court sitting with a jury. At the end of the defendants' case the defendants made a motion that the jury be directed to bring in a verdict in favor of the defendants. They based their motion on three grounds, one of which was the contributory negligence of the plaintiff. Confining its order to the ground last stated, the court granted the motion and the jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendants. From the judgment entered on the verdict the plaintiff has appealed and has brought up a bill of exceptions.

The accident happened in Stockton street between Sutter and Post in San Francisco. Stockton street runs north and south. Grant avenue is parallel to Stockton and is the next street to the east. Between Grant avenue and Stockton there is an alley known as Campton place. On the 30th day of November, 1929, the intersections of Sutter and Stockton and Post and Stockton were under such traffic regulations that the traffic during alternating periods was allowed to pass and then to stop. At about half past 8 in the morning of that day plaintiff left his hotel to go to a laundry. He passed along the west sidewalk of Stockton street toward the south until he arrived at a point directly opposite Campton place. He then started to cross Stockton toward the right-hand sidewalk of Campton place leading from Stockton to Grant avenue. At the same moment the defendants' truck which had been standing near the sidewalk opposite the western end of Campton place started to back. As it did so it hit the plaintiff, causing the injury complained of. It was stipulated that the territory where the accident happened was located in a central traffic district. The defendants introduced in evidence Ordinance No. 7691, which was then in full force and effect. That ordinance provides that no pedestrian shall cross a roadway other than by a crosswalk when within the central traffic district; that a "roadway" is that portion of a street between the regularly established curb lines; that a "crosswalk" is that portion of a roadway included within the prolongation of curb and property lines and street intersections; that an "intersection" is the area embraced within the prolongation of the property lines of two or more streets which join at an angle; that an "alley" is a street with a roadway less than twenty feet and that a street is the roadway set apart for public travel except alleyways. The defendants called as a witness a certain engineer from the city engineer's office, who testified that he had recently measured Campton place and that at the easterly property line of Stockton street the width was 19 feet 4 inches; that 50 feet east of that point the width was 19 feet 8 inches; and 100 feet east of that point the width was 19 feet 5 inches. If Ordinance No. 7691 is a valid enactment, it follows that at the place where he was injured the plaintiff was there in violation of the terms of the ordinance and that he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. But the plaintiff contends that the ordinance is unreasonable and void. In that connection he argues that a pedestrian cannot know the intersection he is entitled to cross unless he carries a yardstick and first measures it. It will be conceded that the argument is forceful. However, the defendants reply that the use of measurements of distance in regulatory enactments on the subject of traffic regulations is not unusual but quite common. They might also add quite necessary. Continuing, they enumerate other enactments, both civil and criminal, in which certain measurements are adopted regarding the dimensions of buildings, the value of property, and the weights of articles. It is not claimed that Campton place is the only thoroughfare in San Francisco that is less than 20 feet in width. On the other hand, it is stated in the briefs that there are hundreds of similar intersections. In passing on the validity of an ordinance or a statute it will be presumed that it is valid. He who would claim that it is invalid must assume the burden of showing its invalidity. 42 C. J. 623. Neither party cites an authority that is directly in point. In the time we have had to investigate the subject we have not found one. However, cases are numerous that are very helpful.

In the case of Euclid, Ohio, Village of, v. Ambler Realty Co., 272 U. S. 365, 47 S. Ct. 114, 71 L. Ed. 303, 54 A. L. R. 1016, the court was called upon to pass on the validity of a zoning ordinance. It was claimed that the zoning ordinance enacted by the village of Euclid was unreasonable. By the terms of that ordinance it applied or did not apply according to numerous measurements of length, breadth, and height. Commencing on page 386 of 272 U. S., 47 S. Ct. 114, 118, the court said: "Building zone laws are of modern origin. They began in this country about 25 years ago. Until recent years, urban life was comparatively simple; but, with the great increase and concentration of population, problems have developed, and constantly are developing, which require, and will continue to require, additional restrictions in respect of the use and occupation of private lands in urban communities. Regulations, the wisdom, necessity, and validity of which, as applied to existing conditions, are so apparent that they are now uniformly sustained, a century ago, or even half a century ago, probably would have been rejected as arbitrary and oppressive. Such regulations are sustained, under the complex conditions of our day, for reasons analogous to those which justify traffic regulations, which, before the advent of automobiles and rapid transit street railways, would have been condemned as fatally arbitrary and unreasonable. And in this there is no inconsistency, for, while the meaning of constitutional guaranties never varies, the scope of their application must expand or contract to meet the new and different conditions which are constantly coming within the field of their operation. In a changing world it is impossible that it should be otherwise. But although a degree of elasticity is thus imparted, not to the meaning, but to the application of constitutional principles, statutes and ordinances, which, after giving due weight to the new conditions, are found clearly not to conform to the Constitution, of course, must fall."

In the case of Snyder v. Campbell, 145 Miss. 287, 110 So. 678, 49 A. L. R. 1402, the Supreme Court of Mississippi was called upon to pass on the validity of the provisions of the traffic ordinance of the city of Laurel. That ordinance provided that crosswalks would be marked at certain intersections and that it was unlawful for pedestrians to cross the marked streets at other places. It was contended the ordinance was unreasonable. The court cited the Euclid Case, quoted from it, and held the ordinance to be reasonable.

In the case of People's Rapid Transit Co. v. Atlantic City, 105 N. J. Law, 286, 144 A. 630, the court was called upon to consider an ordinance which prohibited certain autobuses from driving on or using certain streets at any time. There, as here, it was claimed that the ordinance was unreasonable; however, after a careful consideration of the authorities, the court held that the attack was not well founded.

In Village of Wonewoc v. Taubert, 203 Wis. 73, 233 N. W. 755, 72 A. L. R. 224, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin was considering an ordinance which required automobiles to be parked on the center line of the street. It was claimed the ordinance was unreasonable. On page 757 of 233 N. W., 203 Wis. 73, the court quoted as follows: "The plaintiff's contention, when reduced to its last analysis, is that, under this act of the Legislature, all automobile owners and drivers are given full license to stop their cars upon the public streets when and where they please and for such a length of time as suits their pleasure and convenience, and to leave them standing there, though to the great prejudice and inconvenience of the general public desiring to use the streets for their primary purposes; and the city whose duty it is to keep the streets open and free from nuisance, is rendered as helpless as the shackled prisoner at the bar. The mere statement of the proposition is its own answer."

[3] The very subject-matter of a traffic ordinance of necessity deals almost solely with courses and distances. Witness the testimony in every action based on a collision of automobiles. The regulation of traffic is itself a compilation of certain regulatory measures regarding courses and distances. California Vehicle Act, §§ 106, 107, 109, 113, 127, 128, 136, 138, et seq. (St. 1923, p. 517 et seq., as amended). The necessity of carrying a yardstick is no more burdensome with reference to one regulation than with reference to another regulation. Counsel cite us to no method of regulation that is more reasonable. None occurs to us.

It follows that the judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

GENERAL MILL & LUMBER CO. v. ROBERTSON et al.

Civ. 8532.

Sept. 21, 1932.

Principal and agent ⇐189(1).

Complaint alleging that defendant was agent of, and acting for, codefendant at all times mentioned held sufficient to charge latter as principal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John J. Allen, Judge.

Action by the General Mill & Lumber Company against H. L. Robertson, Arabelle Siemsen, and others. From a judgment against defendant Siemsen, she appeals.

Affirmed.

True Van Sickle, of Oakland, for appellant.

L. L. Steele, of Oakland, for respondent.

GEORGE H. THOMPSON, Justice pro tem.

The plaintiff, General Mill & Lumber Company commenced action in the lower court on three separate counts of its complaint, to establish indebtedness against the said defendants and to foreclose against the said defendants liens set forth in the said three counts. To the said complaint and to each count thereof the said defendant Arabelle Siemsen filed an answer. During the course of the trial of said action, said plaintiff dismissed said action as to the real property described in the complaint and abandoned its action for foreclosure of the respective liens.

The said action was tried upon the issues raised by plaintiff's complaint and defendant's answer thereto. The court upon the submission of said cause of action rendered personal judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against said defendant Arabelle Siemsen on two counts. As to the other count, the court found that the plaintiff was not entitled to personal judgment against the defendant Arabelle Siemsen. The personal judgment so rendered against the defendant Arabelle Siemsen was rendered by the court upon its finding and determination that H. L. Robertson was the agent of Arabelle Siemsen in the purchase of the material and in the employment of labor used in the construction of an apartment building built on her premises. It is contended by the appellant that H. L. Robertson was not the agent of said defendant, but was in fact and in law an independent contractor under a contract with the said defendant in the nature of a cost-plus contract, and it is also contended that the court's finding that said H. L. Robertson was the agent of defendant in the premises is unsupported by either pleading or proof.

In connection with the objection that there was an insufficient pleading that Arabelle Siemsen was principal and that H. L. Robertson was her agent, it must be said that paragraph VIII of the first count of the complaint —repeated in each of the other two counts— reads as follows: "That at all times herein mentioned the above named defendant, H. L. Robertson, was the duly authorized and acting agent of the above named defendant, Arabelle Siemsen, and at all times herein mentioned was acting for and on her behalf." Such a pleading has been held sufficient to charge the principal. See Cochran & Van Winkle v. Goodman, 3 Cal. 244, where it is held that a declaration setting forth that plaintiff had purchased goods from W. & P. "then and there acting as the agents for defendant" is only another form of declaring that he had purchased from the defendant and is sufficiently certain to prevent any misapprehension of its meaning and is good on demurrer. That declaration is also responsive to the objection of the appellant on like ground to the finding of the court.

As to the proof bearing on the question whether H. L. Robertson was an independent contractor on the cost-plus or other basis or the agent and representative of Arabelle Siemsen in the matters involved herein, we have by reason of the contention of appellant carefully read the record, and while we find presented a situation somewhat unusual in the way of contract, nevertheless it is apparent that the question to be answered in this aspect by the trial court was a mixed question of law and fact under all the evidence in the case (Luckie v. Diamond Coal Co., 41 Cal. App. 468, 183 P. 178), and we think the evidence is sufficient to support the court's finding and conclusion that H. L. Robertson was acting for Arabelle Siemsen as her agent and managing superintendent, and that he was not an independent contractor. As to agency, see 1 Cal. Jur. § 131, p. 854; Schader v. White, 173 Cal. 441, 160 P. 557; Eldridge v. Mowry, 24 Cal. App. 182, 140 P. 978; Puget Sound Lumber Co. v. Krug, 89 Cal. 237, 243, 26 P. 902.

We do not feel warranted in disturbing the judgment of the trial court. The said judgment is affirmed.

STURTEVANT, J.

The petitioner commenced a proceeding to obtain a writ of mandate directed to the defendant Board of Trustees of Monterey Grammar School commanding it to assign the petitioner to her classes as a probationary teacher. The trial court made findings in favor of the defendants and from the judgment entered thereon the petitioner has appealed.

The findings made by the trial court were as follows:

"I. That prior to May 1st, 1931, the petitioner resigned from the employment referred to in the petition, which resignation was to take effect at the end of that school year, to-wit, June 12th, 1931.

"II. That the averments of Paragraph II of the Answer are true." (Paragraph II was as follows: "The respondents allege that at the commencement of the school year of 1931–1932, to-wit, on August 31st, 1931, the petitioner absented herself and failed to report for duty as teacher in the school referred to in the petition.")

"III. That prior to June 10th, 1931, the petitioner declined and refused the employment referred to in the petition for the school year of 1931–1932, and notified the respondents that she did not intend to teach longer at the school referred to in the petition and declined and refused to accept further employment, after June 12th, 1931, as teacher by the respondents.

"IV. It is not true that at the commencement of the school year 1931–1932, to-wit, on August 31st, 1931, the petitioner reported for duty as a probationary teacher, and it is not true that prior to October 26th, 1931, the petitioner ever demanded of the respondents, or of either of them, that she should be employed as teacher or assigned as teacher in the school referred to in the petition."

The petitioner attacks portions of findings No. I and No. III. She says: "The findings of the trial court we assert are based on evidence which is contradictory and which we challenge as to questions of law." The defendants reply: "Under the constitution, our courts of appeal have appellate jurisdiction only of questions of law. While the question of whether there is any evidence to justify a verdict or findings presents an issue of law, the moment that a conflict in the evidence appears, there is no longer any question of law presented for the consideration of an appellate court." Continuing, the defendants state there is therefore nothing to discuss. The reply is sufficient, but we think the case does not even present a conflict as to material points.

During the school year 1930–31 the petitioner was employed by the defendant board and she acted as one of the teachers. No question regarding her efficiency was involved. Mr. J. H. Graves was the superintendent of the Monterey Grammar School District. Subject to the ratification of the board of trustees he employed the teachers. The contract of employment was made by the use of a blank including two parts. The first part notified the teacher of his or her employment and was signed by the clerk of the board. The second part was in the form of an acceptance, and contained a blank line for the signature of the teacher. Said contracts were made in triplicate. On the 23d day of April, 1931, Mr. Joseph, the principal of Monterey Grammar School, received triplicate contracts for each teacher to be employed during the year 1931–32. He presented to the petitioner the triplicate copies which had been signed by the clerk of the board and asked the petitioner to sign the acceptance. She stated that she was not ready to do so, that she intended to get married and on the opening of the new term she would be a married woman, and that she desired to inform the superintendent. Thereupon Mr. Joseph picked up the blanks and later reported to Mr. Graves. On May 1, 1931, the petitioner called on Mr. Graves and personally told him of her intentions and of her desire to continue in her position. Mr. Graves stated that he was opposed to employing more married women, but that the board of trustees was the employing power and that he would lay the matter before the board. He did so and the next day the petitioner called and asked what action the board had taken. He informed her and thereupon she left. When Mr. Joseph returned the blank contracts to Mr. Graves the latter tore them up and at once commenced a correspondence to obtain a teacher in the petitioner's place. The petitioner vigorously complains because Mr. Graves tore up those unexecuted forms of contract. The record discloses that they were printed blanks. We may assume that Mr. Graves had others to be furnished on application. Moreover, it is perfectly plain that a much more perfect document could have been written by the petitioner or any one else in a very few minutes. However, at no time did the petitioner execute anything purporting to be an acceptance, tender it, and ask to be recognized as a teacher. On August 21, 1931, she appeared at the superintendent's office and asked to be placed on the substitute list. The permission was granted and she was afterwards called and acted as a substitute on October 26, 1931. The school term opened August 31, 1931, and at no time did the petitioner appear or act as a probationary teacher. She took no action whatsoever until October 23, 1931, nearly two months after the school had commenced, and then she addressed to the defendant board a letter in which she asked it "to reinstate me as a probationary teacher. * * *" At this time the petitioner contends that the foregoing facts did not constitute a resignation. She argues that the defendant board did not accept her resignation and that it did not fix the time when such resignation should take effect and therefore that no resignation occurred. School Code, § 5.640. No resignation was necessary. She had been elected for one year. Before the end of that year she was elected for the next year, but she refused to accept that election. Thereupon she ceased to have any claim as to future tenure. Under the contract of employment which the petitioner held April 23, 1931, she was classified as a probationary employee. She was, under the law, required to hold, and did hold, a certificate. If the defendant board took no other action prior to June 10, 1931, she would be "deemed reelected from year to year." Section 5.401. If the defendant board saw fit not to rely on the statute nor to cause the plaintiff to rely on the statute it had the power to re-elect her. That power is clearly implied in section 5.401, which is as follows: "Persons in positions requiring certification qualifications may be elected on or after May second for the next ensuing school year, and each person so elected shall be deemed reelected from year to year except as hereinafter specified." Section 5.402 is as follows: "Any person not under permanent tenure who shall fail to signify his acceptance within twenty days after notice of his election or employment shall have been given him * * * shall be deemed to have declined the same." It likewise implies the power. No section cited to us in any way denies it. If, when notified of such action by the board, this petitioner had said, "No thank you, I am going to get married," no one would have contended that such statement was otherwise than a voluntary declination of employment during the ensuing year. She did not say, "No thank you," but the trial court had the right to place that meaning on the words she used, when taken in connection with her subsequent acts.

We find no error in the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

School Code, §§ 5.681, 5.682 provide that on or before the 10th day of June, the governing board may give notice in writing to a probationary employee that his services will not be required for the ensuing year, and such notice shall be deemed sufficient and complete when delivered in person to such employee by the clerk, or deposited in the United States registered mail with postage prepaid, addressed to such employee at his last known place of address, and section 5.401 provides that, when such notice is not given, the teacher is deemed re-elected from year to year.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; Harry J. Falk, Judge.

Action for writ of mandate by Hattie Belle Reed against the Board of Education of the Monterey Union High School District and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal.

C. F. Lacey, of Salinas, for appellants.

Lemuel D. Sanderson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, P. J.

Plaintiff sued for mandamus to compel the defendants to reassign her to duty in the Monterey High School. She had judgment and defendants appeal upon typewritten transcripts.

The trial court found that plaintiff had been employed as a teacher for three consecutive school years prior to June 11, 1931, and that on June 15, 1931, she received a letter from the clerk of the board of education by ordinary unregistered mail declaring her position vacant. The conceded facts are that prior to June 6, 1931, the respondent had numerous conversations with the superintendent of schools and with the principal of the high school in which she was informed that the board appeared unfavorable to re-electing her for the ensuing term. The superintendent suggested that she resign. She refused. He suggested that her work as a teacher was unsatisfactory; but no charges were filed and no intimation was given by the board that her work was not satisfactory. She obtained from the superintendent and from the principal flattering recommendations of her character and ability as a teacher. These were given with the knowledge that they were to be used publicly in seeking similar employment in the schools of this state. She notified the superintendent that she would attend the summer session at the University of California in Berkeley and left for that purpose on June 9th. On June 6th the board of education passed a resolution purporting to declare her position vacant. A copy of this resolution was mailed without registration to respondent at her old address on June 8th. It was forwarded to Berkeley and received by respondent on June 15th. No other notice was sent or received.

The statute applicable to this proceeding (School Code, §§ 5.681, 5.682) provided that "on or before the tenth day of June in any year the governing board may give notice in writing to a probationary employee that his services will not be required for the ensuing year." "Such notice shall be deemed sufficient and complete when delivered in person to such employee by the clerk * * * or deposited in the United States registered mail with postage prepaid, addressed to such employee at his last known place of address." When such notice is not given as required by the statute, the teacher is "deemed reelected from year to year" (School Code, § 5.401).

[1] The language of the statute is plain and requires no interpretation. Its application to the facts of this proceeding is equally clear. No written notice was personally delivered to the respondent nor addressed to her through the registered mail. As the notice must be in writing all the evidence of oral conversations with the superintendent and others is beyond the issues. Whether written notice was in fact received by the respondent prior to June 10th was a clear question of fact which the trial court determined adversely to appellants. The evidence fully supports this finding and this closes the inquiry on this appeal.

The case is controlled by Blalock v. Ridgway, 92 Cal. App. 132, 267 P. 713, in which the facts are practically identical. Steele v. Board of Trustees (Cal. App.) 9 P.(2d) 217, is not in conflict. There the conceded facts were that a written notice was actually received prior to June 10th. Here the facts and the findings are to the contrary. Two things must concur: The notice must be in writing and must be delivered to the teacher or deposited in the registered mail prior to June 10th. Failure in either respect is an insufficient notice under the statute which automatically re-elects the teacher for the ensuing year. Under certain circumstances, actual receipt of the written notice prior to June 10th, as discussed in the Steele Case, may work an estoppel upon the teacher. But such circumstances are not present here.

[2] Appellants complain that the trial court refused to permit them to try the qualifications of respondent and they urge that she must show that she had served as a successful teacher throughout the preceding year. This is a false issue in this proceeding. The statute provides a clear method whereby the board may dismiss a teacher for incompetence. The board failed to follow that method. The single issue before the trial court was whether the respondent had been re-elected automatically by reason of the statute.

The judgment is affirmed.

From judgments in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Myrick & Deering and Scott, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Edmund J. Holl, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SPENCE, J.

Plaintiff brought two actions seeking to recover on three insurance policies issued by the defendant company. One of these actions (superior court No. 212,855) involved an accident insurance policy and the other (superior court No. 217,765) was based upon two life insurance policies. The actions were consolidated and tried by the court sitting without a jury. Separate judgments were entered in favor of plaintiff, from which judgments defendant appeals upon a bill of exceptions.

Both actions involved the rights of plaintiff under the disability clauses of the policies and we will first outline the nature of plaintiff's injuries and disability as disclosed by the evidence. Plaintiff was a plastering contractor and in his application for the accident policy he "fully described" his occupation and the duties thereof as "Plastering Contractor—Office, Estimating and Supervising Duties Only." On February 18, 1929, and while all the policies were in force, plaintiff fell from a scaffolding and sustained injuries consisting of fractures of both heel bones and a wrenched back. He was confined to a hospital for approximately four months and about a month thereafter was able "to get around." Upon the advice of his physician he then went to the country "where it was warm and where he could walk on soft ground." He remained in Healdsburg for about four months and returned to his home on November 22, 1929. Any disability remaining after he returned was due to the condition of the left foot. The evidence shows that, even at the time of the trial in December, 1930, there had not been a complete recovery in said left foot. There was limitation of motion and some pain with the result that there was some disability. The testimony of both plaintiff and his physician indicated, however, that, since plaintiff returned to his home in November, 1929, he could do many things. He could walk about, but his physician testified that, due to the left heel, he did not believe that plaintiff "could walk uninterruptedly for more than twenty blocks." He could drive an automobile, but the doctor did not "believe a heavy truck could be driven continuously all day by him." Regarding his ability to perform the duties of supervising plastering work, his physician testified: "He will be able to do everything except climb scaffolds and ladders." His physician was then asked: "As far as the work of a contracting plasterer goes, he can do anything in the world except climbing a scaffold, is that about it?" To this question he answered: "As far as I know his duties, if his duties are not too strenuous—for instance I should not think he could carry big beams or things of that sort, but as far as I understand his duties, yes." With reference to his office work, plaintiff himself stated, "There is nothing whatever that would interfere with my doing that." He was asked: "Aside from your left foot what is the matter?" He answered: "There is nothing the matter."

About six months after the foregoing testimony was taken, the case was reopened for further testimony over the objection of defendant. The evidence then introduced showed that plaintiff's physician had since deemed it advisable to perform a further operation on the left foot and had done so. At the time of taking this testimony he still did not think that plaintiff could climb a scaffold, but his prognosis was that plaintiff would be able to resume all of the duties of his occupation in four or five months. He further testified: "The disability under which this man is laboring is a lack of flexibility of the foot because of loss of motion, of sideways motion. So far as carrying sacks of cement or climbing scaffolding, those things I believe he can not well do." It may be here noted that although the testimony showed that the climbing of scaffolds was one of the duties pertaining to plaintiff's occupation, there was no testimony showing that he was required to or did in fact at any time walk any great distances, drive a heavy truck, or carry big beams, sacks of cement, or other heavy objects in connection with his occupation. And it may be further noted that some of such acts would not in any event be in line with the statement of duties as given in respondent's application under which statement of restricted duties he was classified in the policy as one engaged in a "selected ordinary" occupation.

No payments were made by defendant under the life policies, but, after the accident, defendant commenced payment under the accident policy paying a total disability indemnity covering twenty-two weeks and one day in the total sum of $1,107.14, and also hospital indemnity in the sum of $750. Although conceding that further sums were due under the accident policy, a dispute apparently arose as to the totality and permanency of the disability. Thereupon these actions were filed. Briefly stated, plaintiff took the position that at all times after the accident and up to the time the judgments were entered, he was totally disabled within the meaning of the accident policy and that he was totally and permanently disabled within the meaning of the life policies and therefore entitled to the full disability benefits under all of said policies. The trial court so found and concluded and entered judgment accordingly.

Appellant attacks the findings in several particulars, but practically all of the questions raised on this appeal involve an interpretation of the disability clauses of the policies involved. We shall therefore proceed to consider these clauses, first taking up those contained in the accident policy.

The Accident Policy.

The accident policy insured respondent "against loss resulting from bodily injuries effected directly and independently of all other causes solely through accidental means." The disability indemnity clauses were as follows:

"Total disability. If such injuries, independently and exclusively of all other causes, shall wholly and continuously disable the Insured from date of accident from performing any and every kind of duty pertaining to his occupation, the company will pay, so long as the insured lives and suffers such total disability, the weekly indemnity hereinafter specified.

"Partial disability. Or, if such injuries, independently and exclusively of all other causes, shall wholly and continuously disable the insured from date of accident from performing one or more important daily duties pertaining to his occupation, or for like continuous disability following total loss of time, the company will pay, during the period of such disability, but not exceeding fifty-two consecutive weeks, a weekly indemnity of one-half of the amount payable per week for total disability."

[1] Appellant concedes that respondent was totally disabled within the meaning of this policy for some time after the injury. That he was totally disabled while in the hospital cannot be questioned, and appellant has conceded that such total disability may be said to have continued during the entire time that respondent was in the country where he was advised to go by his physician. Appellant contends, however, that any disability existing after November 22, 1929 (the date upon which he returned from the country), was partial rather than total within the meaning of the policy, and that the finding that the disability existing after that date was total is not sustained by the evidence. In our opinion this contention must be sustained. A review of the evidence offered by respondent in support of his claims convinces us that there was no evidence whatever to support the findings to the effect that respondent's disability was total within the meaning of the accident policy after November 22, 1929, and up to the time the case was called for trial. Any disability during that period was due solely to the condition of respondent's left foot. The testimony affirmatively showed that from November 22, 1929, until the trial in December, 1930, respondent could perform "any and every duty pertaining to his occupation" except that his physician did not believe that he could climb scaffolds and ladders. It must be remembered that the duties of respondent's occupation as fully described by him in his application consisted of "Office, Estimating and Supervising Duties Only." His testimony showed that climbing scaffolds and ladders constituted one of the duties pertaining to his occupation, but such acts by no means constituted all or even a substantial portion of such duties. Although the evidence was sufficient to show that after November 22, 1929, he was disabled from performing "one or more important daily duties pertaining to his occupation," such disability was clearly a partial disability and not a total disability as defined in the policy as he was not disabled from performing "any and every duty pertaining to his occupation." Numerous authorities have been cited by both sides on the interpretation of disability clauses but we find none directly in point. No case has been called to our attention construing the precise language employed in the accident policy in question. The language employed in the disability clause of the accident policy seems entirely clear in its application to the facts in the present case, and we find no uncertainty or ambiguity which would bring into play the rule of liberal construction in favor of the assured.

[2] In our opinion appellant's further contention to the effect that respondent was not entitled to even partial disability indemnity under the accident policy after November 22, 1929, cannot be sustained. Appellant argues that the continuing partial disability after that date was not due alone to the injuries but to arthritis, and that there is no liability under the policy as the continuing partial disability did not result from the injuries "independently and exclusively of all other causes." Appellant's position does not find support in the record. There was some testimony regarding arthritis and the effect thereof on respondent's condition, but we need not discuss it for appellant's physician gave his opinion that, regardless of any arthritic complications, the fracture of the left heel alone would have disabled respondent up to the time of the trial. This evidence was sufficient to support the finding that the continuing partial disability resulted from the injuries "independently and exclusively of all other causes."

We therefore conclude that respondent was entitled under the accident policy to total disability indemnity up to November 22, 1929, and to partial disability indemnity for fifty-two weeks following the total disability, being the limit of time provided in the policy for partial disability indemnity.

In the briefs counsel for respondent lays stress upon the fact that between the time that evidence was presented in December, 1930, and the time that the cause was reopened for further evidence in June, 1931, respondent was totally disabled for a time by reason of a further operation. Appellant argues that the condition requiring the further operation was due to arthritic complications and not to the injuries "independently and exclusively of all other causes." In view of our conclusion that respondent was only partially and not totally disabled for more than fifty-two weeks following November 22, 1929, we deem it unnecessary to discuss the cause or causes of the alleged subsequent total disability. In order to recover for any period of total disability under the terms of the policy, it was necessary to show that the assured was "wholly and continuously" disabled from the date of the accident. Even if it be assumed that the alleged total disability following the partial disability resulted solely from the injuries, respondent would not be entitled to the total disability indemnity for such subsequent total disability under the terms of the policy.

[3] One further point should be considered with relation to the accident policy. The policy provided for surgical indemnities in specified amounts for various types of operations. It further provided that "if more than one such operation should be performed on account of such injuries sustained in any one accident, the limit of payment under this Part E shall be the largest sum Specified in the schedule for any one operation." As a result of the accident, respondent had two operations, one on each foot, and the trial court allowed twice the amount specified in the schedule for an operation on "Bones of Foot." This was erroneous as the policy clearly limits the payment of surgical indemnities to the "largest amount specified in the schedule for any one operation so performed."

The Life Policies.

The disability clauses contained in the life insurance policies are essentially different from the above quoted clauses found in the accident policy. These provisions contained in both of the life insurance policies were as follows:

"Total and permanent disability benefit. The Company will pay to the insured a life income of Ten Dollars each month for each $1,000 of the face amount hereof if the said insured shall become totally and permanently disabled, as hereinafter defined, before attaining age sixty. The first payment of such income shall be made immediately upon receipt by the Company of due proof of total and permanent disability, and subsequent payments shall be made monthly thereafter as long as the insured lives and suffers such disability, and shall be in addition to all other benefits provided by this policy.

"Total and permanent disability may be due either to bodily injuries or to disease, which must occur and originate while this policy is in full force after the first premium has been paid, and must be such as to prevent the insured then and at all times thereafter from engaging in any gainful occupation. Total Disability, as defined above, which exists and has existed continuously for not less than three months shall be presumed to be permanent. At any time after approval by the Company of the aforesaid proof and from time to time, but not oftener than once a year after disability has continued for two full years from the date of approval, it may demand of the insured proof of the continuance of such disability and the right to examine the person of the insured. Upon failure to furnish such proof or if it appears that the insured has recovered so as to be able to engage in any gainful occupation, the Company's obligations to pay further Disability Benefits shall cease and the insured shall be required to pay the premiums becoming due on this policy thereafter in accordance with the original terms hereof."

It is appellant's contention that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings to the effect that respondent was "totally and permanently" disabled within the meaning of the life policies, and that therefore respondent was not entitled to any disability benefits thereunder. Upon this subject both appellant and respondent have called our attention to numerous authorities interpreting the "total and permanent" disability clauses of insurance policies. We recently had occasion to review the authorities upon this subject and pointed out in Bagnall v. Travelers' Insurance Company, 111 Cal. App. 714, 296 P. 106, 107, that these authorities are not in accord. We deem it unnecessary, however, to prolong this opinion by a discussion of these authorities as our search has led us to the conclusion that the apparent conflict is attributable to a large extent to the varying terms of the policies considered. It is quite obvious that there is no standard form of "total and permanent" disability clause used in the policies issued by the numerous companies writing such insurance, and no case has been called to our attention construing the clauses embodied in the policies in question. In the Bagnall Case, supra, the policy provided for benefits "upon due proof that * * * the insured has become wholly disabled by bodily injuries or disease and will be continuously and wholly prevented thereby for life from engaging in any occupation or employment for wage or profit." The life policies in the present case provide that the bodily injuries or disease "must be such as to prevent the insured then and at all times thereafter from engaging in any gainful occupation." We believe that these provisions distinguish these cases from many of the authorities cited. In the absence of further provisions in the policies it is apparent that there would be but few disabilities which would meet the test of both totality and permanency as thus defined. In both cases, however, we find what we may term "time clauses." Clauses of this type are frequently found in such policies, but the authorities show that there is but little similarity in the provisions of such time clauses. In both the Bagnall Case and the present case the time fixed was three months, but the time clause which we had occasion to construe in the Bagnall Case is essentially different from the time clause found in the policies in the present case. Here it is provided that "total disability as defined above, which exists and has existed continuously for not less than three months shall be presumed to be permanent." It is further provided that thereafter the company "may demand of the insured proof of the continuance of such disability and the right to examine the person of the assured," and that the company's liability should cease "if it appears that the insured has recovered so as to be able to engage in any gainful occupation."

In the absence of such time clauses expressly creating a presumption of permanency, we are of the opinion that respondent would not be entitled to any disability benefits under the life policies as his disability did not meet the test of being both "total and permanent" as defined in the preceding provisions of the policies. The evidence showed that, after November 22, 1929, and up to the time the case was called for trial, his disability was partial and not total and that even the partial disability was not such as to partially disable him "then and at all times thereafter," his physician testifying upon the subsequent hearing that in his opinion such disability would continue for but four or five months thereafter.

[4-7] However, all of the terms of the policy must be read together and this brings us to a consideration of the presumption referred to above. Respondent's total disability existed continuously for more than three months and therefore such total disability was "presumed to be permanent" within the meaning of the policy. This time clause expressly creating such presumption of permanency seems quite clear. The word "presumed" is defined in Webster's New International Dictionary as "to take or suppose to be true, or entitled to belief without examination or proof, or on the strength of probability; to take for granted; to infer; suppose." But despite the apparent clarity of the words "presumed to be permanent," it is uncertain whether these words were intended to create a conclusive or rebuttable presumption. It has been said that the word "presumed" has "no fast and fixed meaning" and that "in one instance the presumption declared may be only prima facie, and in another, conclusive." Wm. R. Moore Dry Goods Co. v. Rowe & Carithers, 99 Miss. 30, 54 So. 659, 660, note Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1213. In this state it was first indicated that the words "presumed to be valid" in section 172a of the Civil Code created a conclusive presumption (Rice v. McCarthy, 73 Cal. App. 655, 662, 239 P. 56), but subsequently a different conclusion was reached, but largely because of other provisions of the Codes relating to presumptions created by statute (Mark v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co. [Cal. App.] 9 P.(2d) 839). The presumption in the present case is not a creature of statute but is found in the agreement of the parties. We cannot assume that the parties merely intended that the presumption should be rebuttable. It is more logical to assume from a reading of all of the disability provisions of the life policies that the parties intended, by creating the presumption, to definitely set at rest the question of whether a total disability continuing for not less than three months should be treated as "permanent" within the meaning of the policies. While the clauses preceding indicate that the disability must be such as to "prevent the insured then and at all times thereafter from engaging in any gainful occupation," the clauses following clearly indicate that the company intended to assume liability in some cases until "it appears that the insured has recovered so as to be able to engage in any gainful occupation." The preceding clauses indicate the necessity of absolute permanency in order to render the company liable in any case while the clauses following indicate that absolute permanency is not always required. In between stands the clause in question, whereby the parties agreed that total disability existing continuously for not less than three months should be presumed to be "permanent" within the meaning of the policies. We believe that a reading of all of these clauses indicates that the parties intended to create a conclusive rather than a rebuttable presumption to apply so as to entitle the assured to the disability benefits during the entire period that such total disability might continuously exist. At any rate these life policies issued by the company are reasonably subject to such construction and under the settled rule, any doubt or uncertainty must be resolved in favor of the assured. 14 Cal. Jur., p. 443, § 24.

[8] Under this construction, respondent was entitled to the disability benefits under the life policies from the date of the accident up to November 22, 1929, as respondent's total disability, existing continuously during said period of approximately nine months, must be treated as "permanent" within the meaning of the policies. But it follows from what has been said that the findings to the effect that respondent was totally and permanently disabled within the meaning of said life policies after November 22, 1929, are not sustained by the evidence, and that respondent was not thereafter entitled to any disability benefits thereunder.

The judgments appealed from are and each of them is reversed.

Motion denied.

Heaney, Price & Postel and Marjorie Champion, all of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

CRAIG, Acting P. J.

Several actions for damages alleged to have been sustained from personal injuries incurred by the respective plaintiffs therein were filed, consolidated for the purposes of trial, and were tried to the conclusion of the plaintiffs' evidence in the Superior Court of Santa Barbara county. The defendant, an incorporated water district, interposed a formal motion in writing for dismissal of said actions, upon the ground [illegible] from all of the evidence adduced it appeared that the Superior Court was without jurisdiction of the subject-matter thereof; that each of the plaintiffs was an employee of the defendant; that he was injured in the performance of services growing out of and incidental to such employment; that said injuries were proximately caused by the alleged employment; and that the jurisdiction of their demands lay in the Industrial Accident Commission. Said motion was dated and filed on April 7, 1931. Two days thereafter, and on April 9, 1931, after argument of counsel, the trial court announced and there was entered in the clerk's minutes the following: "* * * Defendant's motion for a judgment of nonsuit having heretofore been submitted to this court for consideration and decision and the court having duly considered the same, and being fully advised in the premises now renders its decision thereon from the bench and orders that said motion be and the same is hereby granted. Let judgment be entered accordingly. * * *"

On the same day, April 9, 1931, there was prepared and presented to, and signed by, the judge of said Superior Court a formal "Judgment" in writing, the material portions of which were as follows:

"* * * Each and all of the plaintiffs having rested their case; and in the above-entitled actions as consolidated the defendant having made and presented its motion for a judgment of nonsuit dismissing said actions, and each of them, upon the ground that upon the trial, the plaintiffs have failed to prove a sufficient case for the jury in this, that it appears from all the proof of plaintiffs that this court has no jurisdiction of the subject matter of said consolidated actions for the reason that said plaintiffs were, at the time of the occurrence of the injuries complained of and proven herein, employees of defendant Montecito County Water District, an employer as defined and contemplated by the 'Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917' * * *; [St. 1917, p. 831, as amended] that said Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California has sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the claims of the plaintiffs proven in these actions, and of the subject matter of these actions, and that this court is entirely without jurisdiction of the claims of the plaintiffs proven in these actions, and of the subject matter of these actions, and that this court is entirely without jurisdiction in the premises; and said motion having been argued by counsel for the respective parties hereto, and submitted to the court, and the court having duly considered the same, and being advised in the premises, and good cause appearing therefor,

"Now, therefore, it is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed that the motions for nonsuit dismissing said actions, and each of them, be, and the same are hereby granted, and the above entitled actions are, and each of them is, hereby dismissed."

The latter, as so signed and dated, was entered by the clerk on April 10, 1931, in Book U of Judgments, at page 370, and on April 13, 1931, the respondent served upon counsel for the respective plaintiffs its notice in writing, as follows: "You, and each of you, will please take notice that the judgment in the above-entitled cause was signed by Judge S. E. Crow on April 9th, 1931, and was filed on April 10th, 1931, and entered by the clerk of said Superior Court on the 10th day of April, 1931, in Book 'U' of Judgments at page 370."

On the day following each of the plaintiffs filed his notice of appeal "from the judgment herein made and entered in said Superior Court on the 10th day of April, 1931, in favor of the defendant, Montecito County Water District, and against the plaintiff in each of said actions, and from the whole of said judgment." By the instant proceeding the respondent presented a motion to dismiss said appeal upon the ground that said causes were dismissed by the order of April 9, 1931, entered in the minutes of the trial court, and that by such order and entry all proceedings were terminated, that the trial court was thereby deprived of jurisdiction to make any further order or judgment, and that the purported formal judgment entered on April 10th was superfluous, ineffective, and afforded no basis for an appeal.

Section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that: "An action may be dismissed, or a judgment of nonsuit entered, in the following cases: * * * 5. By the court, upon motion of the defendant, when upon the trial the plaintiff fails to prove a sufficient case for the jury. * * * The dismissals mentioned in subdivisions three, four, and five of this section must be made by orders of the court entered upon the minutes thereof, and are effective for all purposes when so entered." Yet, while effective for all purposes, including that of appeal, it does not follow nor can it be said that such an order when entered is exclusive of other and additional rights of the plaintiff in the trial court prior to appeal. Brown v. Sterling Furniture Co., 175 Cal. 563, 166 P. 322, 323, cited by the respondent, clearly so holds. The Supreme Court there observed that the words of the clause last quoted "direct attention, first, to the fact that in terms our law recognizes 'a judgment of nonsuit' as distinguished from a judgment of dismissal, and further declares that the order of nonsuit entered upon the minutes of the court constitute this judgment of nonsuit, since the law declares that such an order so entered is 'effective for all purposes.' In the present state of the law then it would appear that such a judgment of nonsuit, as distinguished from a judgment of dismissal usually following an order of nonsuit, is appealable." It is in effect conceded by the parties that a formal judgment has in numerous instances been held a sufficient legal basis for appeal. In Estate of Yale, 208 Cal. 102, 280 P. 358, 359, the rule was expressly announced in the following language:

"Without in any manner attempting to minimize the force of the authorities cited and relied on by the respondents in support of their motion, it is our conclusion, founded on a reading of the several minute orders and of that portion of the formal judgment hereinabove quoted, that the minute orders were intended by the trial court, and must have been understood by the parties, to be and to serve merely as memoranda affording data from which a proper final judgment might thereafter be drafted disposing of the entire cause. In such a case an appeal is held to lie from the formal judgment. Ferris v. Baker, 127 Cal. 520, 523, 524, 59 P. 937; Larson v. Larson, 15 Cal. App. 531, 536, 115 P. 340.

"The motion to dismiss the appeals from the several minute orders hereinabove referred to is granted. The motion to dismiss the appeal from a portion of the judgment is denied."

It must be observed in the instant proceeding that the understanding of the court and of the parties as to such distinction, of the steps taken accordingly, and of their reliance upon the necessity of a formal judgment of dismissal from which an appeal might be taken, is not devoid of plain evidence upon the face of the record. The defendant's motion for a "nonsuit dismissing said action" was submitted to the court; by its minute order "defendant's motion for a nonsuit" was granted; thereafter by a formal judgment reciting such facts it was adjudged and decreed that "the above entitled actions are, and each of them is, hereby dismissed." The defendant thereupon served and filed its notice of the entry of the final judgment dismissing said actions. Further, it has already been observed that both such minute order and judgment were obtained from the court on April 9, 1931, and the time for appeal as to each started to run on the same day. Upon similar facts it has been held that an appeal must be held to have been duly taken. In Gullick v. Interstate Drilling Co., 111 Cal. App. 263, 295 P. 549, 550, upon a review of numerous authorities, it was said of an appeal from a minute order of nonsuit, followed by a judgment four days thereafter, from which latter an appeal was perfected: "The notice of appeal which refers only to the judgment of October 19, was filed November 7, 1928, well within the time, even though it started to run on October 15. In view of the fact that the appeal was well within the sixty-day period, and also that the respondents could not possibly have had any doubt concerning the intention of the appellant to have reviewed the action of the court in granting the nonsuit, the dismissal of the present appeal would be the result of an insistence upon a pure technicality without either rhyme or reason. It would amount to reliance upon the shadow and not the substance. The law, however, does not require us to so act."

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

HILL v. HESSE et al.*

Civ. 7411.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 22, 1932.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 21, 1932.

1. Limitation of actions ⇐15.

Realty owner's granting contractor 90 days' extension for foreclosing materialman's lien held waiver of statute of limitations for foreclosing such lien (Code Civ. Proc. § 1190).

Granting of such extension upon application therefor by the materialman and relied upon by him as a waiver of the statute of limitations under Code Civ. Proc. § 1190, for foreclosing a materialman's lien, was a waiver of such statute of limitations notwithstanding that such agreement did not constitute an "extension of credit" under such statute so as to extend the limitation period 90 days from expiration of credit.

2. Limitation of actions ⇐15.

Where waiver of statute of limitations was in writing and had been acted upon, objection that waiver was without consideration should not be sustained (Civ. Code, § 1614).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thomas C. Gould, Judge.

Action by Ed. J. Hill against W. H. Hess and Bertha Mitchel. From a judgment for plaintiff, last-named defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Porter C. Blackburn, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Irl D. Brett, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, J.

At the request of defendant Hesse, as contractor, the plaintiff furnished certain building materials for use upon and actually used in the construction of a building upon a lot of land owned by the defendant Mitchel. Defendant Mitchel had no contractual relation with plaintiff. Said materials so furnished by plaintiff not being paid for, the plaintiff, under date of February 21, 1929, which was within 90 days after actual completion of the building, filed a notice of mechanic's lien against defendant Mitchel's property for the sum of $429.75. Within ninety days thereafter, to wit, on the 21st day of May, 1929, said plaintiff and defendant Mitchel entered into a written agreement whereby it was provided that defendant Mitchel granted to plaintiff "ninety days' extension of time within which to foreclose his said lien." On August 19, 1929, plaintiff filed his complaint for foreclosure of his said lien, and upon trial it was decreed that plaintiff was entitled to a lien for the sum of $411.65 against the premises of defendant Mitchel, and a personal judgment for the sum of $429.75 was entered against defendant Hesse.

In support of her appeal, defendant Mitchel contends that the execution of the purported agreement does not constitute an extension of credit within the meaning of section 1190 of the Code of Civil Procedure; that there is no evidence by the execution of such agreement to show that such extension was at the special instance and request of appellant; and that there was no consideration for the execution of the said agreement.

Section 1190 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads as follows: "No lien provided for in this chapter binds any property for a longer period than ninety days after the same has been filed, unless proceedings be commenced in a proper court within that time to enforce the same; or, if a credit be given and notice of the fact and terms of such credit be filed in the office of the county recorder subsequent to the filing of such lien and prior to the expiration of said ninety day period, then ninety days after the expiration of such credit. * * *"

[1] The agreement entered into between the parties provided as follows: "Now therefore, it is hereby understood and agreed that the said Bertha K. Mitchel hereby grants to Ed. J. Hill Ninety (90) days extension of time within which to foreclose his said lien. It being understood, however, that this extension of time does not admit the validity of the said claim of lien by the said Ed. J. Hill, but is simply to grant him the privilege of foreclosing his said lien if in fact it be subsequently proven that he has such." There is no evidence of any "extension of credit" by the creditor to the debtor, nor even to appellant. Notwithstanding the terms of this agreement, plaintiff retained the right immediately to commence his action. But he did not forthwith commence the action. He relied upon appellant's agreement as a waiver of the statute of limitations. He was justified in so doing. This appears from the recital in the agreement that appellant had no knowledge concerning the merits of the claim, but did desire to pay all just claims against the property; that the time for foreclosure was about to expire, and the claimant had applied for an extension therefor, which appellant was willing to grant without admitting liability for said claim; "now therefore" appellant granted to the claimant 90 days' extension of time within which to foreclose his said lien.

[2] This was a valid waiver. Section 1190, Code of Civil Procedure, is merely a statute of limitations. Mox, Inc., v. Leventhal, 89 Cal. App. 253, 264 P. 562. The benefit of such statute may be waived. S. L. Jones & Co. v. Davis, 65 Cal. App. 164, 173, 223 P. 560. We think that the waiver having been executed in writing, and respondent having relied and acted thereon for the reasons stated therein, the contention of appellant that there was no consideration for such waiver should not be sustained. A written agreement is presumptive evidence of a consideration. Civ. Code, § 1614. Here we have no evidence to the contrary, nor is there any bill of exceptions or reporter's transcript showing what evidence was produced at the trial.

The judgment is affirmed.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al. v. LOS ANGELES–INYO FARMS CO. et al.

Civ. 802.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 16, 1932.

1. Appeal and error ⇐801(1).

Ordinarily, in deciding motion to dismiss appeal, appellate court need examine only papers filed on hearing of motion and appellants' opening brief (Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 5, § 3).

2. Appeal and error ⇐801(5).

Where it appeared from appellants' opening brief that objection to hypothetical question propounded by respondents' counsel was improperly overruled, motion to dismiss appeal could not be granted, since examination of entire cause was required (Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 5, § 3; Const. art. 6, § 4½).

3. Appeal and error ⇐801(5).

Determination of whether allowance of $13,200 as attorneys' fees for preparing case for trial, but not trying it, was so excessive as to constitute clear abuse of discretion, required examination of entire record and authorized denial of motion to dismiss appeal (Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 5, § 3).

MARKS, J.

This is a motion to dismiss the appeal or affirm the judgment made under the provisions of section 3, rule 5, Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, which became effective on July 1, 1932. It is recited in the moving papers that the "motion will be based upon the clerk's transcript on appeal, the reporter's transcript on appeal, upon the appellants' opening brief and respondents' brief." From this statement it would appear that respondents expect this court, in deciding the motion, to examine the same records that it would have to review were the case submitted on its merits. If we should undertake to do this, it would result in a practical advancement of the cause on the calendar by use of this motion. If the motion were denied, we would have to review the same ground a second time, after the submission of the case on its merits, and also write a second opinion. We do not understand the purpose of the rule to be to greatly increase the work and time that the members of this court must devote to cases pending before it

[1] Until a different interpretation of the rule is given us, we have concluded that ordinarily we should examine and carefully consider all papers filed on the hearing of the motion and the appellants' opening brief. If, after so doing, in the ordinary case, we are satisfied that the appeal is without any merit, the motion should be granted; otherwise, it should be denied. The court may then put the case on the "Ready for Submission Docket." The following cases have been decided under this new rule: Dalton v. Los Angeles College of Chiropractic (Cal. App.) 13 P.(2d) 546; Thomas v. Caine (Cal. App.) 13 P.(2d) 548; Sumner v. Edmunds (Cal. App.) 13 P.(2d) 1046.

In examining the appellants' opening brief we find the following three questions presented for consideration: (1) Error of the trial court in overruling appellants' objection to a hypothetical question propounded by respondents' counsel to one of their witnesses. (2) Was the allowance of $13,200 by the trial court as fees for the services of the attorneys for respondents in preparing the case for trial, but not trying it, so unreasonable, excessive, and unjust as to constitute a clear abuse of discretion? (3) Was the expense in the sum of $1,622.64 allowed as fees for two engineers who were to be used as expert witnesses by respondents a necessary expense incurred in preparing the cause for trial?

[2] From a reading of the appellants' opening brief it would seem that the objection made to the hypothetical question should have been sustained. Before we can hold the improper admission of evidence prejudicially erroneous, we are required to make "an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence." Section 4½, art. 6, Const. of Cal.

In Libby v. Kipp, 87 Cal. App. 538, 262 P. 68, 71, it is said: "It is for this reason that the matter of awarding compensation for professional services, when that service is rendered by an attorney, is left, to so great a degree, in the judicial discretion of the trial court, so much so that, unless the sum allowed is plainly and palpably exorbitant and such as shocks the conscience of an appellate court, the determination of the trial court will not be disturbed."

[3] From the considerable portions of the record incorporated in appellants' opening brief, it would seem that the award of $13,200 as attorneys' fees for preparing this case for trial, but not trying it, was quite liberal. Whether or not the amount awarded would shock the judicial conscience of this court could only be determined after a careful study of the entire record.

It is unnecessary to consider the third ground for reversal of the judgment, as it is apparent that we should carefully review the entire record before deciding the two questions already mentioned by us.

If we are correct in our conclusion that we should not be expected to review the entire record in ruling upon motions made under the rule in question, the motion before us should be denied.

Motion denied.

1. Executors and administrators ⇐488.

Right of executor to defined standard of compensation first accrues at time when by appropriate order compensation is determined and allowed (Code Civ. Proc. § 1618).

2. Executors and administrators ⇐488.

Amount of compensation allowable to executors for extraordinary services in administration of estate held governed by law in force at time of allowance (Code Civ. Proc. § 1618).

At time of decedent's death in January, 1924, Code Civ. Proc. § 1618 contained clause limiting allowance to executors for extraordinary services to an amount not to exceed one-half the amount of the commissions allowed by that section. Between the time of the decedent's death and the application by the executors to the probate court for an allowance for extraordinary services, the limitation on the amount of the allowance was repealed by St. 1925, p. 624. Statutory limitation in effect at decedent's death was inapplicable under the circumstances of the case because the statutory provision for the allowance of expenses of administration is in its nature a matter of procedure and the heirs, devisees, and legatees have no vested right in the benefit of the limitation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge.

Proceedings in the matter of the estate of Mary H. Spires, deceased. Petition by the Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles and another, as executors, for the allowance of fees for extraordinary services rendered in the administration of the estate, opposed by Alice Harrison Frazier. From an order determining the allowance to the petitioners, the petitioners appeal.

Order reversed and the cause remanded, with direction.

Newlin & Ashburn, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Newby & Newby, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J.

The appellants are executors of the last will and testament of Mary H. Spires, deceased. As such executors they filed their "petition as executors for allowance for fees for extraordinary services" rendered by them in the course of administration of the estate. The executors, being dissatisfied with the amount of the allowance made to them by the court, appealed from the order by which the amount of such allowance was determined.

Mrs. Spires died on the 3d day of January, 1924, and her will was admitted to probate on the 23d day of that month. The petition of the executors claiming a fee for extraordinary services was filed on the 17th day of March, 1930. Respondent Frazier, a legatee under the will, objected to the making of an allowance in the sum asked for by the executors, her objection being based upon grounds hereinafter stated. The issue having been tried and submitted, the court made its order, which was filed on the 5th day of February, 1931. Section 1618 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as in force at the time of the death of Mrs. Spires, provided that an executor should be allowed certain stated commissions and in addition thereto provided as follows: "In all cases, such further allowance may be made as the court may deem just and reasonable for any extraordinary service, but the total amount of such extra allowance must not exceed one half the amount of commissions allowed by this section." In the year 1925 said section was amended, and by such amendment the clause limiting the total amount of such extra allowance was omitted, and the limitation was thereby removed.

In its findings of fact recited in the order, the court found that the reasonable value of the extraordinary services rendered by the executors was substantially in excess of the sum of $7,241.26; "but the court, solely for the reason that it is of the opinion that its power to make such allowances for extraordinary services is limited by the terms of section 1618 of the Code of Civil Procedure as the same existed at the time of death of decedent and probate of the will of said decedent, has concluded that it can make to the said executors no award or allowance for the said extraordinary services in excess of the sum of $7,241.26."

There is thus presented on this appeal a single question of law, viz.: In a case where, at the time of the death of the testator, the amount of fees which may be allowed to executors for extraordinary services was subject to a statutory limitation, but where, during the course of the administration and prior to the time when the petition for allowance for extraordinary services was filed, the said statutory limitation upon the amount of allowance which might be made had been repealed, was the power of the court in said matter subject to the limitation of the statute as in force at the time of the death of decedent?

Under the original Probate Code, and under section 1618 of the Code of Civil Procedure until the year 1909, it was the law that in addition to the ordinary commissions of an executor or administrator, such further allowance might be made as the court deemed just and reasonable, for any extraordinary services; but it was provided that "the total amount of such allowance must not exceed the amount of commissions allowed by this section." From 1909 until 1925 the proviso was that "the total amount of such extra allowance must not exceed one half the amount of commissions allowed by this section." It was not until the year 1925 that said section 1618 was so amended (St. 1925, p. 624) that the court, in making allowances for such extraordinary services of an executor or administrator, is left untrammeled, save only by the rule that the allowance must be just and reasonable. See, also, new Probate Code, § 902.

Provision for the expenses of administration of a decedent's estate is in its nature a matter of procedure, dealing with a necessary incident of the business of administration. Such expenses, of which compensation to the executor is a part, are analogous to costs and other chargeable expenses of litigation. The basic principle of the Code provisions to which we have referred has been, at all times, that there shall be a just and reasonable allowance for extraordinary services. In the application of that principle it was for a long time the legislative policy to limit such allowance so as not to exceed a maximum amount measured by the fixed rate of commissions allowed for "ordinary" services. If heirs, devisees, and legatees have a vested right in the benefit of this limitation, effective as of the date of death of a decedent, then the order against which the pending appeal is directed must be affirmed.

[1, 2] But we think that there is no such vested right in the benefit of the limitation. "The right of inheritance and testamentary disposition is entirely the creation of the statute, and the heirs, devisees, and legatees take the property subject to such burdens as the Legislature has seen fit to impose upon it. * * * While it is true that the descent is cast and the property of the decedent vested in the devisees and legatees, or in the heirs, at the moment of the death of the deceased, it is also true that they take the property subject to the payment of the expenses of administration. * * *" Estate of Bump, 152 Cal. 274, 92 P. 643, 644. On the other hand, the right of the executor to a defined rate or standard of compensation is not vested as of the date of the decedent's death, nor even as of the date when he qualifies as executor, but such right first accrues at the time when by appropriate order the amount of compensation payable to him is determined and allowed. And since the right of an executor to compensation for extraordinary services is not established or vested until allowed by the court in the exercise of its discretion, it follows as a direct consequence that the law in force at the time when the order is made constitutes the only law by which the power of the court is to be governed.

The order is reversed, and the cause remanded, with direction that compensation be awarded to appellants, in such amount as the trial court shall find to be just and reasonable.

Instruction recited that all persons concerned in the commission of a felony, whether they directly committed the acts constituting the offense or aided or abetted in its commission, though not present, shall be prosecuted, tried, and punished as principals, and it was contended that instruction was faulty because it left out the words "or not being present have advised and encouraged its commission," but the omission of such words could not have injured accused in robbery prosecution, because it required a higher degree of proof by the prosecution to show that accused, though not present, had aided and abetted in commission of crime than it would have necessitated to show only that he had advised and encouraged its commission.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Joe Stein was convicted of robbery, and he appeals from a judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. Judgment and order affirmed.

Samuel L. Rummel and Kenneth K. Scott, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

Miller and Stein were both charged with robbery. Miller pleaded guilty to one of three counts. When the taking of testimony was completed, the other two counts were dismissed. Stein was found guilty and sentenced. He appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

One, and the principal, contention advanced by appellant, is that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. We therefore proceed to examine that question.

The Thrifty Drug Company, located at 412 South Broadway in Los Angeles, was held up and robbed of approximately $400, about 7:30 o'clock a. m. on December 14, 1931, by two armed bandits. One of the assailants was Stein's codefendant Miller. The other was not identified and it is said that Stein is not as tall as was the man who entered the store with Miller. It must be assumed in our consideration of the case that Stein did not enter the drug store—that, if he was in fact connected with the commission of the crime, that circumstance must be established by testimony outside of the happenings inside of the store. It appears that immediately after the robbery Miller hailed a taxicab at Fourth and Spring streets, saying to the driver that he "wanted to go straight out Temple street," and was in a hurry. He entered the cab on the west side of Spring Street, and it continued south on that street to its intersection with Fifth street, where it turned west and proceeded to Broadway. At the corner of the last-named street and Fifth street Miller directed the driver to turn north, which route would carry him by the store he had aided in robbing. The driver of the cab was compelled to stop behind a street car at Fourth and Broadway, whereupon Miller wanted to alight, but, finding that the door was locked from the inside, instructed the driver to draw over to the curb. The latter could not go forward because he was inside the safety zone, and for that reason, and upon the insistence of Miller, backed up and over to the curb. Miller immediately left the cab, and, without paying his fare went down, or south, on Broadway, with the driver of the cab in pursuit of Miller with the hope of collecting his due. However, a few car lengths south Miller entered an Auburn automobile parked at the curb with the appellant Stein at the wheel, which immediately started north on Broadway, but had not proceeded far until it was stopped by the officers and both Stein and Miller arrested. The cab driver, who related most of this story from the witness stand, testified that he saw no gun. And this fact may become important as we later analyze the testimony. A witness named Maples, who worked about five doors south of the Thrifty Drug Store, testified that he was waiting outside his place of employment for the manager thereof when he noticed an Auburn coupé drive up and park. He thought there were two people in the car; and that one of them left the machine and walked up the street. The next thing he noticed was the car starting, having trouble in getting away from the curb. The driver of the car was Stein and the other occupant, Miller. The witness also observed the arrest by the officers.

The witness Kohl simply related the actions of Miller from the time he left the cab until the arrest, together with the rather important negative testimony that he saw nothing peculiar about the actions of either Stein or Miller as Miller entered the automobile. He also identified Stein as the driver.

Officer Lund saw Miller leave the taxicab, and, in view of the weight attached to his testimony, we quote therefrom as follows: "The cab man was still standing in the street. The defendant Miller had begun to look in my direction, or was looking north, and seeing me whirled on his feet and hurried south. That made me very suspicious, and I hurried. By the time I had got down to the cab, where the cab was standing, he had naturally got about 25 or 30 paces down the street, and without coming to a complete standstill I asked the cab man if he knew that fellow that just got out of his car" (here follows an instruction to the witness not to give the conversation). "I saw the defendant Miller hurry down the street ahead of me.

"Q. Yes. A. And his left hand was in his coat—overcoat pocket. As he reached an Auburn car—I didn't know what kind of car at that time, but as he reached a car I observed a man who must have been sitting behind the wheel lean way over and open the door. I saw his face. This man in the car opened the door and before the defendant Miller had taken his seat I could hear the motor of that car, and it maneuvered back and forth two or three times before it could get away from the curb to get into the street. By this time I had pulled my gun and I went out from the parked cars into the street, running towards them and flagging them down to stop. I ran up to the car and opened the door, the defendant Miller was working frantically with his left hand near his hip pocket. I cautioned him to bring his hands out in front and to make no false move. I also cautioned the man behind the wheel, who I identify as Stein, to keep his hands on the wheel, and I asked them who they were. There was no response. I asked the defendant Stein whose car this was, and he said, 'It belongs to a friend of mine.'

"Q. Who said that? A. Stein. I asked him his name, he answered me but I didn't get his name to write it down. I asked him what he was doing with his friend's car, and he said he just brought his girl to work. I asked him where his girl worked, and he said, 'up the street' indicating north. I heard the siren of a police car coming at this time, and I didn't make any effort to take the men out. Then the defendant Stein about this time made a statement, he says—'Officer, this man pulled a gun on me.' So in the matter of a few seconds the police car came up and an officer came on my side, and I says 'Take this man,' indicating Miller, 'out,' which he did."

The witness then told of finding a .32 caliber revolver fully loaded behind the cushion where Miller was sitting and also of handcuffing Stein. On cross-examination he stated that Miller did not hesitate as he entered the Auburn car, but that the door flew open as he arrived, and further that Miller did not put his hand on the door at all. He also swore that he did not see Miller make any demonstration toward the driver Stein, but that the car moved almost immediately.

Officer Gibson testified that he talked to appellant on the day of his arrest concerning the ownership of the Auburn automobile, and that Stein told him that he owned it, although it was registered under the name of Charles Green; that he had to have a reference to buy a car on contract, and therefore used his brother's name. Gibson also testified that he took an operator's license from appellant issued in the name of Harry Fields, and that Stein replied to his query concerning the name that the licensed car belonged to him, but had been issued under that name when he had purchased a former car in the name of Fields. (Appellant did not claim that Fields was a brother of his and Green's.) Stein also told the officer that he went to the market about 6 a. m. on the morning of the robbery for the purpose of getting a load to haul to Fresno, but, not being able to obtain one, went to Fourth and Broadway streets, arriving there about 6:30 a. m., in order that he might wait there for his girl, due to go to work at about 9 a. m., for the purpose of getting her to sign some papers for him to get a suit and hat at a clothing store at Eighth and Broadway. When asked by the officer why he waited at the corner for so long a time instead of going back home, Stein made no answer. The officer then testified that he went to 1144 East Twenty-Fourth street, where the appellant was living, and found a box of .32 caliber cartridges fitting the revolver found behind the cushion in the Auburn. They were not of the same make, however, as those found in the gun.

The defendant Miller testified that his partner in the actual robbery was Jack Sherman; and that he opened the door to the Auburn and forced Stein to drive it at the point of the gun which later he hid behind the cushion.

The appellant, Stein, on the stand, told substantially the same story he had previously given Officer Gibson, but added that before he left home that morning he had told his wife to meet him in front of the Thrifty Drug Store, and that he would be parked there, and also added that, after he had been sitting in his car a few minutes in front of 420 South Broadway, he reached over for the electric cigar lighter with the intent to light a cigarette when Miller opened the door of the car, knocked appellant's hand from the dashboard, and at the point of a gun ordered him to get going.

[1, 2] We have detailed the testimony more than is usual because at first blush there appeared to be considerable doubt concerning its sufficiency, but that doubt disappears as the evidence is analyzed—provided, of course, we bear in mind the test which must be applied in the appellate tribunal, which is whether there is substantial testimony to support the verdict and not whether from the printed page we might be inclined to a different conclusion. If the jury believed, and they undoubtedly did, the testimony of the arresting officer Lund they were fully justified in determining that Miller did not enter Stein's car and compel him to drive at the point of a gun. It is hardly conceivable that one trained to observe, as are the officers of the law, would not have seen the threat with the gun. But, more than this, he testified positively that appellant reached over and opened the door—and, even before Miller had taken his seat, had started the motor. Stein's recital of what happened cannot be reconciled with Lund's version. The testimony of the witness Maples, while not as certain or precise as that of the officer, tends to corroborate the latter. Maples thought two men drove up in that Auburn car—giving that, of course, as his best recollection. However, this witness made an affidavit on the motion for a new trial in which he was of a different opinion. So does the testimony of the witness Kohl, who saw Miller enter the automobile, but noticed nothing out of the ordinary in the actions of either Miller or Stein. The jury undoubtedly considered what the ordinary citizen would say at the very first opportunity if he were compelled to drive some one in his car at the point of a gun. A careful reading of the testimony makes it plain that appellant did not complain at the first opportunity, but only after he had had a chance to contemplate the evidence of guilt which was rapidly closing around him. The finding of the .32 caliber cartridges is perhaps of slight weight—yet it is entitled to consideration. The story of the registration certificate and the operator's license fails to carry with it the note of sincerity, and so does the other concerning the unusually long period of waiting by the appellant near the front of the drug store for his wife, although he testified he had planned to get a load for Fresno. We feel that the jury was fully justified in concluding that Stein was the confederate of Miller and Sherman; and that he was in charge of the car, ready to aid and assist them in their get-away. Had appellant been an innocent friend or acquaintance of Miller, he would undoubtedly have given that version of the affair from the witness stand rather than the one which the jury did not credit with truth.

[3-5] Complaint is made by appellant of the instruction given by the trial judge upon the subject of character testimony and his refusal to give an instruction requested by appellant in regard thereto. The instruction given reads as follows: "Evidence of good character is no excuse for the commission of a crime, if you believe that notwithstanding such character the defendant is the guilty party; but in determining the question of whether or not he is guilty, it is proper for you to consider such evidence, along with all other evidence brought out in the case." Appellant insists that the trial judge by this instruction commented upon the evidence, and in fact made an attack upon the character testimony. He also argues that the instruction leaves out of consideration the element of "reasonable doubt." We find ourselves unable to agree with these assertions. In the case of People v. Kalkman, 72 Cal. 212, 13 P. 500, 503, an instruction was proposed as follows: "Proof of such good character may be sufficient to justify an acquittal, although without it no acquittal would have been had." The trial judge modified the proposal by adding the words: "unless, in spite of such good character, the evidence yet convinces you beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt." It was held that the instruction as modified was not erroneous, and there was cited by the court in support of its position an instruction given in the case of People v. Samsels, 66 Cal. 99, 4 P. 1061, 1062, as follows: "If you should believe the defendant guilty, you must so find, notwithstanding his good character." In the case of People v. Von Perhacs, 20 Cal. App. 48, 127 P. 1048, 1050, the court modified a proposed instruction regarding character testimony by adding the language: "If you are satisfied to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant is guilty as charged in the information herein, it will be your duty to so find him, notwithstanding such evidence of good character." It was said by the appellate court that: "The instruction, as modified by the court, correctly and without conflict stated the law." To the same effect see: People v. De la Cour Soto, 63 Cal. 165.

We had occasion in the case of People v. Harris, 80 Cal. App. 328, 251 P. 823, to somewhat review the law upon the subject, and, while we reversed that case, a reading of the opinion will demonstrate that the instruction given here does not do violence to the rule which prohibits the court from commenting upon the facts. Nor do we believe that the instruction can reasonably be construed as leaving out of consideration the element of reasonable doubt. The jury was instructed fully upon that question. And it is a familiar rule that the instructions must be read together. Perhaps it would have been better and more in keeping with the suggestions heretofore made to trial courts to give instructions which have become practically standardized (see People v. Heuss, 95 Cal. App. 680, 273 P. 583), had the instruction been couched in the words found either in the case of People v. Perhacs, supra, or in People v. Mitchell, 129 Cal. 584, 62 P. 187, but it is not fatally subject to the criticism leveled against it. The appellant did propose an instruction in the words of the one given in People v. Mitchell, supra, and as follows: "You are instructed that the defendant Joe Stein has introduced before you evidence tending to show his good character for peace and quietness, and for honesty, integrity and truthfulness. If in the present case, the good character of said defendant is proven to your satisfaction, then such fact is to be kept in view by you in all your deliberations, and it is to be considered by you in connection with the other facts in the case; and if after a consideration of all the evidence in the case, including that bearing upon the good character of the defendant Stein, the jury entertain a reasonable doubt as to defendant Stein's guilt, then I charge you it is your duty to acquit him. But if the evidence convinces you beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt you must so find, notwithstanding his good character." What we have heretofore said concerning the contention that the instruction given upon the subject was erroneous disposes of appellant's argument that the failure to give the proferred one was also error.

[6] Two instructions relative to the subject of circumstantial evidence offered by the defendant were not given by the court, and this is made the basis of appellant's next complaint. It is not possible, however, to support his contention for two reasons, the first of which is that the evidence in this case is not wholly and solely circumstantial (see People v. Raber, 168 Cal. 316, 143 P. 317), and the second is that instructions tendered were not a full and correct statement of the rule of law. This is sufficient to justify the court in refusing to give the tendered instructions.

[7] It is next argued that the court committed error when it instructed the jury as follows: "The court further instructs the jury that it is the law of the state, that all persons concerned in the commission of a felony, whether they directly committed the acts constituting the offense or aided and abetted in its commission, though not present, shall be prosecuted, tried and punished as principals." It is asserted that this instruction is faulty because it left out the words "or not being present have advised and encouraged its commission." It is difficult to understand how the appellant could have been injured by the omission of the quoted words. It certainly required, if anything, a higher degree of proof by the prosecution to show that the appellant, though not present, had aided and abetted in the commission of the crime than it would have necessitated to show only that he had advised and encouraged its commission.

Complaint is made of the reception of certain of the evidence. We have examined the specifications in this regard and have found no error of which the appellant may properly complain. It would serve no useful purpose for us to lengthen an opinion which has already reached more than ordinary proportions.

SECURITY TRUST & SAVINGS BANK OF SAN DIEGO v. A. H. FROST CO. et al.

Civ. 1011.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 19, 1932.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 11, 1932.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 17, 1932.

1. Appeal and error ⇐909(5).

Where subsequent trust declaration embodied same terms and sale provisions as former trust, appellate court must conclude subsequent trust incorporated contract incorporated in prior trust and was intended to continue terms of such contract and prior trust.

2. Assignments ⇐52.
Trusts ⇐61(3).

Agreement and settlement, wherein trustor agreed to pay creditor half of proceeds receivable from sale of realty described in trust declaration, constituted equitable assignment of such proceeds, precluding subsequent voluntary termination of trust depriving creditor's assignee without its consent of proceeds of sale.

Facts disclosed that trustor under an agreement and settlement agreed to cause to be paid to a creditor half of the proceeds to be received by the trustor from the sale of real property described in a trust declaration; that creditor's interest under such agreement passed by several assignments to assignee; that before creditor's assignee took assignment of the creditor's interest the original trust declaration was dissolved and another substituted without the assignee's knowledge; and that after assignment to assignee, the trustor, trustee, and beneficiary voluntarily terminated the second trust declaration and deprived the assignee of any possibility of receiving further payment from proceeds of sale.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Charles C. Haines, Judge.

Action by the Security Trust & Savings Bank of San Diego against the A. H. Frost Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, named defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Harrison G. Sloane, of San Diego, for appellant.

Hamilton, Lindley & Higgins, of San Diego, for respondent.

MARKS, J.

Since June 1, 1925, when the transactions here involved were first undertaken, the corporate names of two of the corporations before us were changed to the Security Trust & Savings Bank of San Diego and A. H. Frost Company, from the Security Commercial Bank of San Diego and the San Diego Beach Company, respectively. No further reference will be made by us to the earlier names.

Under date of June 1, 1925, appellant entered into a subdivision sales contract with Pickering, Incorporated, whereby this corporation agreed to buy and appellant agreed to sell certain real property in the city of San Diego in the manner and upon the terms to be specified in a declaration of trust to be executed by appellant as trustor, the Union Trust Company of San Diego as trustee, and Pickering, Incorporated, as beneficiary. Early in August, 1925, appellant conveyed the real property described in the contract just mentioned to the Union Trust Company of San Diego. A declaration of trust was executed which by reference incorporated into its terms the Pickering, Incorporated, contract and constituted what is commonly known as a subdivision trust, whereby the legal title to the real estate was to remain in the Union Trust Company of San Diego. Sales of subdivided lots were to be made by Pickering, Incorporated, and the proceeds from such sales so divided that appellant would receive its selling price for the property. Pickering, Incorporated, was designated as the beneficiary under this trust. It was provided in the declaration of trust that in case the beneficiary should make default in performing any of the terms of the trust on its part to be performed the trust could be terminated and the beneficial interest foreclosed by a trustee's sale of the trust property.

Under date of July 3, 1925, appellant entered into a contract with Earl Taylor, which the parties denominated an "Agreement of Settlement," wherein it was recited that Taylor had made the sale of the real property described in the declaration of trust to Pickering, Incorporated, and after reciting various indebtednesses between the parties, struck a balance of $12,456.09 as due and unpaid from appellant to Taylor. In this contract it was provided: "That said party of the first part (appellant) will cause to be paid from the proceeds of the sale under said Pickering contract with said A. H. Frost Company, the said sum of $12,456.09 from one-half of the net proceeds from sales under said Pickering contract to be paid to said second party (Taylor) as said money is received to the credit of said first party and after first deducting the first twenty per cent (20%) from said sales payable to said Pickering, Incorporated, as provided in said Pickering contract, until the said sum of $12,456.09 has been paid to said second party, and no payment of same is to be made except as derived from said sales." On December 26, 1925, by a written instrument and for a value received Taylor assigned to Birdie Mae Taylor all his rights under this contract and the money to be derived therefrom. On December 29, 1925, Birdie Mae Taylor executed a similar written assignment to the Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles. By an instrument dated December 23, 1927, the Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles assigned all its rights under the Taylor "Agreement of Settlement" to respondent, which then became and continued to be the holder thereof. This last assignment was evidently not delivered until January, 1928.

On November 12, 1925, appellant addressed a letter to the Union Trust Company of San Diego, the material parts of which are as follows:

"You are administering a certain trust under which the interested parties are the A. H. Frost Company and Pickering Incorporated, which involves the A. H. Frost Company's holdings at Pacific Beach. Under this trust certain payments into the trust are to be disbursed to the A. H. Frost Company.

"We hereby direct that one-half of the net proceeds from sales of said Pickering Incorporated contract be remitted to the Citizens Trust and Savings Bank, 736 South Hill street, Los Angeles, California, until said remittances to said Citizens Trust and Savings Bank have amounted to the sum of $12,456.09.

"It being understood that the first twenty per cent from said sales are payable to said Pickering Incorporated as provided in said Pickering contract, and that no amounts are to be disbursed to the A. H. Frost Company from said sales until the first twenty per cent thereof have been paid to said Pickering Incorporated."

After the execution of the Pickering, Incorporated, contract of June 1, 1925, and the declaration of trust just mentioned, Pickering, Incorporated, apparently entered upon the performance of its obligations under these instruments. It found purchasers for some of the subdivided property but did not actually consummate any sales. For some reason not disclosed by the record this corporation and appellant decided to dissolve the trust in which Pickering, Incorporated, was named as beneficiary. This last-named corporation was paid $20,000 and consented to a dissolution of the trust, which dissolution was accomplished about February, 1926. While Taylor knew of this action, the Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles had no notice or knowledge of it.

In March, 1926, a second trust was executed by A. H. Frost Company as trustor, Union Trust Company of San Diego, a trustee, and E. A. Walsh, and A. L. Mitchell, as beneficiaries, whereby the two beneficiaries were substituted to all of the obligations, rights, and benefits of Pickering, Incorporated, under the original trust. Neither declaration of trust is set forth in the record. Very brief summaries of the documents are inserted instead of exact copies. The second declaration of trust, which we will hereafter refer to as the "Walsh Trust," is described in the record as follows: "Declaration of Trust, S-7061, Union Trust Company of San Diego, covering the same property and embodying the same terms and provisions of sale and default as the Declaration in favor of Pickering, Incorporated, being Exhibit No. 6, but being in favor of A. H. Frost Company, as payee, E. A. Walsh and A. L. Mitchell, as beneficiaries, dated March ——, 1926; the same being attached to plaintiff's complaint in this action and referred to therein as Exhibit B."

[1] The Pickering, Incorporated, declaration of trust, by its express terms incorporated within its provisions the contract of June 1, 1925, between appellant and Pickering, Incorporated, which was the original contract of sale between those parties and under the terms of which the rights and obligations of all the parties connected with these transactions seem to have had their origin. As it affirmatively appears from the record that the Walsh trust embodied "the same terms and provisions of sale" as the Pickering, Incorporated, trust, we must conclude that the Walsh trust also incorporated within its terms the provisions of the agreement of June 1, 1925, between Pickering, Incorporated, and appellant, and that the real effect of the Walsh trust was to continue in operation the terms and conditions of the contract of June 1, 1925, and the Pickering, Incorporated, trust with the substitution of Walsh and Mitchell in the place of Pickering, Incorporated, the beneficiary in the earlier declaration of trust.

About January 3, 1928, the respondent bank was preparing to take from the Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles an assignment of the interest it had acquired in the proceeds of the sale of the real property described in the declarations of trust and under the original Taylor-A. H. Frost Company contract and the Taylor assignment. Neither of the banks had at that time any notice or knowledge of the cancellation of the Pickering, Incorporated, trust, or the execution of the Walsh trust, which facts were not disclosed to either of them by Taylor, appellant or the Union Trust Company of San Diego until on or about March 27, 1929. Before accepting the assignment from the Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles, respondent caused to be prepared and delivered to the Union Trust Company of San Diego by appellant, the following letter:

"San Diego, Cal., Jan., 1928.
"Union Trust Co., San Diego, Calif.
"Gentlemen:

"Under date of November 12, 1925, the undersigned company wrote you a letter in which we directed that one-half of the net proceeds from sales of the Pickering Incorporated contract be remitted to the Citizens Trust & Savings Bank, Los Angeles, until remittances to said bank have amounted to the sum of $12,456.09.

"Our letter to you above referred to and bearing date of November 12, 1925, was intended to be an absolute assignment of one-half of the net proceeds from sales of said Pickering Inc. contract until said remittances amounted to the sum of $12,456.09 and was not intended to be subject to revocation by the undersigned company.

"This letter is to advise you that we received a valuable consideration for the execution of said letter of instructions to you, and that we do hereby declare said instructions to be irrevocable, and instruct you to continue said payments to said Citizens Trust & Savings Bank or to their assignees until said sum of $12,456.09 has been paid in full.

"Very truly yours,
"A. H. Frost Company.
"By A. H. Frost, President.
"By Martha M. Frost, Secretary.
"[Seal.]"

As a part of this transaction respondent had prepared and executed by the Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles and delivered to the Union Trust Company of San Diego a letter which in detail referred to the Taylor-appellant "Agreement of Settlement," the assignment by Earl Taylor to Birdie Mae Taylor and by Birdie Mae Taylor to the Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles, the letter of appellant to the Union Trust Company of November 12, 1925, and the assignment by the Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles to respondent, which letter concluded with an order directing the Union Trust Company of San Diego to pay to respondent the moneys accruing under these various documents.

During these negotiations and before the consummation of the assignment to appellant, and on January 13, 1928, the following letter was sent from the then attorneys for appellant to the attorneys for respondent:

"Attorney Gardiner has handed to A. H. Frost Company for execution a letter intended to make irrevocable certain instructions for remittances arising under sales of Pickering, Inc., contract with A. H. Frost Company.

"We understand that you drafted this letter, and that the bank requires its execution before taking the above mentioned order as collateral security.

"We can obtain execution of this letter for you and the officers of the company are willing to deliver it as soon as Mr. Taylor takes care of the claim of San Diego Lumber Company for $316.78.

"We have prepared suit against Taylor for this amount, and contemplate garnishment proceedings against Union Trust Company for payments arising out of the Pickering, Inc., contract which go to the credit of Taylor. The execution of this proposed letter would apparently make the earlier order irrevocable to the extent where such a garnishment would not be effective. For that reason we will be obliged to hold up the letter until we have made secure the claim of San Diego Lumber Company.

"If Mr. Taylor is willing to give us an order on the funds which your bank expects to loan him we can adjust the matter in that way.

"As you doubtless know, the owners of A. H. Frost Company are closely connected with the officials of San Diego Lumber Company, and have authorized us to handle this situation to the protection of the latter. For that reason we will have to withhold delivery of the letter which you request until Mr. Taylor has voluntarily taken care of the bill or until we have secured a sufficient garnishment of the funds."

Without any knowledge of the cancellation of the Pickering trust and the execution of the Walsh agreement and seemingly satisfied from its investigations and the letters of appellant that it would succeed to Taylor's rights under the original Pickering, Incorporated, trust, respondent accepted the assignment from the Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles as collateral security for a loan of about $7,000 to Taylor. The facts before us would seem to indicate the necessary elements of an estoppel against the defense interposed by appellant in the trial court, but estoppel was neither plead nor were the facts upon which it could be based found in the court below. It does not seem to have been considered at the trial.

After the cancellation of the Pickering, Incorporated, trust and the execution of the Walsh trust the Union Trust Company of San Diego, with the knowledge of appellant, paid to the Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles and to respondent in various amounts the total sum of $3,941.40, out of the moneys which it received from sales of property under the Walsh trust, which sales were made by Walsh and Mitchell.

Walsh and Mitchell became in default in the performance of their obligations under the Walsh trust, and early in 1929 these beneficiaries with appellant and the Union Trust Company of San Diego, but without the knowledge or consent of respondent, by contract dissolved the Walsh trust, and the trustee, on the request of appellant, deeded the property involved to Martha M. Frost. No foreclosure proceedings or foreclosure of the trust estate were had as required in the declaration of trust in order to terminate the trust upon default of the beneficiaries.

On March 27, 1929, the Union Trust Company of San Diego notified respondent of the termination of the trust and that future payments to it would be discontinued. Respondent thereupon brought this action and was given judgment against appellant for $8,514.69, the amount unpaid on the original A. H. Frost Company indebtedness to Taylor, as determined in their "Agreement of Settlement." This judgment is under attack here on this appeal.

[2] It is the theory of the respondent that an equitable assignment of the proceeds to be received from the sale of the real property described in the declarations of trust to the amount of $12,456.09 was made by appellant and that the right to receive such moneys and the equitable interest in them passed to respondent by the various assignments which have been mentioned. This theory seems to be supported by the record and the decisions of our courts. In the case of Goldman v. Murray, 164 Cal. 419, 129 P. 462, 463, it was said:

"Touching the evidence establishing such an equitable assignment, it is said in McIntyre v. Hauser, 131 Cal. 11, 63 P. 69: 'In order to constitute an equitable assignment of a debt, no express words to that effect are necessary. If from the entire transaction it clearly appears that the intention of the parties was to pass title to the chose in action, then an assignment will be held to have taken place.' We have before us, then, a case where the bona fide creditor of a corporation takes from it promissory notes evidencing its debt to him, in the belief of the validity of the notes, and passes them on in due course of business to his creditor; the notes being given to, and received by the indorsee in payment of the indorser's indebtedness to the indorsee. The assignments of the notes, so far as Bowen and the plaintiff were concerned, carried with them the original indebtedness. Redington v. Cornwell, 90 Cal. 63, 27 P. 40; Knowles v. Sandercock, 107 Cal. 640, 40 P. 1047; 7 Cyc. 816. The intent of the parties—of Bowen on the one hand to assign and of the plaintiff, on the other to accept the assignment of the corporation indebtedness—thus clearly evidenced by the transaction between them, is not affected by the fortuitous circumstance that the notes themselves were invalid as corporation obligations. They still had validity, not as negotiable instruments, but as evidencing the contract between Bowen and the plaintiff, and this contract amounted to a valid equitable assignment. First, since no precise form of words or writing is necessary to the establishment of an equitable assignment, it mattered not whether the notes were or were not the valid obligations of the corporation. They still afforded evidence of what, as between themselves, the plaintiff and the witness Bowen proposed to do and did with the indebtedness owed to the latter by the corporation. Second, as we have seen, the acknowledgment and acceptance by the corporation of the assignment of the debt of Bowen to plaintiff was not essential to the validity of the assignment. And, third, while authority is divided upon the question of the equitable assignability of a portion of a debt or fund before acceptance, the sounder view we take it is that expressed in 1 Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, § 23, and upon this point we cannot do better than to quote the learned author at length:

" 'This doctrine is clearly correct in so far as it applies to legal assignments. The holder of the bill or order cannot sue the drawee-at-law in his own name, as he would thus divide the cause of action and leave a balance due the creditor. He cannot sue in the creditor's name, except by his consent, as, at best, he is only entitled to a part of the debt due him. But it has been held in numerous cases, and we think should now be regarded as law, that a nonnegotiable order for part of a fund operates as an equitable assignment pro tanto. Clearly this is the case when it has been accepted or assented to by the drawee. And when it has not been accepted, our own view is this: That a nonnegotiable order for part of a fund does operate as an equitable assignment pro tanto as between the drawer and payee, because obviously so intended. But as between drawer and payee on the one side, and the drawee on the other, it creates no obligation on the latter to pay it, as he has a right to insist on an integral discharge of his debt. And, if the creditor give a subsequent order for the whole amount, he may pay it with impunity, as he thus discharges his debt in its entirety at once. But if the payee or indorsee goes into equity, or the parties are brought therein by any proceeding, so that all of them are before the court, the holder of the order may enforce it as an equitable assignment as against all subsequent claimants, whether by assignment from the drawer or by legal process served upon the drawee.

" 'Mr. Justice Story has stated the principle, as we conceive it, more correctly in his treatise on Equity Jurisprudence than in the cases hitherto cited, and he there declares that, while a draft for part of a fund operates no assignment at law, the same principle applies in equity to a draft for part of a fund that applies to a draft for the whole, and that "in each case a trust would be created in favor of the equitable assignee of the fund, and would constitute an equitable lien upon it." We can perceive no sufficient reason for excluding a bill for a part of a fund, whether it be negotiable or not, from operating as an equitable assignment within the limitations of the text. It would only carry out to its legitimate sequence the theory of the bill.' "

See, also, the cases of McGown v. Dalzell, 72 Cal. App. 197, 236 P. 941, and Bridge v. Kedon, 163 Cal. 493, 126 P. 149, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 404.

It is also self-evident that appellant regarded the Walsh trust as a continuation of the terms of the Taylor "Agreement of Settlement," the appellant-Pickering, Incorporated, contract, and the Pickering, Incorporated, trust, in so far as the rights of Taylor and his assignees to participate in the proceeds derived from the sale of the real property are concerned. No other view could reasonably explain the letters written by appellant and its acquiescence in the payment to the Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles and to respondent of $3,941.40 derived from the sales of the trust property after the cancellation of the Pickering, Incorporated, trust and the execution of the Walsh trust.

The construction which the parties to a contract place upon its terms is often taken as the best evidence of what they intended by its provisions. In Mitau v. Roddan, 149 Cal. 1, 84 P. 145, 150, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 275, it was said: "Parties to a contract have a right to place such an interpretation upon its terms as they see fit, even when such an interpretation is apparently contrary to the ordinary meaning of its provisions. And in all cases where the terms of their contract, or the language they employ, raises a question of doubtful construction, and it appears that the parties themselves have practically interpreted their contract, the courts will follow that practical construction. It is to be assumed that parties to a contract best know what was meant by its terms, and are the least liable to be mistaken as to its intention; that each party is alert to his own interests, and to insistence on his rights, and that whatever is done by the parties contemporaneously with the execution of the contract is done under its terms as they understood and intended it should be. Parties are far less liable to have been mistaken as to the intention of their contract during the period while harmonious and practical construction reflects that intention, than they are when subsequent differences have impelled them to resort to law, and one of them then seeks a construction at variance with the practical construction they have placed upon it. The law, however, recognizes the practical construction of a contract as the best evidence of what was intended by its provisions. In its execution, every executory contract requires more or less of a practical construction to be given it by the parties, and when this has been given, the law, in any subsequent litigation which involves the construction of the contract, adopts the practical construction of the parties as the true construction, and as the safest rule to be applied in the solution of the difficulty. Mayberry v. Alhambra, etc., Co., 125 Cal. 446, 54 P. 530, 58 P. 68; Keith v. Electrical Engineering Co., 136 Cal. 181, 68 P. 598."

By the voluntary termination of the trust in a manner not authorized by and contrary to its terms and the conveyance of the real property to Martha M. Frost, any possibility of respondent receiving further payments from the proceeds of the sale of the trust property was removed. Appellant cannot be permitted to thus defeat its own contract and avoid the payment of its indebtedness.

Insurance ⊂=598.

Where insurer satisfied judgment recovered by injured wife against assured and equal to limit of its liability under policy providing that insurer would also pay interest on judgment and costs, irrespective of limited liability, husband held not entitled to recover from insurer interest and costs on outlawed judgment he recovered against assured for consequential damages (St. 1919, p. 776; Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 1; Civ. Code, § 1915).

Word "interest" as used in provision that interest on any judgment against insured would be paid by company, irrespective of limits expressed in policy, meant interest accruing on principal sum of judgment for which company was liable under policy.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Action by E. J. Malmgren against the Southwestern Automobile Insurance Company. From a judgement for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Ford & Johnson and Fletcher A. Cutler, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. W. Middlecoff, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SPENCE, J.

Plaintiff recovered a judgment against one J. A. Eddy for damages sustained by him in consequence of personal injuries to plaintiff's wife cause by the negligent operation of an automobile by said J. A. Eddy. Plaintiff subsequently brought this action against the defendant insurance company which had issued a policy of insurance to said J. A. Eddy. The parties entered into a stipulation concerning the facts and a further stipulation that either party might move "for judgment upon the pleadings and the facts stipulated." The cause was tried upon the motions, and judgment was entered in favor of defendant. From this judgment plaintiff appeals.

Before discussing the facts appearing from the pleadings and stipulation, we shall first consider the theory upon which plaintiff based his alleged right to recover from the defendant company. The policy upon which this action was brought contained the following provisions: "The insolvency or bankruptcy of the assured shall not release the company from any payment for which it would otherwise be liable under this policy and if such insolvency or bankruptcy shall occur and an execution on a judgment recovered in a suit against the assured covered by this policy shall be returned unsatisfied the judgment creditor shall have a right of action to recover the amount of such judgment against the company to the same extent that the assured would have had to recover against the company had the assured paid the said judgment; but in no event shall the company's liability exceed the limits expressed in this policy." There was neither allegation nor proof in the present action of insolvency or bankruptcy of the assured; nor was there any allegation or proof that execution had been returned unsatisfied. We therefore conclude that plaintiff as judgment creditor had not attempted to plead and prove a cause of action under the above-mentioned provision of the policy. In this connection the pleading and proof merely showed that plaintiff's judgment against the assured had become final and that no part thereof had been paid.

This action was filed following the decision in Malmgren v. Southwestern Automobile Insurance Company, 201 Cal. 29, 255 P. 512, 513, and plaintiff's pleadings were no doubt drawn in the light of that decision. It was there pointed out that the policy involved in the present case failed to embody the provisions required by the act of 1919 (Stats. 1919, p. 776), but contained the language found in a somewhat similar New York statute. The Supreme Court held that the provisions of the statutes of this state "are part of every policy," and that the California statute in question "does not make the return of the execution unsatisfied a prerequisite to the commencement of an action upon the policy." The statute referred to provides that, "in case judgment shall be secured against the insured in an action brought by the injured person or his heirs or personal representatives, in case death resulted from the accident, then an action may be brought against the company, on the policy and subject to its terms and limitations, by such injured person, his heirs or personal representatives as the case may be, to recover on said judgment." It is therefore apparent from the pleadings and proof that plaintiff was attempting to state a cause of action upon the policy as supplemented by the provisions of the statute which were embodied into the policy as a matter of law.

From the pleadings and stipulation it appears that the policy of insurance was in effect on August 11, 1923, when plaintiff's wife sustained the bodily injuries; that plaintiff's wife was the only person who suffered bodily injuries in the accident; that plaintiff and his wife each brought separate actions against said J. A. Eddy; that the action brought by plaintiff's wife was for said bodily injuries suffered by her, in which action she recovered a judgment on May 3, 1924, for $5,000 and $19.75 costs; that the action brought by plaintiff was for consequential damages sustained by him as the result of said injuries to his wife, in which action plaintiff recovered judgment on February 10, 1925, in the sum of $2,411.95 and $13 costs; that no appeal was taken from said judgment in favor of plaintiff and against said J. A. Eddy, and that said judgment became final on April 10, 1925; that the judgment in favor of plaintiff's wife and against said J. A. Eddy was satisfied in full by the defendant herein on March 20, 1927, by the payment of the sum of $5,367.50 as the principal sum and interest, together with the sum of $19.75 as costs; that no part of the judgment in favor of plaintiff and against said J. A. Eddy had been paid; and that the present action was filed on April 8, 1930, being more than four years after said judgment in favor of plaintiff and against said J. A. Eddy became final.

It was stipulated in the trial court, for the purposes of the motions for judgment, "that the defendant's liability, if any, is for the interest on the judgment alone and the costs." It is not altogether clear whether plaintiff abandoned his effort to collect the principal sum of the judgment upon the theory that defendant's plea of the statute of limitations was good (Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 1), or upon the theory that plaintiff had no cause of action against the defendant company for the principal sum of a judgment for consequential damages rather than damages for personal injuries or upon the theory that the defendant was not liable for said principal sum by reason of the payment of the judgment in favor of plaintiff's wife, as the policy provided that "the company's liability for loss from an accident resulting in bodily injuries to or in the death of one person is limited to $5,000. * * *"

The policy, however, provided that: "The expenses incurred by the company in defending any suit, including the interest on any verdict or judgment and any costs taxed against the insured, will be paid by the company irrespective of the limits expressed above." It is by virtue of this last-mentioned provision of the policy that appellant contends that he was entitled to judgment against the respondent company for interest and costs on the judgment which appellant recovered against said J. A. Eddy. In our opinion, appellant's contention cannot be sustained.

[1, 2] The policy upon which appellant seeks to recover against respondent was primarily a contract between the respondent and the assured. Any right of action which appellant may have had as a judgment creditor of the assured to recover anything from respondent under the policy arose either by virtue of the express provisions of the policy or by virtue of the provisions of the statute embodied into the policy as a matter of law. Appellant failed to plead or prove a cause of action under the express terms of the policy first above set forth, and his right of action, if any, upon the policy arose by virtue of the provisions of the statute. It is unnecessary for us to determine whether appellant was the "injured person" within the meaning of the statute, for, even assuming that he was, his right of action, if any, against respondent for the principal sum of the judgment and costs arose as soon as the judgment became final. It was therefore barred by the statute of limitations. Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 1. But appellant takes the position that his right of action for interest on the judgment did not accrue until the installments of interest became due, and that therefore his right of action for such interest was not barred. No authority has been called to our attention holding that an independent action may be maintained for accruing installments of interest upon an obligation when the right of action to recover the principal sum is barred by the statute of limitations. We have been unable to find any support in the authorities for appellant's position, and believe that to sustain it would defeat the very purpose of such statutes of limitations. We are of the opinion, however, that appellant's position is untenable for a further and entirely different reason. Respondent paid a sum in excess of $5,000 to satisfy the judgment recovered against the assured by appellant's wife. The principal sum of that judgment was equal to the $5,000 limit provided in the policy, and respondent was not liable under the policy for the principal sum of any other judgment. Respondent further paid the interest on said judgment in favor of appellant's wife and the costs, "irrespective of the limits" of the policy. Appellant would have us construe the clause of the policy relating to interest to mean that, despite such payment in full to appellant's wife, respondent was also liable for interest on appellant's judgment against the assured, "irrespective of the limits" of the policy. We cannot agree with this construction, for we are of the opinion that the "interest on any verdict or judgment" which the company agreed to pay, "irrespective of the limits expressed above," had no reference to interest on the principal sum of any judgment for which principal sum the company was not in any manner liable. "Interest is the compensation allowed by law or fixed by the parties for the use, or forbearance, or detention of money." Civ. Code, § 1915. The only logical construction to place upon the word "interest," as used in the above-mentioned policy, is that it referred only to interest accruing on the principal sum of a judgment for which respondent was liable under the terms of the policy. To interpret the policy in accordance with the contention of appellant would lead to the absurd result of rendering respondent liable indefinitely for the payment of the accruing installments of interest upon an obligation of a third person for which obligation respondent was not in any manner liable. We do not believe that the rule of strict construction against the insurer may be invoked to sustain such an unreasonable construction.

The judgment is affirmed.

Separate actions by L. G. Weidner against Frank B. Zieglar and another, and against the Union Trust Company of San Diego. From the judgment plaintiff and defendants Frank B. Zieglar and another appeal.

Affirmed in part, and reversed in part.

Harrison G. Sloane, of San Diego, for Weidner.

JENNINGS, J.

The appeals herein are taken from judgments rendered in two actions which were consolidated and tried together. By stipulation entered into between counsel for the respective parties a single bill of exceptions has been prepared and the appeals are to be considered as though presented in a single case. Inasmuch, however, as the two actions instituted by plaintiff proceeded upon different theories and different relief was sought in each action, some preliminary explanation of them is required in order that there shall be a clearer understanding of the various points involved in the appeals. For the sake of convenience, the action instituted by plaintiff against Frank B. Zieglar, Harry F. Carling, and Union Trust Company of San Diego will be referred to as action No. 1, and the action instituted by plaintiff against Union Trust Company of San Diego alone will be referred to as action No. 2.

In his complaint in action No. 1 plaintiff sought the aid of a court of equity in declaring the meaning of a certain assignment made in his favor to be in accordance with his expressed understanding of its terms or that if such understanding were not expressed by the assignment that it be revised in conformity therewith. Further equitable relief was also sought in the form of an injunction pendente lite restraining a threatened sale by the Union Trust Company of San Diego of beneficial interests created by a certain declaration of trust. This injunctive relief was denied. The declaration of trust was executed by the Union Trust Company of San Diego as trustee on August 2, 1926. In it defendants Carling and Zieglar were denominated "Payees" and five individuals therein named were styled "class B" beneficiaries. The payees and class B beneficiaries in writing jointly and severally ratified, approved, and confirmed the said declaration in all particulars and expressly assented and agreed to its provisions. The circumstances under which the declaration was executed and certain of its provisions involved herein have received the attention of this court in an opinion in the case of Davies v. Union Trust Company of San Diego, decided on August 29, 1932, reported in 13 P.(2d) 961. The plaintiff Weidner was not originally a party to the trust created by the declaration of trust executed on August 2, 1926. It appears, however, that during the month of March, 1928, he acquired by assignment three-fifths of the class B beneficial interests in the trust, and subsequently on August 29, 1928, he received by assignment an additional one-fifth of the class B beneficial interests. It appears further that during the month of May, 1928, certain taxes which had been assessed against the property with respect to which the trust had been created were unpaid and had become delinquent. Defendant Zieglar had theretofore advanced the sum of $7,800 for the purpose of paying certain taxes, but an additional sum of $18,239.47 was required to avoid the penalties that were about to be imposed by reason of the aforesaid delinquency. In this state of affairs, plaintiff Weidner proposed to advance the amount thus required. The record shows that, at first, he was willing to advance the required amount as a class B beneficiary, but that, after a conference with the trust officer of the Union Trust Company, he arrived at the conclusion that repayment of the sum thus to be advanced by him might be accelerated and rendered more certain if he could make the advance from the more advantageous position of a "payee." A certain instrument was thereupon "devised by the Trustee and was signed by the plaintiff L. G. Weidner, and the defendant Frank B. Zieglar," as the court found. This instrument is entitled "Limited Assignment of 2d Payee's Interest" and is the instrument whose meaning and effect the plaintiff sought to have declared as being in accordance with his expressed understanding that, by its terms, until repayment of the advance made by him, he became a payee occupying the superior position and possessing the rights originally vested in the defendant Zieglar as "2d Payee" under the provisions of the trust declaration. In action No. 1 defendants Carling and Zieglar filed separate answers to plaintiff's complaint denying that plaintiff had made the advance as a payee or that the terms of the limited assignment of the second payee's interest had operated to make him a payee under the trust declaration until the advance should be repaid to him. These defendants also filed jointly a cross-complaint in which it is alleged that plaintiff had purchased a beneficial interest under the declaration of trust in March, 1928, and had accepted an assignment of such beneficial interest whereby he became a class B beneficiary under said trust declaration and thereby assumed the obligations of a class B beneficiary; that thereafter said plaintiff had failed to make payments of principal and interest and taxes as required by the provisions of the trust declaration, thereby causing a default to exist under the terms of said trust declaration because of which default the trustee had caused all beneficial interests to be sold at public sale and the proceeds to be applied as provided by the declaration of trust; that by such sale all of the security for the payment of the principal indebtedness was exhausted and there remained due and owing from plaintiff an unpaid balance amounting to $117,940.26, with interest from the date of said sale.

In action No. 2 brought against Union Trust Company as trustee under the aforementioned declaration of trust plaintiff sought to recover the sum advanced by him upon the theory that at the sale of all beneficial interests by the trustee the sum of $150,000 was realized, out of which fund the plaintiff was entitled to be reimbursed for the aforesaid advance.

At the conclusion of the trial of the two actions, consolidated as above stated, the court denied to plaintiff the relief sought by him in both actions. The court also denied to defendants Carling and Zieglar a judgment for the unpaid balance of the principal indebtedness. From the judgments thus rendered plaintiff and defendants Carling and Zieglar have prosecuted separate appeals. It is, first of all, apparent that if plaintiff Wiedner is unsuccessful in his appeal in action No. 1 his appeal in action No. 2 must fail. This must be true because, if the trial court was correct in its conclusion that the plaintiff became a class B beneficiary by virtue of the assignments of fractional parts of the class B beneficial interests, the sale by the trustee of all beneficial interests under the trust for defaults caused by the failure of the class B beneficiaries to make payments on the principal indebtedness and interest as required by the provisions of the trust declaration destroyed all class B beneficial interests, and plaintiff as an owner of such an interest could not claim reimbursement from the proceeds of a sale which was made by reason of his failure to perform obligations imposed upon him as a class B beneficiary.

In considering the appeals taken by the various parties from the court's judgment in action No. 1, we shall first give attention to the appeal of defendants Carling and Zieglar for, if as is conceded by counsel for plaintiff Weidner, we conclude that the appeal of these defendants is well taken, it follows necessarily that the plaintiff's appeal must fail. It is the contention of these defendants that the court erred in refusing to render judgment in their favor for the unpaid balance of the principal indebtedness remaining after application thereon of the sum of $150,000 realized by the trustee from the sale of all beneficial interests. This unpaid balance is stated in defendant's cross-complaint to amount to the sum of $117,940.26, together with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. from the date of the sale. In opposition to the contention thus advanced the plaintiff urges, first, that the declaration of trust imposed no personal liability upon class B beneficiaries and that, therefore, assuming that plaintiff by assignment became such a class B beneficiary burdened with the various duties and obligations of such a beneficiary, nevertheless he could not be held liable for any deficiency, since personal liability is a prerequisite to the existence of any liability for such deficiency. It must be conceded that if no personal liability rested upon the original class B beneficiaries none could possibly attach to plaintiff who later acquired four-fifths of the class B beneficial interests by assignment. The contention that no personal liability attached to the original class B beneficiaries received our attention in the case of Davies v. Union Trust Company, above referred to, and was decided adversely to the contention now advanced by plaintiff. The second and more important contention advanced by plaintiff is that, even assuming that there was a personal liability on the part of the original class B beneficiaries and that they might be held for a deficiency of the principal indebtedness after default on their part and a sale of their interests, nevertheless plaintiff did not, by the provisions of the assignment of such interests to him and by the terms of his written acceptance of such assignment, assume the obligations imposed upon the original class B beneficiaries by the provisions of the declaration of trust. The solution of the problem thus presented depends, in the final analysis, on the interpretation to be placed upon the language of the assignment by virtue of which plaintiff acquired fractional parts of the entire class B beneficial interest and more particularly upon the interpretation of the language of the acceptance of such assignment by plaintiff. The assignment is entitled "Assignment of Beneficial Interest" and is in the following language:

"For Value Received, Kathryn Hoetzel does hereby grant, assign, transfer, convey and warrant unto L. G. Weidner, subject however, to certain attachments filed with Union Trust Company of San Diego, an undivided two-fifths (2/5th) Class B Beneficial Interest in and to the Trust evidenced by that certain Declaration of Trust, or Trust Agreement, dated August 2nd, 1926 and issued by Union Trust Company of San Diego, as Trustee, under its Trust No. S-7528, together with a like interest in and to the proceeds and avails arising or growing out of said Declaration of Trust; said Trustee being hereby authorized to pay and turn over unto said assignee, all moneys and benefits growing out of the interests assigned herein.

"This assignment is subject to all of the terms and conditions of said Declaration of Trust.

"Dated, this 5th day of March, 1928.

"Kathryn Hoetzel."

Immediately below the above-quoted assignment is to be found the following language:

"Assignee's Acceptance.

"The undersigned assignee in the foregoing assignment, does hereby accept said Assignment and does hereby approve, warrant, ratify, confirm and agree to the Declaration of Trust referred to in said Assignment and all the terms and conditions thereof, hereby acknowledging that the same has been read by the undersigned.

"Dated this twenty-second day of March, 1928.

"L. G. Weidner."

Appended to the instrument containing the assignment and the assignee's acceptance and presumably forming a part of it is the following:

"Trustee's Certificate of Filing.

"A duplicate of this Assignment has been filed in the office of the undersigned, this 2nd day of April, 1928.

"Union Trust Company of San Diego, Trustee under its Declaration of Trust No. S-7528.

"By S. G. Ingle.

"Assistant Trust Officer."

[1] It is to be observed that the last clause of the assignment recites that it is "subject to all of the terms and conditions of said Declaration of Trust." Among the various terms of the document to which reference is thus made is: First, an unequivocal acknowledgment of indebtedness owing by designated class B beneficiaries; second, an unmistakable covenant on the part of the beneficiaries to protect and preserve the trust property from loss, damage, liability, and expense, to keep said property in good condition and to permit no waste or deterioration and to pay for any and all improvements that may be made on the property outside the purview of the Road District Improvement Act of 1909; third, a covenant on the part of all beneficiaries that, if proceeds from the sale of lots and parcels of the trust property, together with other payments made to the trustee, do not equal the installments of the principal indebtedness as the same become due, all such beneficiaries will pay such additional sums as may be necessary to enable the payment of such installment to be made; fourth, a covenant by beneficiaries to pay any tax, lien, or assessment levied against the trust property or any part thereof five days before delinquency. The presence in the declaration of trust of the aforesaid covenants together with the unqualified acknowledgment of the indebtedness of the purchase price due from class B beneficiaries to be paid to Carling and Zieglar, designated as "Payees," caused this court to decide, in the case of Davies v. Union Trust Company, supra, that a personal liability was imposed by the provisions of the trust declaration upon the class B beneficiaries and to affirm the judgment of the trial court holding such beneficiaries liable for whatever deficiency in the amount of the principal indebtedness as should remain after application thereto of the proceeds resulting from the sale of all beneficial interests for the purpose of exhausting the sole security provided for the payment of such principal indebtedness. It may be conceded that the general rule with respect to the liability of assignees of contracts is as stated in 2 Ruling Case Law, 625, viz., that such assignees may not be held for liabilities imposed by the provisions of contracts assigned to them in the absence of an assumption by such assignees of the liabilities of their assignors. Nevertheless, it is equally well settled that, when the assignee of a contract does assume the obligations imposed by the contract upon his assignor, he may be held liable for the performance of such obligations. Barberich v. Pooshichian, 59 Cal. App. 507, 211 P. 236.

[2] We come, then, to a consideration of the language of the assignment of the beneficial interest of class B beneficiaries and of plaintiff's written acceptance of such assignment. As heretofore noted, the assignment was expressly stated to be made subject to all of the terms and conditions of the declaration of trust. It was an assignment of an undivided fractional part of the class B beneficial interest "together with a like interest in and to the proceeds and avails arising or growing out of said Declaration of Trust." In the written acceptance of the assignment, plaintiff assignee specifically states that he "does hereby accept said assignment." Bearing in mind the language of the assignment which contained the express declaration that it was made subject to all terms and conditions of the trust declaration, it might well be argued that the language of the acceptance, viz., "does hereby accept said assignment," evidenced an intention on the part of plaintiff to accept the burdens and obligations of the contract as well as its benefits. The trial court found that at all times from March 5, 1928, to October 29, 1928, the plaintiff was a class B beneficiary under the declaration of trust. Plaintiff's counsel in his opening brief concedes that plaintiff has succeeded to the interest of the original class B beneficiaries under the trust. Furthermore, written acceptance of the assignment states that plaintiff "does hereby approve, warrant, ratify, confirm and agree to said Declaration of Trust and all the terms and conditions thereof." Since, therefore, as heretofore indicated, the declaration of trust imposed a personal liability upon the original class B beneficiaries rendering them liable for any deficiency that might result upon a sale of the beneficial interests, and the court has found that, by virtue of the assignment of a fractional part of the class B beneficial interests to plaintiff and his acceptance thereof, plaintiff became a class B beneficiary, it is difficult to escape the conclusion that the court erred in finding that plaintiff did not, by the purchase of a beneficial interest under the declaration of trust and his acceptance of the assignment, assume any of the obligations or responsibilities of the class B beneficiaries under the trust instrument so as to become liable for a deficiency judgment upon the obligation of the class B beneficiaries to pay the principal indebtedness. It is not open to doubt that if plaintiff had executed an acceptance of the assignment which had said "I accept the assignment and assume the obligations imposed by the provisions of the declaration of trust upon my assignors," plaintiff could be held liable for a deficiency assuming that his assignors could be held therefor. When therefore he stated in his acceptance of the assignment that he accepted the assignment and that he approved, ratified, confirmed, and agreed to the trust agreement and all its terms and conditions and by virtue of such assignment and his acceptance became, as the court found, a class B beneficiary, his express approval, ratification, confirmation, and agreement thereto fastened upon him whatever liability attached to his assignors under the instrument. The words "approve," "ratify," "confirm," and "agree" are not words of doubtful meaning. They are words that are often employed in agreements made by third persons who accept assignments of contractual rights. They are words that are positive in character and import an intention on the part of the user of them to perform the duties imposed by the contract whose provisions are thus expressly confirmed. We therefore find ourselves unable to agree with the finding of the court that plaintiff did not assume the obligations imposed upon his assignors by the provisions of the declaration of trust.

[3, 4] Since we are of the opinion that plaintiff, by virtue of the assignment and acceptance heretofore discussed, did assume the obligations resting upon his assignors and thereby became liable for the deficiency, as contended by defendants Carling and Zieglar, it necessarily follows that we are in accord with the court's judgment denying recovery to plaintiff for the amount advanced by him for the payment of taxes. One of the obligations imposed upon the original class B beneficiaries was the payment of the taxes. This duty is imposed in the following language contained in the trust agreement: "Should said property, or any part thereof, or the proceeds from any sale made become liable for payment of any inheritance, income or other tax, lien, or assessment, which Beneficiaries hereby jointly and severally agree to pay five (5) days before delinquency, Trustee is authorized to withhold and pay said tax, lien, or assessment out of any moneys in its possession for account of the person whose interests hereunder are so liable, unless the same has been paid." In spite of the evasiveness of the phraseology therein employed and the studious effort obviously apparent to avoid the making of a direct, simple covenant by the beneficiaries to pay taxes, it is evident that, in the language, "which Beneficiaries hereby jointly and severally agree to pay five (5) days before delinquency," there is contained a promise and a covenant to pay taxes. The court found that no consideration was given or received for the execution of the instrument entitled "Limited Assignment of Payee's Interest," which is the instrument that forms the basis for plaintiff's claim that he is entitled to be reimbursed for the money advanced by him for the payment of taxes. In this finding the court was correct. Since the duty rested upon plaintiff to pay taxes that were then delinquent, the performance of this duty by plaintiff could furnish no consideration for the execution of an instrument by one of the payees assigning to plaintiff his interest under the trust agreement to the extent of the amount thus advanced by plaintiff. This is in accordance with the rule announced in Sullivan v. Sullivan, 99 Cal. 187, 193, 33 P. 862, 864, in the following language: "It is well settled that neither a promise to perform a duty, nor the performance of a duty, constitutes a consideration of a contract." This obviously correct legal principle has received judicial approval in subsequent decisions, among which are to be noted the following: Marinovich v. Kilburn, 153 Cal. 638, 642, 96 P. 303, and Shipley Co. v. Rosemead Co., 100 Cal. App. 706, 714, 280 P. 1017.

It follows likewise that the judgment of the trial court in the action brought by plaintiff against the trustee, Union Trust Company of San Diego, alone was correct. The complaint in this action is framed upon the theory that when the payees under the trust agreement foreclosed all beneficial interests under such agreement and at the sale of such interests purchased them for the sum of $150,000 which was thereupon applied to the amount due payees on the principal indebtedness and interest thereon and for unpaid and delinquent taxes, a fund thereupon came into existence for the payees from which plaintiff was entitled to be reimbursed for the advance made by him for the purpose of paying taxes. Plaintiff's claim to such reimbursement rests again upon the assignment by the payee, Zieglar, of his interest under the trust agreement. Since as hereinabove noted no consideration was given by plaintiff for the execution of this instrument, it may not serve as the basis for his claim against the trustee for reimbursement.

The court's judgment in the two actions which were consolidated and tried together is therefore affirmed in so far as it denies any relief to plaintiff in either action. That portion of the judgment which holds that plaintiff L. G. Weidner is not liable for a deficiency judgment in favor of cross-plaintiffs Frank B. Zieglar and Harry F. Carling and that said cross-plaintiffs take nothing by reason of their cross-complaint, is reversed.

MORTON, Justice pro tem.

The appeal in this matter concerns solely the interpretation of a clause in the will of Otto S. Lewis, also known as O. S. Lewis, deceased, who died November 18, 1926. His will and the two codicils supplementary thereto were admitted to probate and the estate administered in Orange county, Cal. It involved properties in New Mexico, Arizona, Oregon, Washington, and California, and required four years to administer. The Orange County Trust & Savings Bank, a corporation, was named executor in the original will, but this appointment was changed by the codicil. Reeves Aylmore was appointed executor under the terms of the second codicil. He duly qualified and carried through a very successful and beneficial administration of the estate.

Paragraph 13 of the will provided for the compensation of the executor in the following phraseology: "And hereby fix its compensation as such Executor at five per cent. (5%) of the moneys received and paid out by it." At the hearing of the final account and petition for distribution, the court in its order determined the fees of the executor to be as follows: "That the Executor's fees, by the terms of the will, are 5% of the moneys received and paid out. The term 'moneys received and paid out' used in the will being construed by the Court as meaning 5% on the total value of said estate in the hands of said Executor; the 5% to be figured on this basis and not 5% on the moneys received and again 5% on the moneys paid out." The court decreed that the word "moneys" under the terms of the will of decedent meant the whole of said estate as received and accounted for by the executor. This portion of the order was not attacked by either side and is not before us for interpretation. Therefore the only question involved on this appeal is whether the fees of the executor should be 5 per cent. or 10 per cent. of the whole estate.

Appellant contends that he is entitled to 5 per cent. of all moneys received and 5 per cent. of all moneys paid out, thus giving him as executor 10 per cent. of the entire value of the estate as his fee. In support of his interpretation of the paragraph of the will which is in question, appellant relies chiefly upon Demarest v. Inhabitants of New Barbadoes Tp., 40 N. J. Law (11 Vroom) 604, 606. By an act of the Legislature of New Jersey the township collector was given three-fourths of one per cent. of all school funds received and paid out by him for school purposes during the year to be paid out by the township committee from the funds of the township. In construing this phrase the court said: "The three-fourths of one per cent. given by the above act (March, 1867) were held below to be allowable on the funds received by the collector for school purposes; and again, also, on the funds paid out by him for such purposes, for the reason that the words 'funds received and paid out' would, on the opposite construction, be the same as if the word 'received' had been omitted, inasmuch as the collector would not pay out funds not received. To give the word 'received' its proper meaning and effect, the percentage was allowed on each of the funds named."

Respondent, in opposition to appellant's contention, cites the case of In re Roberts, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 43. In granting an allowance for guardian's compensation on a petition for caring for the estate of a lunatic Chancellor Kent made the following provision: "Five per cent. on all sums received and paid out, not exceeding 1,000 dollars—(i. e. two and one-half per cent. for such sums received, and 2½ per cent. for such sums paid out). Two and a half per cent. on any excess, between 1,000 dollars and 5,000 dollars. One per cent. for all above 5,000 dollars." We therefore come to the point of determining whether, from an interpretation of the language employed in the will, it shall be held that the intention of the testator was in accordance with the construction drawn by the New Jersey decision or with that of Chancellor Kent.

[1] In the interpretation of wills the testator's intention is to be discovered primarily from the language used. Many times the examination of the entire instrument will furnish a clue as to the testamentary scheme. Referring to decedent's will we find that although it disposed of a large estate he limited his funeral and burial expenses to $200.

In paragraph 7 of the will he stated: "It is my desire and I so direct that unless absolutely necessary, my executor be relieved from all forms and proceedings required by the laws of California or of other states where any of my property may be situated, in reference to the settlement or administration of estates of deceased persons. * * *" Evidently realizing that his properties were widely scattered and somewhat difficult to manage, he advised his executor to consult certain parties whose names and addresses he incorporated in his will. It is thus apparent that he endeavored in every way to conserve expense and avoid unnecessary procedure in the administration of his estate.

[2] As a guide for the interpretation of wills we have section 102 of the Probate Code, which reads as follows: "The words of a will are to receive an interpretation which will give to every expression some effect, rather than one which will render any of the expressions inoperative; and of two modes of interpreting a will, that is to be preferred which will prevent a total intestacy." Also section 103: "Where the meaning of any part of a will is ambiguous or doubtful, it may be explained by any reference thereto, or recital thereof, in another part of the will. All the parts of a will are to be construed in relation to each other, and so as, if possible, to form one consistent whole; but where several parts are absolutely irreconcilable, the latter must prevail." In 26 California Jurisprudence, p. 887, § 203, it is stated: "If a disputed word or phrase has a well-defined legal or popular meaning, the presumption is that the testator intended the expression to have this meaning; and this presumption will be given effect, unless an intention to use the term in another sense is disclosed by the context of the will. * * *" We find in the case of In re Willets' Estate, 112 N. Y. 289, 665, 19 N. E. 690, at page 694, that a New York statute provided in probate matters for the following commission to executors: "For receiving and paying out all sums of money, not exceeding one thousand dollars, at the rate of five dollars per cent.; for receiving and paying out any sums exceeding one thousand dollars, and not amounting to ten thousand dollars, at the rate of two dollars and fifty cents per cent.; for all sums of above ten thousand dollars, at the rate of one dollar per cent." In its opinion the court said: "This language received at a very early date construction in the courts, and it was held that executors, administrators, and trustees were entitled to one-half of their commissions for the receipt of the funds, and the other half for paying out the same." A Kentucky statute authorizing a maximum allowance to executors of 5 per cent. "on all the amounts received and distributed" was interpreted in the same manner in the case of Renick's Executor v. Renick et al., 92 Ky. 335, 17 S. W. 1018. Therefore, considering the entire contents of the will, the surrounding circumstances, and the legal interpretation that has been given to the phrase "received and paid out" in connection with the administration of estates, we believe that the trial court correctly interpreted this compensatory paragraph of the will in its finding.

[3, 4] Over the objection of respondent evidence was admitted concerning oral declarations of the decedent to the executor as to what he intended should be the compensation of the executor of his estate. The ambiguity created by his phrase "5% of the moneys received and paid out" we feel is not a latent ambiguity and therefore the oral declarations of decedent were not admissible. Civ. Code, §§ 1318 and 1340, now covered in section 105, Probate Code; 26 Cal. Jur. 890, § 206. This error, however, was in favor of appellant and he cannot be heard to complain.

The order appealed from is hereby affirmed.

PRESTON, J.

Plaintiff, alleging her indigence, as well as that of her adopted daughter, in this action sued her former husband for the support of said daughter, a minor, born on February 24, 1912. Defendant resisted the action, denying adoption of the daughter, and further pleading that in the year 1919 plaintiff secured from him in the state of Oklahoma a divorce upon grounds of cruelty, by which decree the custody of said daughter was awarded to plaintiff, and defendant was required to pay plaintiff certain sums for the support and maintenance of said daughter until she reached the age of eighteen years, which is a majority in that state, that she reached that age prior to the filing of this action, and that he faithfully observed the order of the court of Oklahoma with respect to such maintenance, thus being relieved from any further liability for her support.

The facts are that about the year 1922 plaintiff and the daughter removed to California, and subsequent to that date defendant also took up his residence in this state. The indigence of the mother and daughter is conceded, and the ability of the defendant to respond to the order of the court is also apparent.

Upon trial of the cause, the court found against the defendant on all issues, and ordered payment by him of the sum of $75 per month for the support and maintenance of said daughter, to which was added the sum of $150 as counsel fees and $23.15 as costs. From the judgment so entered, defendant has appealed.

[1, 2] Since the recasting of section 270 of the Penal Code by the act of 1923 (St. 1923, p. 592), the failure of a father to provide necessary support and maintenance for his minor child has been a criminal offense. This is true, regardless of agreements, property settlements, decree of divorce, or decrees respecting custody or maintenance of the minor, affecting the husband and wife. All doubt or confusion on this subject has also been settled by recent decisions of this court. Federal Mutual, etc., Co. v. Industrial Accident Com., 195 Cal. 283, 233 P. 335; Southern California Edison Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 92 Cal. App. 355, 268 P. 415. Neither the age of majority in Oklahoma nor the provisions of a decree of divorce in that jurisdiction have any bearing whatsoever on this issue.

[3] The Oklahoma judgment of divorce, however, which decreed the legal adoption of the minor by plaintiff and defendant, furnished ample evidence to justify the finding of the court below in this action that the legal adoption of the minor was in fact consummated in 1916. This is true, notwithstanding the production of only fragmentary portions of the adoption record now existing in that state.

[4] The further contention is made that there is no legal sanction for the allowance of suit money or counsel fees in a case of this character. We think, however, that section 137 of the Civil Code, when fairly construed, authorizes such allowance. This section authorizes the wife, where a cause for divorce exists, to sue for her support and that of the minor children, and in such an action the court may allow the money necessary for the prosecution of the suit. The fact that the complaint in the present action alleged and the evidence showed that a divorce had already been granted upon a ground allowed by our statutes did not preclude the maintenance of this suit by the wife under said section for support of the child. However, the allowance of attorney's fees in this case was not for future services, but for services already performed, and such an allowance is not authorized. Loveren v. Loveren, 100 Cal. 494, 35 P. 87; San Diego v. Southern Pacific R. R., 108 Cal. 46, 40 P. 1052.

The judgment is modified by striking from it the allowance of $150 for counsel fees, and, as so modified, it is affirmed, without costs on appeal to either party

Plaintiff, on January 5, 1932, secured judgment in Dixon v. Dixon (Cal. Sup.) 14 P.(2d) 497, ordering defendant to pay the sum of $75 per month for the maintenance and support of the minor adopted daughter of these parties, together with $150 counsel fees and costs, from which defendant appealed. Plaintiff thereupon instituted this proceeding on motion to secure support and maintenance for the minor child pending appeal from said judgment, together with further counsel fees and costs. Defendant resisted the motion; the matter was heard, and on January 26, 1932, the court gave its order directing defendant to pay, pending said appeal, the sum of $75 per month for the support of said child and $300 counsel fees, all monthly payments so made to be credited upon said judgment in the event of its affirmance. Defendant thereupon appealed from said order.

The action of the court below in so providing for the support and maintenance of the minor pending determination of the appeal from the judgment in the main case was proper. Sheppard v. Sheppard, 161 Cal. 348, 119 P. 492.

Plaintiff, on January 5, 1932, secured judgment in Dixon v. Dixon (Cal. Sup.) 14 P.(2d) 497, ordering defendant to pay the sum of $75 per month for the maintenance and support of the minor adopted daughter of these parties, together with $150 counsel fees and costs, from which judgment defendant appealed. Plaintiff thereafter moved the court for an order requiring defendant to pay for the support and maintenance of said child and for counsel fees and costs, pending the appeal from said judgment. The motion was heard, and on January 26, 1932, the court duly ordered defendant to pay $75 per month, commencing February 1, 1932, and, pending his appeal from said judgment, all payments so made to be credited as payments on account of the judgment in the event defendant is unsuccessful on said appeal, and the court further ordered defendant to pay to plaintiff $300 for and on account of counsel fees on said appeal and costs. Said order, from which defendant appealed, we have this day affirmed. Dixon v. Dixon (Cal. Sup.) 14 P.(2d) 498.

Thereafter, and on February 26, 1932, plaintiff instituted this proceeding to secure support and maintenance for the minor child pending defendant's appeal from said judgment and also his appeal from said order of January 26, 1932, and to secure further counsel fees and costs to prosecute the defense to said appeal from the order of January 26, 1932. Defendant resisted the motion. The matter was heard, and on March 24, 1932, the court made its order directing defendant to pay to plaintiff $75 per month as and for support and maintenance of said minor child pending the appeal from the judgment of January 5, 1932, and also the appeal from the order of January 26, 1932, said payments to be made on the 1st day of each month commencing April 1, 1932, and, in the event of the denial of either of said appeals, to be credited upon said judgment; further directing defendant to pay all necessary costs of plaintiff in perfecting her appeal and the sum of $150 as counsel fees in this matter. Defendant thereupon appealed from said order.

The action of the court below, however, in so providing for the support and maintenance of the minor pending determination of the appeal from the judgment in the main case and from said later order, was proper. Sheppard v. Sheppard, 161 Cal. 348, 119 P. 492.

PRESTON, J.

Upon this appeal, in an action to recover for alleged personal services rendered by plaintiff, as an architect, in connection with the proposed construction of an apartment house, a question arises as to the propriety of the court's action in overruling, for lack of prosecution, the demurrer of certain defendants and thereafter permitting the entry against them of judgment by default.

The complaint alleges that defendant corporation proposed to construct an apartment house in Hollywood at a cost of $4,600,000, later raised to $6,000,000, and on October 14, 1924, entered into an agreement to employ plaintiff, as its architect and engineer, to perform various services, for which he was to receive as compensation 3 per cent. "of the actual final total cost of said apartment building," 1 per cent. thereof being payable as follows: $2,000 on November 1, 1924, to be placed in a special bank account, which was to be kept subject to plaintiff's check at approximately that figure, for the purpose of furnishing a drawing account for expenses; the remainder of said 1 per cent. to be paid upon completion of the working plans and specifications for said building; the other 2 per cent. compensation to be applied "upon the subscription" by plaintiff to $162,700 worth of capital stock of the corporation, carrying with it ninety-nine-year leases upon eight specified apartments, which stock had a par value of $100 per share, and, it is alleged, would be worth that sum, had the building plans been carried out.

The pleading further alleges that on November 1, 1924, plaintiff was ready to perform under said contract and did for nine months thereafter perform all things required of him, but that defendant corporation did not build the building or otherwise keep any of its promises, aside from giving preliminary instructions and depositing $1,450 to plaintiff's credit; that plaintiff expended $713.60 in performing said contract; that the cost of office space, assistants, and all other expenses, in performing it to completion, would have been $29,800; that there is due, owing, and unpaid to plaintiff from said defendant $150,200. The complaint further alleges, upon information and belief, that all subscribed and outstanding stock of the corporation, totaling 8,251 shares, is owned by the various stockholder defendants in the respective proportions alleged. The prayer is for judgment against the corporation in the sum of $150,200 as well as for judgment against each of the other defendants for "the portion of said $150,200 which the number of shares of said corporation set opposite the names of said defendants, respectively, in said schedule, bears to the total number of shares * * * subscribed, issued or outstanding," and for costs or other or further relief.

The defendant stockholders here appealing filed a demurrer to said complaint upon the ground that it did not state a cause of action or show how plaintiff had been damaged in said sum, or what, if any, services he performed or what judgment was prayed against each demurring defendant and that the damage alleged was purely speculative and unascertainable. On June 21, 1927, the court made a minute order stating: "* * * for lack of prosecution, said demurrer is overruled." Almost two years later, to wit, on June 12, 1929, a judgment by default was entered awarding plaintiff judgment against defendant Dudley for $1,383.49; against defendant Stephens for $131,941.53; against defendant Smith for $2,330.09; and against defendant Bollman for $1,274.27. The three latter defendants appealed upon the ground that their demurrer should have been sustained for the reasons therein stated.

[1] We must agree with them that the complaint offered no sound basis for a judgment in favor of plaintiff. It cannot be told therefrom whether the $6,000,000, proposed increased cost, or the $4,600,000, original proposed cost, or either of them, should serve as a basis for computing plaintiff's compensation, which was to be 3 per cent. of the "actual final total cost" of the building. The figure named in the prayer of the complaint, $150,200, is evidently computed at 3 per cent. of $6,000,000, less estimated expenses, $29,800. Yet it does not appear whether the $713.60 actually expended by plaintiff is included in said $29,800 estimate or whether it should be charged against the $1,450 already paid nor can it be told whether the $1,450 has been duly credited. Furthermore, plaintiff has not included himself in the list of stockholders of the corporation, although he alleges that 2 per cent. of his compensation was to be applied upon his "subscription" to "$162,700 par value of shares of capital stock" of the corporation. The par value of the stock is alleged at $100 per share, but it does not appear whether plaintiff was to pay that sum for it; hence it cannot be told how many shares he subscribed for or what his proportionate liability as a stockholder would be. Moreover, the complaint fails to plead the existence of a permit from the commissioner of corporations authorizing a sale of corporate stock, upon terms providing that plaintiff subscribe to a portion thereof; hence his contract may have been wholly void.

[2] It is unnecessary to discuss the above and other uncertainties of the pleading at greater length. Enough has been said to show that the court's action in overruling the demurrer must have been predicated solely upon the ground stated in its order, to wit: "lack of prosecution." But want of prosecution will not authorize the dismissal of a demurrer, which, whether or not a defendant appears to urge it, raises an issue of law and that issue of law must be decided. Philip v. Durkee, 108 Cal. 300, 41 P. 407; Winchester v. Black, 134 Cal. 125, 66 P. 197. The action of the court was, therefore, erroneous, and the judgment entered for plaintiff must be reversed. It is so ordered.

PRESTON, J.

In this cause two of the defendants answered and were given judgment, from which plaintiff appealed. Later the appeal as to respondent Mrs. Garfield R. Jones was dismissed and defendant Porter is now the only respondent.

The complaint alleged that defendant corporation proposed to construct an apartment house in Hollywood at a cost of $4,600,000, later raised to $6,000,000, and on October 14, 1924, entered into an agreement to employ plaintiff, as its architect and engineer, to perform various services, for which he was to receive as compensation 3 per cent. "of the actual final total cost of said apartment building," portions of 1 per cent. thereof being payable from time to time, the remainder of said 1 per cent. to be paid upon completion of the working plans and specifications for the building, and the other 2 per cent. to be applied upon the subscription by plaintiff to $162,700 worth of capital stock of the corporation, carrying with it ninety-nine year leases upon eight specified apartments, which stock had a par value of $100 per share, and, it is alleged, would be worth that sum, had the building plans been carried out.

The pleading further alleges that on November 1, 1924, plaintiff was ready to perform under said contract and did for nine months thereafter perform all things required of him, but that defendant corporation kept none of its promises, aside from giving preliminary instructions and depositing $1,450 to plaintiff's credit; that plaintiff expended $713.60 in performing said contract; that his total expenses in performing it to completion would have been $29,800; that there was due, owing, and unpaid to plaintiff from said defendant $150,200. The complaint further alleges, upon information and belief, that all subscribed and outstanding stock of the corporation, totaling 8,251 shares, is owned by the various stockholder defendants, in the respective proportions alleged, respondent being the holder of 166 shares thereof. The prayer is for judgment against the corporation in the sum of $150,200 as well as for judgment against each of the other defendants for "the portion of said $150,200 which the number of shares of said corporation set opposite the names of said defendants, respectively, in said schedule, bears to the total number of shares * * * subscribed, issued or outstanding" and for costs or other or further relief.

The answer of respondent contained a denial of all of the allegations of the complaint and urged, as a second defense, that plaintiff was not, at the time of the making of said alleged contract, licensed to practice the profession of architecture, and, as a third defense, that said alleged contract was void because, if made at all, it was made without the approval of the commissioner of corporations and in violation of the permit issued for the subscription and sale of the capital stock of said corporation.

At the conclusion of the trial two sets of findings and two judgments were made and filed on the same day, one set relating solely to respondent Porter and the other to both said respondent and defendant Jones. The conclusion reached in these documents is identical and their language is similar. Not the slightest inconsistency appears in either the findings or the judgments; hence the two sets will be considered as forming together the findings and judgment of the court below. The court found, in substance, that the various allegations of the complaint were untrue; that the alleged contract, upon which the cause of action is based, was void as in contravention of the Corporate Securities Act (St.

The case does not merit extended consideration. No prejudicial error appears in the record with respect to the admission or rejection of testimony and all essential findings and the judgments have ample support in the evidence, notwithstanding the claims of appellant to the contrary; particularly, the record shows the stock subscription of respondent to have been conditional, depending upon contingencies which did not arise.

The purported agreement, in substance as alleged in the complaint, between appellant and the corporation, was clearly violative of the terms of the said permit in that it provided mainly for an exchange of services in return for a credit on a subscription by appellant to $162,700 worth of capital stock of said corporation. The provisions of the permit authorized only sales for not less than 40 per cent. in cash, with the balance to be paid within a specified period. No exchange such as contemplated by the above agreement was sanctioned; hence said agreement was void. Domenigoni v. Imperial Live Stock & Mortgage Co., 189 Cal. 467, 209 P. 36; Imperial Livestock Co. v. Tracy, 208 Cal. 205, 281 P. 50; Gridley v. Tilson, 202 Cal. 748, 262 P. 322. It is evident that the court below reached the only conclusion proper in this cause.

The judgment is affirmed.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 21, 1932.

1. Judgment ⇐818(3).

Full faith and credit clause and statutes enacted thereunder do not apply to judgments by court having no jurisdiction of parties or subject-matter, or of res in proceeding in rem (Const. U. S. art. 4, § 1).

2. Judgment ⇐818(3).

Jurisdiction of court rendering judgment may be questioned in collateral proceeding in another state, notwithstanding full faith and credit clause and averments in record of judgment itself (Const. U. S. art. 4, § 1).

3. Divorce ⇐167.

Colorado court had jurisdiction to vacate fraudulent divorce decree husband obtained in such court without service on wife, though husband had died when decree was vacated.

Court could vacate such decree notwithstanding that husband had died and the res or matrimonial status ceased to exist, since the power to vacate such a decree is not based on the continued existence of the marital status, but on the court's control of its own records, and its inherent power to purge its records of judgments obtained by fraud, and since the wife did not seek to relitigate question of whether husband was entitled to divorce, but simply sought the power of the court to wipe from its records a judgment fraudulently obtained against her, which if not wiped out would seriously affect her property rights.

4. Divorce ⇐167.

One party to divorce action may, subsequent to death of other, have divorce decree set aside on proof that such decree was procured by extrinsic fraud.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon R. Yankwich, Judge.

Action by Sophie Britton against Frank Bryson, as administrator of the estate of John Henry Britton, deceased, and another. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Leland J. Allen, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Dana R. Weller, of Los Angeles, for respondent D. C. Hammell.

Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and S. V. O. Prichard, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for Public Administrator.

PER CURIAM.

Action to quiet title to certain lots situated in the county of Los Angeles was commenced by plaintiff, Sophie Britton, against John Henry Britton, as her husband, and one D. C. Hammell. Immediately prior to the institution of this action John Henry Britton had conveyed said property to said D. C. Hammell by a gift deed, and plaintiff sought, as the wife of John Henry Britton, to have said property declared to be the community property of herself and John Henry Britton, and a judgment that D. C. Hammell owned no interest therein. During the pendency of the action John Henry Britton died, and the administrator of his estate, Frank Bryson, was substituted in his place and stead. It appears that Sophie Britton and John Henry Britton were married in the year 1873. Five children were born as the result of that union. In March, 1891, while the parties were both domiciled in Colorado, John Henry Britton secured a decree of divorce from his wife in the county of Bent, state of Colorado. This decree dissolved the marriage relation, and in addition awarded to the wife the care, custody, and control of the five children, alimony of $40 per month, and required the plaintiff in said action, John Henry Britton, to deed to defendant therein, Sophie Britton, certain real property situated in Arapahoe county, Colo. It is the claim of Sophie Britton that this decree was fraudulently obtained by John Henry Britton, as they were both residents of Arapahoe county, not Bent county, Colo., at that time; that she was never served with summons; and that although an attorney, one W. B. Lourance, purported to act for her in the matter, she knew nothing of the matter and, in fact, knew nothing of the procurement of the decree until after the death of her husband, John Henry Britton, during the pendency of this action. She further claims that the terms of the decree were never carried out by John Henry Britton, either as to the deeding of the Colorado property to her or the payment of the alimony, and that there were no circumstances to indicate to her or to arouse her suspicions that any divorce had been procured by her husband. The next month following the procurement of the divorce, in April, 1891, John Henry Britton married Rose E. Dixter in the state of Texas. Thereafter by deed dated May 13, 1916, he acquired in his own name the property which is the subject of this action. On March 2, 1923, John Henry Britton executed a deed conveying his interest in this and other described property to Rose E. Britton. This deed was recorded on May 31, 1923. Subsequently on June 2, 1924, John Henry Britton executed another deed conveying this particular property to Rose Britton as her sole and separate property. This deed was recorded on July 29, 1924. On June 26, 1924, Rose Britton reconveyed said property to John Henry Britton as his separate property. This deed was recorded January 2, 1926. On April 19, 1926, John Henry Britton executed a deed of gift of said property to D. C. Hammell, reserving to himself the "exclusive possession, use and enjoyment in his own right, of the rents, issues and profits thereof," and further reserving the right to revoke said deed and sell and convey said property. Subsequently on May 12, 1926, he executed another deed of said property to D. C. Hammell. This was the usual form of gift deed and contained no reservations. This deed was recorded May 14, 1926. When this suit was instituted on August 6, 1926, John Henry Britton appeared first by demurrer and then by answer. An inspection of his pleadings shows that there was no mention therein of the divorce procured by him in 1891, and it was not until the answer of the administrator of his estate had been filed that this decree of divorce was set up as a defense. During the pendency of this action, plaintiff instituted in Colorado a suit in equity in which Frank Bryson, as administrator of the estate of John Henry Britton, and the five children of said couple, as the heirs at law of said John Henry Britton, were named as defendants. By this action, which was commenced in Bent county, Colo., she sought to have set aside the former decree of divorce granted by said court upon the ground that it had been fraudulently procured by her husband without service upon her. Substituted service was procured upon Frank Bryson, administrator of his estate, in California, and the five children accepted service. In that action she proved to the satisfaction of the court and the court specifically found that fraud had been perpetrated by John Henry Britton upon the "County Court of Bent County, State of Colorado" by the filing of a purported service of summons and a representation that the said W. B. Lourance, an attorney, represented the said Sophie Britton, when in fact no service had been made upon Sophie Britton and W. B. Lourance did not in fact represent Sophie Britton, and had no authority to represent her. Judgment was entered on July 16, 1928, in favor of the plaintiff that "the purported decree of divorce entered in Judgment Book 2, page 272 of the County Court of Bent County, State of Colorado, is set aside and decreed void and of no force and effect whatsoever; that the relationship of husband and wife between John H. Britton and Sophie Britton be decreed as if the said purported decree had not been entered."

At the trial of the instant action there were introduced by stipulation of both parties a copy of the decree of divorce procured by John Henry Britton from plaintiff in 1891, and likewise a copy of the decree of the county court of Bent county, Colo., of July 16, 1928, setting aside the former decree of divorce secured by John Henry Britton from Sophie Britton in 1891. There were also introduced in evidence the depositions of Sophie Britton and her daughter, Pearl Britton. The deposition of the former contained a statement that she had never been served with a summons in a divorce action at any time; that she had never secured a divorce; and that continuously from December 4, 1873, until the death of John Henry Britton on June 29, 1927, she was his wife. It was also stipulated that a claim for $17,000, arrearage of alimony had been filed by plaintiff against the estate of John Henry Britton, which claim was to be dismissed if the judgment in this action were favorable to the plaintiff.

Upon the submission of the case herein, which was tried without a jury, the court, apparently upon the theory that the judgment in the divorce suit was binding upon it by virtue of the full faith and credit clause of the United States Constitution (article 4), and that the judgment in the later suit setting aside said former decree was an idle act—an absolute nullity—gave judgment for the defendants. From this judgment plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

[1, 2] It is at once apparent that the answer to the question of whether or not the property in controversy ever was the community property of the plaintiff and the defendant John Henry Britton depends upon the binding effect upon the courts of this state of the two decrees of the Colorado court introduced in evidence by stipulation. At the outset it should be stated that as we understand the record the stipulation with reference to the introduction of each of these decrees in evidence went only to the authenticity of the decrees as judgments of the county court of Bent county, Colo., and no further. The stipulation did not concede the jurisdiction of the court in either action, nor the validity and binding effect of either judgment. It is obvious that plaintiff did not intend by the stipulation to concede the jurisdiction of the Colorado court to render the judgment therein procured, since by the same stipulation she was introducing in evidence a subsequent decree the very purpose of which was to conclusively prove that the court in the former case was without jurisdiction. Neither did the defendants intend to concede jurisdiction to the court to enter the later decree declaring void the former divorce decree, since their sole contention upon this appeal is that said decree is powerless to affect said former decree by reason of the fact that the court in the later action never obtained proper jurisdiction, inasmuch as no personal jurisdiction was obtained of Frank Bryson, administrator of the estate of John Henry Britton, he having been served by substituted service in California.

Although it is well established that each of the judgments rendered by the county court of Bent county, Colo., if a valid judgment, is binding upon the courts of this state by virtue of the oft-quoted provision of article 4 of the Constitution of the United States that "Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State," it is also well established by a long line of decisions of the United States Supreme Court "that the full faith and credit clause and the statutes enacted thereunder, do not apply to judgments rendered by a court having no jurisdiction of the parties or subject-matter, or of the res in a proceeding in rem." D'Arcy v. Ketchum, 11 How. 165, 13 L. Ed. 648; Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. 457, 469, 21 L. Ed. 897; Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 11 S. Ct. 773, 35 L. Ed. 464; Bigelow v. Old Dominion Copper Co., 225 U. S. 111, 134, 32 S. Ct. 641, 56 L. Ed. 1009, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 875. And it is equally well established that "the jurisdiction of the court by which a judgment is rendered in any State may be questioned in a collateral proceeding in another State, notwithstanding the provision of the fourth article of the Constitution and the law of 1790, and notwithstanding the averments contained in the record of the judgment itself." Thompson v. Whitman, supra; National Exchange Bank v. Wiley, 195 U. S. 257, 270, 25 S. Ct. 70, 49 L. Ed. 184.

The determination of the controversy herein therefore depends upon the answers to the questions: Did the county court of Bent county, Colo., have jurisdiction to make and enter the judgment of July 16, 1928, setting aside and declaring void the decree of divorce granted by it in 1891? Did the county court of Bent county, Colo., have jurisdiction to make and enter the judgment of divorce granted by it to John Henry Britton in 1891? It is obvious that, if the answer to the first question be in the affirmative, it will not be necessary for us to consider the second question by reason of the fact that the judgment of July 16, 1928, if valid and of binding effect, wiped out and completely nullified the effect of the decree of divorce of 1891. We will, therefore, address ourselves to a consideration of the question of whether or not the Colorado court had jurisdiction to render the judgment of July 16, 1928, annulling the decree of divorce.

[3, 4] It is argued that the action in the Colorado court to set aside the decree of divorce formerly granted by the same court was an action in personam; that jurisdiction could only be obtained by personal service within the state of Colorado; that jurisdiction was attempted to be obtained by substituted service upon the administrator of the estate of John Henry Britton in California, but that such service was not sufficient to give jurisdiction inasmuch as substituted service in a personal action is not permitted to extend to persons beyond the state and the administrator could not, even by consent, confer jurisdiction upon the Colorado court by accepting service or by voluntary appearance outside the state. If the action be a personal action, it is, of course, necessary that personal service upon the proper parties be made within the state of Colorado and service by publication or substituted service in another state will not suffice to confer jurisdiction upon the court. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 727, 24 L. Ed. 565. On the other hand, if the action be one in rem, personal jurisdiction of all parties litigant is not necessary, it being sufficient if the courts have jurisdiction of the moving parties and of the res in controversy. In cases involving the marital status of parties in which that status is sought to be destroyed, it has been held that jurisdiction to render a valid judgment by the court of the matrimonial domicile of the parties having jurisdiction of the moving party was gained by service by publication upon the defendant, a resident of another state, upon the theory that the court had jurisdiction of the moving party and the res—the marital status—and that the judgment so obtained was entitled in all other states to full faith and credit. Atherton v. Atherton, 181 U. S. 155, 21 S. Ct. 544, 45 L. Ed. 794; Thompson v. Thompson, 226 U. S. 551, 33 S. Ct. 129, 57 L. Ed. 347. It is argued in the instant case that by virtue of the death of the husband, the res—that is to say, the marital status—ceased to exist, and any action involving the marital status of the parties must necessarily cease to be an action in rem and becomes one in personam. We do not think this necessarily follows. It is now well settled in California that subsequent to the death of one of the parties, the other may have said decree set aside upon proof that the judgment of divorce was procured by extrinsic fraud. McGuinness v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 222, 237 P. 42, 40 A. L. R. 1110; Citizens N. T. & Savings Bank v. Tomb (Cal. App.) 7 P.(2d) 1104. It is evident, therefore, that regardless of the existence of the res—that is to say, the marital status—the court had sufficient jurisdiction to render a valid judgment with reference thereto. It would seem, therefore, that the power to render such a judgment is based not upon the continued existence of the marital status, but upon the court's control of its own records, and its inherent power to purge its records of judgments obtained by fraud. In other words, in such an action the res is not the marital status, which has ceased to exist, but the former judgment itself over which the court continues to retain power. That this is so is, we think, indicated by the language of Mr. Justice Richards in the case of McGuinness v. Superior Court, supra, 196 Cal. 222, 237 P. 42, 47, 40 A. L. R. 1110. In that case the wife, after the death of her husband, sought and secured a decree setting aside a final decree of divorce entered by her husband without her knowledge and without her consent subsequent to their reconciliation following the entry of an interlocutory decree of divorce. It was there urged that the divorce action being one brought solely to sever the marriage relation between the parties thereto, the said action abated upon the death of the party defendant subsequent to the entry of the final decree, and the trial court thereby lost jurisdiction to take any action whatever in said case. Mr. Justice Richards, speaking for the court, said: "The plaintiff by her own motion made in the divorce action is not seeking to reopen said action for the purpose of further litigating the question as to whether she, or the defendant either, is entitled to a divorce. That question has been settled by the defendant's death, and as to it or any further litigation regarding it in said action it has been abated. But the plaintiff, notwithstanding the abatement of the action in so far as the issues therein are involved, is seeking to invoke the power of the court over its own records, by suggesting and offering to show to the court that it has been imposed upon by the extrinsically fraudulent acts and concealments of the defendant. * * * This is the principal purpose of her said motion. * * * To such a purpose the death of the defendant in said action is merely incidental, and is in no wise controlling upon the power of the court to purge its records of orders and decrees which the court has been wrongfully misled into making through the fraudulent imposition of a party to an action pending, at the time of such imposition, before it. To hold that the party having accomplished such imposition could be dying deprive the court of the right when properly advised to so purge its own records would be to abridge to the point of denial one of the most salutary of the inherent powers of the court." This case involved no question of substitution of service, but we are of the opinion that, if in that case the court retained jurisdiction to purge its records of a judgment fraudulently procured despite the death of the defendant, the Colorado court retained jurisdiction to purge its records of a judgment fraudulently procured despite the death of the defendant while domiciled in another jurisdiction. In the instant case, the plaintiff herein did not seek in the Colorado court to relitigate the question of whether or not her husband was entitled to a decree of divorce, she simply sought to invoke the power of the court to wipe from its records a judgment fraudulently obtained against her, which, if not wiped out, would seriously affect her property rights. As said in the McGuinness v. Superior Court Case, supra, 196 Cal. 222, 237 P. 42, 47, 40 A. L. R. 1110, "to such a purpose the death of the defendant in said action is merely incidental." Had her husband been alive at the time of the institution of the suit in equity in the Colorado court, she could not have secured personal service upon him in Colorado, but would have had to seek service by publication. If, as was said in the McGuinness v. Superior Court Case, supra, the defendant could not deprive the court of jurisdiction by dying, we do not think he could deprive the court of jurisdiction by moving to another state.

If it be conceded, and there can in fact be no question about it for both text-books and reports are replete with examples thereof, that the court has the inherent power to correct its records and purge them of judgments fraudulently obtained, it follows, we think, that such power must of necessity be plenary and not limited either by the nature of the subject-matter of the controversy, or the presence or absence of the guilty party from the territorial jurisdiction of the court. In fact, it has been held that such a judgment is not a real judgment and the court could set aside its own judgment of its own motion for lack of jurisdiction to enter it in the first instance. May v. Roberts, 133 Or. 643, 286 P. 546.

It is admitted that substituted service by personal service upon the administrator of the estate of John Henry Britton was obtained. This service is equivalent to service by publication. Section 413, Code Civ. Proc. It is also admitted that each of the five children of John Henry Britton as his heirs at law accepted service. It, therefore, appears that all who were entitled to notice did, in fact, have such notice.

Our conclusion, therefore, is that the county court of Bent county, Colo., had sufficient jurisdiction to render the judgment which it did render on July 16, 1928, setting aside and expunging from its records the decree of divorce obtained in March, 1891, by John Henry Britton from Sophie Britton. And it follows, as a consequence, that the marital status of John Henry Britton and Sophie Britton was in fact never destroyed, and that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the property thereafter acquired by John Henry Britton in his own name in the state of California became upon such acquisition the community property of both John Henry Britton and Sophie Britton.

WASTE, C. J.

This is an appeal from an order denying a petition for the removal of executors.

Appellant, the son of the decedent, filed a petition asking the removal of the executors and the appointment of an administrator with the will annexed. As a basis for such request, appellant alleged, among other things, that the executors failed to file a proper inventory of the decedent's properties; that certain properties were omitted from such inventory; that taxes on some of the properties had not been paid; that there was a failure to rent certain properties; that the executors neglected to recover certain jewelry taken by a third person after the decedent's death; that a certain claim against the estate was paid by the executors without the necessary preliminary investigation to determine its propriety; that there was dissension between the executors; and that the attorney for the executors, to their knowledge, was acting adversely to the best interests of the estate in certain designated particulars.

The executors filed an answer to the petition. Upon the issues joined, the court received evidence and thereafter made the order denying the relief prayed for, from which order this appeal is taken. At no time did the court below make and sign written findings of fact upon the issues presented. Appellant assigns this as error.

Sections 632 and 633 of the Code of Civil Procedure require that, "upon the trial of a question of fact by the court, its decision must be given in writing," that in such decision "the facts found and the conclusions of law must be separately stated," and that judgment "upon the decision must be entered accordingly." At the time of the hearing upon the petition for removal of executors and at the time of entry of the order here appealed from, sections 1716 and 1717 of the Code of Civil Procedure (now section 1230 of the Probate Code) made the above-quoted sections providing for written findings applicable to the determination of issues of fact in probate proceedings.

In the Estate of Ingram, 99 Cal. App. 660, 279 P. 208, 209, which presented an appeal from an order sustaining an opposition to the appointment of an administrator, it is declared that "sections 1716 and 1717 of the Code of Civil Procedure by reference make sections 632 and 633 of the same Code applicable to the trial and determination of issues of fact in probate proceedings as in ordinary civil actions. These latter sections render it necessary for the court to make its decision in writing, i. e., to sign findings. It has been said by this court that 'the right to findings is a substantial right, as inviolate, under the statute, as that of trial by jury under the Constitution. * * * "The right to have a material issue presented by the pleadings in a cause determined by a finding of the court is one important to the parties to a suit, and the failure to make such a finding results in prejudicial error entitling the complaining suitor to reversal." (Huntington v. Vavra, 36 Cal. App. 355, 172 P. 168. See, also, Tucker v. United Railroads, 171 Cal. 704, 154 P. 835.)' Frascona v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 48 Cal. App. 135, 191 P. 968."

In the Estate of Burton, 63 Cal. 36, 37, the probate court, upon opposition being offered thereto, declined to set apart a probate homestead. No findings were there made. Upon appeal this court said: "We think the petitioner was entitled to findings. The rules of pleading and practice in civil cases are applicable to proceedings in the Probate Courts. Issues joined in such proceedings are to be tried and determined by that court as in civil cases (§§ 1312, 1713, 632, 633, 634, Code Civ. Proc.); and upon trial by the court, without a jury, parties to the proceedings were entitled to findings, unless they were waived. (§ 634, supra; Haffenegger v. Bruce, 54 Cal. 416.) As findings were not waived, it was error to enter judgment without them."

[1, 2] It thus appears that the court below erred to the prejudice of the appellant when it failed to make and sign findings upon the issues of fact presented to it for adjudication. There had been no waiver of findings within the meaning of section 634 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Examination of the reporter's transcript discloses that appellant by his motion for new trial directed the attention of the court below to the Code sections, supra, necessitating findings of fact in probate proceedings. Appellant is not, therefore, precluded from now urging the point.

Respondents can derive but little comfort from the Estate of Bauer, 199 Cal. 98, 248 P. 507. The point as to the necessity of findings in probate proceedings was neither presented nor considered in that case. It cannot therefore be cited as an authority on the proposition.

[3] Respondents suggest that, if written findings be required, this court may make such findings under section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section authorizes the appellate courts of the state to make "findings of fact contrary to, or in addition to, those made by the trial court." We are not now inclined to extend the scope of the quoted Code section to include a case in which the trial court erroneously fails to make any findings. The express language of the section tends to negative such inclusion.

The order appealed from is therefore reversed.

We concur: SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; TYLER, Justice pro tem.; LANGDON, J.

PRESTON, J.

I concur in the judgment, but I expressly withhold my approval of the construction placed upon section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

If we should suppose a case where the evidence was without conflict in support of the order made, we would, under the construction of this section by the majority opinion, be compelled to reverse and remand the cause.

This would be in plain antagonism of the spirit of the said section which is by its own terms to be "liberally construed to the end, among others, that wherever possible causes may be finally disposed of by a single appeal and without further proceedings in the trial court, except where the interest of justice requires a new trial."

SEAWELL, J.

Plaintiffs appeal from a judgment for defendant in an action for wrongful death. Plaintiffs are the widow and infant daughter of William S. Conness, Jr., who died of injuries received when he was struck by defendant's automobile while walking on a public road in the county of Los Angeles known as the Culver boulevard on the morning of November 1, 1928, at about 12:10 a. m. The case is before this court upon transfer from the District Court of Appeal. We granted defendant's petition for transfer to this court after decision by the Appellate Court reversing the judgment in his favor, for the reason that we were unable to agree with the conclusion that the decedent, as a matter of law, was free from contributory negligence, and therefore the lower court erred in instructing the jury fully on the doctrine of contributory negligence. In our opinion the jury was plainly authorized, upon the evidence before it, to find decedent guilty of contributory negligence.

[1, 2] The facts of the tragic accident are as follows: The decedent, aged twenty-three years, in company with one Bradley and two young women, was returning from the beach towns of Ocean Park and Venice to Los Angeles, via the Culver boulevard, in a Chrysler roadster with a rumble seat. Bradley was employed by decedent's mother as her chauffeur. At about 7:30 o'clock the two men had observed the young women, with whom they were unacquainted, waiting to board a street car bound for the beaches, and had invited them to drive. The night was Halloween, October 31, 1928. After a pleasure tour of the beaches they were returning to Los Angeles about midnight, Bradley driving with one of the young women in the front seat, and decedent and the other young woman occupying the rumble seat. A short distance west of Culver City, Conness requested Bradley to stop the car, as he wished to put on his overcoat. Bradley stopped and parked his automobile on the south side of the road, his right side, headed easterly, with its headlights burning. He testified that the left wheels of his automobile might have been on the improved portion of the road. Both Conness and his young woman companion climbed out of the rumble seat. Conness said to Bradley that they would run up the road a way "to warm up." They started running up the road, hand in hand, in the same direction in which the Chrysler roadster was facing, on their right or the south side of the road. When they had gone a distance of between fifty and seventy-five feet from their automobile, they turned to walk back in a westerly direction. After turning back they were struck from the rear by defendant, who was traveling westerly at a speed estimated by him to be thirty-five miles an hour, on the north or his right side of the road. Defendant's brother-in-law was in the front seat with him. Defendant testified that he did not see Conness and the young woman until just as he hit them. He immediately brought his automobile, which was a Lincoln sedan, to a stop within a short distance. After the impact Conness and his companion were lying unconscious, at an angle across the road, at the extreme north edge, or with their heads and shoulders beyond the edge of the gravel-macadam pavement. The right headlight of the defendant's car was bent back against the radiator and the right front fender was dented. The skid marks upon the road showed that defendant had swerved somewhat to his left as he put on his brakes to avoid hitting the couple. Conness died shortly after reaching the hospital and the young woman received serious injuries.

The improved portion of Culver boulevard at the place where the accident occurred was between twenty to twenty-two feet in width and of gravel-macadam. The district is sparsely settled. There are no sidewalks. The tracks of the Pacific Electric Railway parallel the road immediately to the north. Defendant had passed a west bound electric train as it stopped to discharge passengers at the Centinella avenue station, a short distance east of the scene of the accident, and said train was moving close behind him as he approached the point of collision. He ascribed his failure to observe Conness and the young woman to the fact that the glare from the train headlight, his own headlights, and the headlights of the Chrysler roadster on the other side of the road combined to produce a shadow or blind spot. Defendant had traveled the road daily for a long period prior to the accident. The night was dark and there were no road lights. According to the testimony of two deputy sheriffs of Los Angeles county who inspected the defendant's car when he reported to the Culver City police station immediately after the accident, the windshield of his car was very dusty. This he denied. He testified that he had observed the headlights of the Chrysler. However, we are not primarily concerned on this appeal with the question of defendant's negligence. For the purpose of this appeal and by way of argument, it may be conceded that defendant was negligent, yet, if Conness was also guilty of negligence which proximately caused his death, his wife and child cannot recover.

The accident occurred before the enactment of section 150½ of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1929, p. 546, § 66), which provides: "It shall be unlawful for any pedestrian to walk along and upon any highway outside of a business or residence district otherwise than close to his left-hand edge of the highway."

The road on which the accident herein took place is straight for some distance, and it would appear that there were no other cars on it in the immediate vicinity until another Lincoln automobile arrived a few minutes later, in which Conness was taken to the hospital. The testimony given by Bradley, the driver of the Chrysler roadster in which decedent was a passenger, by the young woman in the front seat with him, and by decedent's companion on the highway, was to the effect that as the couple ran and walked away from the Chrysler in an easterly direction they were on the south or their right side of the road. At the time they were hit, after having reversed their direction, they were on the other side of the road, close to the north edge, as indicated by the position in which they were found after the collision, and alleged in the complaint. Bradley and the young lady in the front seat with him testified that they did not keep their eyes on their companions every minute as they walked down the road. They did not know that the pair on the road had been hit until defendant's brother-in-law came hurrying to their car to make inquiries. Bradley testified that he had a faint recollection of seeing the headlights of the defendant's automobile.

As Conness and the young woman ran down the road they were facing in an easterly direction, from which defendant's automobile was approaching along the straight road with its headlights burning, yet said young woman testified that she did not remember seeing the electric railway car approaching, and that she did not see defendant's car. The jury was warranted in concluding from decedent's conduct that he also failed to observe it. The young woman testified that he "swung her around, holding hands," to go back to the Chrysler roadster, and that was the last thing she remembered. There is no testimony to indicate that the two had gone easterly a greater distance than seventy-five feet from the Chrysler roadster. Bradley and the young woman in the front seat with him estimated the distance as between fifty and seventy-five feet, while the injured girl gave the distance as seventy feet. Upon the coroner's inquest Bradley testified that the impact occurred about fifty or sixty feet from the place where the Chrysler was parked. Defendant testified that, after he applied his brakes and stopped, he let the brakes up and moved over to the side of the road to get out of the line of traffic, and then, after having moved forward between twenty and twenty-five feet, he was not west of the parked Chrysler, although he might have been opposite it. References made by Bradley in his testimony to the Lincoln "flashing past" him, serve only to create a conflict in the evidence. Upon the evidence before it, the jury was plainly authorized to find that decedent and his companion, without observing defendant's oncoming automobile, moved from their position on the south side of the narrow road, out of the path of said westbound automobile, onto the north side just as it was close upon them. The exercise of the most ordinary prudence required that they wait momentarily to permit said oncoming automobile to pass, rather than step directly into its line. The equal right of pedestrians with motor vehicles to the use of public streets and roads does not relieve pedestrians from their duty to exercise reasonable care for their own safety.

Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co., 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A. L. R. 1027, and other cases of like tenor are distinguishable from the instant case on the facts.

It follows that the state of the evidence required the court to give instructions on contributory negligence of the decedent. It may be that certain of the instructions given are technically subject to criticism, but considering the charge as a whole, we are of the view that it does not embody reversible error. It may be that the proof is susceptible of inferences contrary to those drawn by the jury. But our inquiry is limited to determining whether the judgment, based on the jury verdict, finds support in the evidence. That it does is clear without further discussion or citation of authority.

The judgment is affirmed.

PER CURIAM.

This is an action to subject the unexpended balance of a building loan to an equitable lien in favor of a materialman. Defendants A. W. Menkins and Violet Menkins, his wife, were owners of a lot, upon which they desired to erect an apartment house. They secured a loan of $16,000 from defendant Meline Bond & Mortgage Company, secured by a first deed of trust on the property, recorded June 26, 1928. Two other trust deeds in the amount of $6,000 each were also recorded in favor of other persons, on July 23, 1928. These instruments were all recorded prior to the commencement of the work, and were therefore prior to mechanics' liens. During the period of construction, a number of payments were made to laborers and materialmen, including plaintiff. In March, 1929, the building was completed. The amount then due plaintiff was $2,705.04. Further sums for labor and materials were owing to other parties. The balance of the loan, $3,535.63, was insufficient to cover them all. Plaintiff and other claimants filed liens against the building. The defendant mortgage company thereupon, as permitted by its loan contract with the owners, kept the said balance, using it to reduce the amount of the principal and interest due on the loan. Thereafter the owners defaulted, and defendant Title Insurance & Trust Company, trustee under the first deed of trust, elected to sell the property. Plaintiff then commenced this action to enjoin the sale and to subject the unexpended balance in the loan fund to a lien in its favor. Other mechanics' lien claimants were joined as defendants.

The incumbrances, i. e., the first, second, and third deeds of trust, were greater than the value of the property, with the result that the mechanics' liens were worthless.

The theory of plaintiff was that it had relied upon the loan in extending credit to the owners, and that the facts of the case were such as to justify the imposition of the lien under the rule of Smith v. Anglo-California Trust Co., 205 Cal. 496, 271 P. 898. In this latter case, Smith, the owner of certain land, was given a building loan of $20,000 by Anglo-California Securities Company, secured by a deed of trust. An account was opened in Smith's name, and the necessary sums were paid to him as the work progressed. Shortly after completion of the building, Smith died. A balance of $4,090 remained undisbursed in the account. Smith's administratrix brought suit to recover this sum, and claimants of mechanics' liens totaling $5,633.30 also demanded the money; their liens being valueless because of the priority of deeds of trust. This court held that the said sum should be charged in equity with a lien and distributed pro rata among the lien claimants. We there said (page 502 of 205 Cal., 271 P. 898, 901): "That the lien claimants must have relied upon the fund to be advanced to Smith by the securities company, and not alone upon the individual capacity of Smith or their right to a last lien upon the premises, as a means of obtaining payment for their labor and materials, is supported by every reasonable inference deducible from the surrounding circumstances. Smith was engaged in building upon land for which he had not paid the purchase price and which was charged with and subject to the several deeds of trust executed and delivered to secure the entire purchase-money.

The incapacity of Smith to build without a prearranged loan was emphasized by the existence of these purchase-money incumbrances and attested by the agreement with the securities company for a loan to be used expressly for building purposes. It is also reasonably apparent from the record herein that this loan could not have been obtained without giving the deed of trust for its security priority over the purchase-money deeds of trust. Moreover, the record tends to show that the houses for the construction of which the building loan account was opened have been completed in substantial compliance with the plans and specifications submitted to the securities company in connection with the application for the loan. It requires very little showing, therefore, to produce the conclusion that, without confidence in the payment to Smith of the full amount of the loan contracted for, the lien claimants would not have extended credit for their labor and materials. The reasonableness of such expectations on the part of the lien claimants must naturally have suggested itself both to Smith and the securities company. They should have known that the consummated agreement for the money to be advanced to or on behalf of Smith as the buildings progressed, under a deed of trust taking priority over the statutory liens available to those contracting with him or the general contractor, would constitute a material inducement to them in supplying labor and materials. As if in express recognition of the reasonableness of these expectations, the practice was to make payments from, or withdrawals upon, the building loan account only as the work progressed and after the appraiser for the securities company had, in the line of his duty, reported progress warranting a payment. * * * Smith and the securities company by their conduct may be said to have induced, or contributed to induce, the lien claimants to enhance the value of the real property by their labors and materials, and it would be inequitable and unjust, it seems to us, to permit Smith or his personal representative to withhold, at this time, any part of the fund upon which the lien claimants must surely have relied for reimbursement. The fact that the real property itself has proved of but little value upon sale under the purchase-money deeds of trust lends added support to this conclusion."

The Smith Case, as appears from the foregoing quotation, was decided upon the dual grounds that the owner and the lender were estopped by their conduct to withhold the fund, and that the claimants had an equitable lien thereon. The essential basis of the opinion is the justifiable reliance upon the fund by the lien claimants. If similar reliance appears in the instant case, the former decision is controlling.

The trial court found, in substance, that plaintiff, in supplying its materials, relied solely upon the personal credit of defendant owners, and not upon any representations or conduct of defendant mortgage company; and that the latter defendant made no representations and did nothing to influence the furnishing of the materials. We are of the opinion that these findings are not supported by the record. Witnesses for plaintiff included H. F. Hopkins, credit manager, B. R. Simms, the salesman who solicited the contract, and H. W. Simmons, collector. The sole witness for defendant mortgage company was J. T. Zeeman, in charge of its escrow department. Defendant suggests that the court believed its witness and disbelieved contrary statements of plaintiff's witnesses. However, disregarding all evidence upon which there is conflict, the following facts appear from the testimony: The defendant owner requested plaintiff to furnish materials for the job, and plaintiff proceeded to investigate, first, the credit of said defendant, and, second, the incumbrances on the property. Discovering that the owner was insolvent and that the property was burdened with an indebtedness in excess of its value, plaintiff refused to take the contract. The defendant owner then informed plaintiff that a building loan had been obtained from the mortgage company, and that materials and labor would be paid for out of the fund derived from said loan. Witnesses for plaintiff testified that they checked this fact by several conversations with Zeeman, and the latter admitted having one phone conversation with Hopkins to this effect. The deed of trust evidencing the loan was on record, and this was checked by Hopkins. During the progress of the work, several payments were received by plaintiff from Zeeman; i. e., from the escrow. Zeeman himself testified that in a conversation with Simms and the owner he said that the mortgage company would pay plaintiff after satisfactory completion if there remained enough money to cover the other claims; and that in another conversation with Simms just after completion of the building he said that the company would pay all claims against the job if the various laborers and subcontractors would prorate their claims.

Despite the denial of Zeeman that any promise was made, prior to completion of the building, to pay any of the claims, the evidence set forth above brings this case clearly within the rule of Smith v. Anglo-California Trust Co. There was in that case no greater evidence of justifiable reliance upon the fund than appears herein. The distinguishing facts of the two cases are not, in our opinion, significant. The principal difference urged by defendant is that in the Smith Case the conflict was between the administratrix of the borrower and the lien claimants, while in the instant case the borrower, Menkins, makes no claim to the balance. It may be noted that here, by the application of the balance to the reduction of the loan, the borrower profited. However, the equitable considerations are identical with those presented in the former case. The defendant mortgage company, having received the benefit of plaintiff's performance in the form of a completed building, and therefore a more valuable security for its note, is not justified in withholding or appropriating to any other use money originally intended to be used to pay for such performance, and relied upon by plaintiff in rendering its performance. The theory of equitable lien, as laid down in the Smith Case, is quite broad (see 17 Cal. L. Rev. 411), and it is fully applicable to the instant case. See, also, Community Lbr. Co. v. Chute (Cal. Sup.) 10 P.(2d) 57; Community Lbr. Co. v. California Pub. Co. (Cal. Sup.) 10 P.(2d) 60.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the lower court to make findings and enter judgment in favor of plaintiff in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion.

PRESTON, J.

Appeal by plaintiff from judgment for defendants in an action to recover taxes for the year 1924, paid under protest (section 3819, Pol. Code), upon a possessory or leasehold interest in tide lands owned by the city of Los Angeles. Said judgment rests upon findings of fact and conclusions of law, the substance of which will now be set forth:

The court found that in 1917, as the result of the settlement and compromise of litigation between the city of Los Angeles and the Southern Pacific Railroad, the city leased certain tide lands to the railroad without the specification of rental, the lease to terminate in 1947; that in 1918 said railroad assigned to Consolidated Lumber Company, a corporation, all of its interest in and to a portion of said tide lands, comprising some 27.56 acres, more or less; that in 1920 the latter company in turn contracted with plaintiff to sublet or assign to it the estate in said lease at an annual payment of $300 per acre for the first five years, increasing materially at the commencement of the second, third, fourth, and fifth respective five-year periods thereafter, then to be at the rate of $600 per acre per annum for the balance of the term of the lease, expiring July 23, 1947; that since January 1, 1920, plaintiff had possessed, occupied, and used said territory.

The court further found that in 1924, the Los Angeles county assessor entered against plaintiff an assessment upon the following described property: "Unsecured personal property as follows: The leasehold int and all other rights of L W Blinn Lbr Co in and to lands described under L A City Ord H ⊃ O 883 or otherwise;" that by said description the assessor had in mind and intended to describe plaintiff's said leasehold interest above referred to, although said description failed to describe said interest sufficiently to identify it, "L A City Ord H C O 883" being an order of the board of harbor commissioners and not an ordinance; that, however, plaintiff was not misled or prejudiced by said defective description, and, on March 27, 1924, rendered to said assessor a statement under oath setting forth specifically its leasehold or possessory interest, which is the estate here under consideration.

The court further found that the annual payments mentioned did not represent the full value of the occupancy and use or the full rental value of said premises; that said assessor placed a valuation of $110,240 upon plaintiff's said interest, pursuant to which a tax of $4,133.99 was levied for the year 1924 and paid under protest in writing by plaintiff.

The court further found that the full cash value of plaintiff's said leasehold and possessory interest on the first Monday in March, 1924, was $114,058 and stated that "in determining the value of said property the court considered the payments to be made by plaintiff to the Consolidated Lumber Company pursuant to the written agreement set forth in paragraph V of these findings, as installments of a purchase price and not as rental."

The court then found that the sum of $110,240 set forth in said assessment was ascertained and fixed by the assessor as follows: That said assessor valued the fee-simple title of the lands within the exterior boundaries of said portion of tide lands at $13,000 per acre; that said assessor next capitalized at 6 per cent. the amount per acre per annum then being paid by plaintiff to Consolidated Lumber Company under said agreement of 1920, to wit, the sum of $300, and by such capitalization derived the figure of $5,000; that said assessor thereupon deducted said $5,000 from said fee value of $13,000 per acre and thereby derived an amount of $8,000 per acre, of which he took 50 per cent., viz., $4,000, multiplied said sum of $4,000 by 27.56, being the number of acres, thereby deriving said assessment figure of $110,240.

The court also found that said assessment was made without any purpose or intent of requiring plaintiff to pay an excessive or unlawful tax or to bear a burden unequal to that of other taxpayers, although it was true that, in the case of a few small isolated parcels of real property within said county, leased to private individuals for a short term, the leasehold or possessory interests escaped assessment and taxes for the year 1924. The court then found that at the hearing before the board of equalization plaintiff had an opportunity to offer all the evidence it desired in reference to said alleged overvaluation of said possessory right and leasehold interest, and that the conclusion of said board and s refusal to lower said assessed valuation was the result of its honest judgment, free from discrimination or arbitrary action.

As a matter of law the court concluded that the determination of the board of equalization that the sum of $110,240 was the full cash value of said possessory or leasehold interest was conclusive; that solely because of said defective description the assessment and tax was invalid; that, however, the tax was morally and equitably due and plaintiff, in good conscience, should pay it and defendants should retain it; hence that plaintiff was not entitled to a judgment refunding to it said tax. Accordingly, judgment followed for defendants, awarding them their costs of suit, and plaintiff appealed.

[1] The contentions of appellant are: That the assessment of 1924 was grossly excessive because of adoption by the county assessor of a wrong theory and plan of assessment and particularly because of the admitted failure to take into consideration, as a proper deduction, plaintiff's obligation to pay the annual amounts or rentals due under said contract with the Consolidated Lumber Company; that allowing a grossly excessive assessment is constructive fraud on the part of a county assessor and board of equalization approving it, which will be relieved against by the courts; also that the assessment was void in that it failed to comply with the requirements of the Political Code, §§ 3650, 3884.

The latter point we deem to be without merit, inasmuch as all parties considered and acted upon the understanding that the property here in question was the property intended to be assessed and plaintiff also returned these premises for assessment. The first two questions, however, undoubtedly possess merit and will now be discussed.

[2-4] The system employed by the assessor and confirmed by the board of equalization is manifestly unsound, for at most it is a doubtful plan to appraise the present reversionary interest and not the leasehold interest in the property. The system, as we understand it, was to appraise the fee title interest per acre and subtract therefrom the capitalized rental per acre paid by the lessee; then to multiply the result by the number of acres involved and take one-half the product in accordance with the rule of assessment applicable to all property in Los Angeles county.

This system, however, takes no account of the duration of the leasehold estate; hence, it would ordinarily carry the same valuation on the last year of the term as on the first. It ignores the fact that the estate of the lessee is a limited one and that the excess of annual benefits over burdens must of necessity be the important factor in such an appraisal. The capital employed, whether in making an outright purchase of the lease or in assuming the payment of rentals periodically, must, with interest, be amortized during the life of the lease in order to prevent the waste of capital and to reflect the true worth of the premises. Improvements placed upon the property which revert to the lessor should also be taken into account and amortized over the same period. Taxes and other fixed charges must also be considered. The combined net earnings of the lease over the entire term is its ultimate value and its present value as of any date upon any assumed rate of interest should be computed from this basis. For example, under the lease here in question, the average yearly rental per acre is $443.617. This sum capitalized at 6 per cent. is $7,393.61. Subtracting this sum from $13,000, the fee value placed on said property by the assessor, leaves $5,606.39, one-half of which is $2,803.19. If it be assumed that the gross earnings on said lease are the equivalent of 6 per cent. upon $13,000, we will then have as the net annual return per acre the sum of $168.19 ($2,803.19x.06). Treating this last-mentioned sum as an annuity payable annually over the period of 23 years, its present worth would be $2,069.24 ($168.19x12.303). Multiplying this sum by the acreage involved would give $57,028.25 (27.56x$2,069.24), which is an approximation of the present value of the leasehold estate.

That substantially such a method is the proper one has already been determined in the case of Hammond Lumber Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 104 Cal. App. 235, 285 P. 896, 900. The method there used was suggested by one Milton Moore, upon whose testimony the present findings were rested by the court. In the case cited, the court, in approving substantially the above system, said: "This witness fixed the value of the leasehold interest of plaintiff for purpose of assessment on the first Monday of March, 1924, at $204,650, taking into consideration the limitation of use to plaintiff's lumber business. He described his method of procedure in detail, stating that he first determined what he called a base value representing the present worth of a right in perpetuity to the lands, subject to the privileges and limitations of the lease. He then calculated the annual return that an owner might reasonably expect from property so valued at the rate of 7 per cent., and the difference between such amount and the annual rent represented the annual benefit or saving to the lessee. To ascertain, however, the savings or bonus value on the first Monday of March, 1924, the savings of future years had to be reduced to present worth. So by a process which need not be followed here with particularity, the witness figured the full market value of the leasehold interest at $409,313, one-half of which amount, or roughly $204,650, was taken as the 'full cash value' for taxation purposes. The witness in his testimony thus demonstrated the application of the capitalization method, which in Birch v. County of Orange, 59 Cal. App. 133, 138, 139, 210 P. 57, was pronounced to be a fair and reasonable method of valuing a beneficial interest. See, also, Graciosa Oil Co. v. County of Santa Barbara, 155 Cal. 140, 143, 144, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 211, 99 P. 483." This authority also quotes at length from McMichael's "Long and Short Term Leaseholds" (2d Ed.) pages 90, 91, and from Zangerle's "Principles of Real Estate Appraising" pages 31 and 148.

In Klein on "Federal Income Taxation" page 782, paragraph 24:15, the following appears: "The value of a leasehold is ordinarily the present worth of the excess of the rental value of the property for the unexpired term over the contractual rent. Thus, where a lease had an unexpired term of fifteen years, the rent reserved thereunder being $53,000 per annum and fair rental value being $57,400 per annum, the value of the leasehold was held to be the present worth of an annuity of $4,400 for fifteen years."

Mr. E. A. Saliers, on page 334, section 2, of "Accountants' Handbook" states: "Value of Leaseholds. This depends directly upon the life of the lease. Ordinarily, improvements on leased land become the property of lessor on expiration of the lease; therefore all costs should be amortized during life of the lease. In valuing leaseholds it is necessary to deduct annual costs from annual income. The remainder is an annuity for the number of years the lease runs. Its present worth can be found by finding present worth of an annuity of $1 for the given number of years, and multiplying same by the amount of the annuity. If any sum is recoverable from lessor at expiration of lease, as is sometimes agreed upon in case of extraordinary improvements made by tenant, its present worth can be found by use of compound interest tables. This, added to present worth of the annuity, gives present worth of leasehold."

The contention is made by respondent that under the instrument here involved the plaintiff became the purchaser of the lease and not merely a subtenant thereunder. We regard this contention as injecting an immaterial factor into the case. Whether the lease be purchased outright, or whether it be purchased by installments or whether the installments paid be considered as rentals, in any event the outlay of capital thus involved must be amortized over the period of the lease in order to prevent a waste of capital assets.

Speaking on this subject, Mr. Saliers, in Accountants' Handbook, supra, page 466, part of section 10, again says: "When a lease is bought outright or a bonus is paid, it appears on the books at a valuation. In case the balance sheet is to be used for credit purposes and, owing to great appreciation in property values, the lease is worth much more than its book value, it is proper to indicate this in a footnote, or else to incorporate it in the balance sheet with an offsetting reserve. The amount at which the lease is carried on the books must be amortized over the period of the lease, the periodic charge being to Rent. If title to the building constructed on the leased land is to pass to the owner of the land upon expiration of the lease the cost of the building must be written off over the life of the lease." Again, at page 541, section 11, in part: "Leaseholds which terminate at a fixed future date, as well as other assets having a definitely fixed time of expiration, must be systematically amortized or written down if capital is to be preserved. These may not depreciate in the strictly material sense of the word, yet the deterioration which takes place is analogous to that which occurs in case of depreciation of other forms of wasting assets. In the case of leaseholds, as in case of patents, the period over which the cost must be written off is definitely prescribed. Leaseholds may be paid for in annual sums, or there may be an initial bonus in addition to the annual sums. Such a bonus should be considered a deferred charge to be distributed over the period covered by the lease."

Clearly, therefore, the method employed by the assessor and confirmed by the board of equalization was erroneous and worked greatly to the injury of appellant for a proper valuation would undoubtedly be not more than one-half the figure at which the leasehold was assessed. The fact that the property is cut off from the water front by intervening lands and may not be valuable except in connection therewith may likewise serve to lessen its value.

But, as shown by the finding above quoted, the court itself did not rely upon the action of the assessor. It placed its sole reliance upon the testimony of the witness Moore, the same witness who testified in the case of Hammond Lumber Co. v. County of Los Angeles, supra. However, it appears that in the present instance said witness altered his viewpoint and method of valuation and appraisals. Here he assumed the value of the right to the full use and occupation of the land in perpetuity to be the market value of the fee and deducted from this its present value to the city due to the deferred enjoyment thereof. This latter sum he subtracted from said present market value of the whole of the land in perpetuity. This remainder he then divided by two and arrived at the figure of $114,058 (slightly in excess of the figure given by the assessor), which he declared to be the present value of the leasehold estate. But manifestly this system entirely ignores the factor of annual earnings and the existence of burdens thereon. Likewise it recognizes neither rent nor amortization of improvements. It ignores capital invested, fixed charges, and other outlay. It is predicated solely upon the theory that the value of the use and occupation of the property is the present value of the fee-simple title thereto, lessened only by the present worth of that estate in fee simple to the owner of the reversion. The market value of the fee might serve as a basis for assuming an annual return, but where earnings are known the market value can shed only a dim light upon the subject of leasehold value. Furthermore, this system is also contrary to that approved by all the text-writers above cited as well as that announced in the case of Hammond Lumber Co. v. County of Los Angeles, supra, which rule this court refused to disturb when a hearing of the cause was sought. The principle here contended for was also approved in the case of In re Metropolitan Building Co., 144 Wash. 469, 470, 258 P. 473, from the syllabus of which we take the following: "In assessing the value of a leasehold, the worth of the lease from year to year, and considering the term, fixes the criterion; and in case of the tenant's improvements, with bonded indebtedness, profits must be figured after some plan of amortization for return of the money invested, whether reimbursing stockholders or bondholders for the money advanced or loaned."

[5] This brings us to the last step: Will the court interfere to prevent such a gross overvaluation as appears in this case? We are not without authority upon this proposition. Article 13, § 1, of the Constitution, requires that "all property in the state * * shall be taxed in proportion to its value," and in this connection this court, in the case of Birch v. County of Orange, 186 Cal. 736, 742, 200 P. 647, 649, stated: "'A grossly inequitable and palpably excessive overvaluation' of property for taxation may be held constructively fraudulent." Citing many cases. In other words where, as here, it appears that the assessor and board of equalization both adopted a manifestly erroneous method, showing a gross overvaluation of the property to be assessed, such an act, although, of course, unintentional, amounts to a constructive fraud or the equivalent of a fraud on the rights of plaintiff. On this subject the case of Hammond Lumber Co. v. County of Los Angeles, supra, states, at page 240 of 104 Cal. App., 285 P. 896, 898:

"To invalidate the assessment there must be a conscious failure to exercise a fair and impartial judgment, or a resort to arbitrary methods varying from those employed in assessing other property of like character and situation, and resulting in the imposition designedly of an unequal burden on the property of the complainant. Los Angeles G. & E. Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 162 Cal. 164, 166, 121 P. 384, 9 A. L. R. 1277; Miller & Lux, Inc., v. Richardson, 182 Cal. 115, 128, 187 P. 411; Pacific Coast S. S. Co. v. Richardson, 186 Cal. 70, 72, 198 P. 1034; Pierce v. County of Santa Barbara, 40 Cal. App. 302, 305, 180 P. 641; Birch v. County of Orange, 59 Cal. App. 134, 136, 210 P. 57; Wild Goose Country Club v. County of Butte, 60 Cal. App. 339, 342, 212 P. 711; Ambassador Hotel Corp. v. Los Angeles County, 94 Cal. App. 143, 270 P. 726."

In the case of Mahoney v. City of San Diego, 198 Cal. 388, 402, 403, 245 P. 189, 195, where the plaintiff sought the recovery of taxes paid under protest and both the assessor and the board of equalization failed to recognize certain well-known factors which relate to valuation, the court said: "We do not say that in assessing improvements upon real estate the elements of age, state of repair, location, cost of construction, or of replacement are or that any one of them is controlling upon the assessor in the exercise of his judgment and discretion as to what valuations he shall place upon assessable improvements upon real estate; but what we do hold is that an assessment, made by an assessor in accordance with a systematic and intentionally adopted theory for the arrival at valuations to be placed upon that form of property, which omits to take into consideration any of the foregoing elements which in common experience ordinarily determine values, and in place thereof substitutes an arbitrary basis for the fixation of values upon the several classes of such form of property for purposes of assessment upon a percentage plan, from which the foregoing elements for determining values are expressly excluded, will not be upheld when it sufficiently appears that actual discrimination has resulted from an assessment thus arrived at. When the determining principles leading to uniformity in distributing the burdens of taxation have been lost sight of or willfully abandoned in the making of the assessment complained of, the asseveration of the assessor that he assessed the form of property 'at its full cash value' will not avail him in the presence of the actual and admitted facts supplied from his own lips; nor will his assertion, even though it be admitted to be true, that he acted honestly and in good faith in making the assessment in question, suffice to compel the upholding of an assessment when the assessor making it, however honest and well-intentioned, has willfully adopted and deliberately pursued a plan of assessment which is violative of the fundamental principles which should be his guide in the performance of his official duty; and when such an assessment is sufficiently shown to be replete with discrimination and lacking in uniformity in the burdens it imposes upon the owners of assessable property, such assessment will be invalidated at the instance of those property owners who shall pursue the proper statutory method to recover the taxes thus improperly imposed."

The judgment is reversed.

PRESTON, J.

Appeal by plaintiff from judgment of nonsuit entered in an action to recover taxes paid by it under protest (section 3819, Pol. Code) upon a possessory, or leasehold interest in tide lands owned by the city of Los Angeles.

The complaint first alleged the creation of the leasehold interest, in substance as follows: In 1917, as the result of the settlement and compromise of litigation between the city of Los Angeles and the Southern Pacific Railroad, the city leased certain tide lands to the railroad. In 1918 said railroad assigned to Consolidated Lumber Company, a corporation, all of its interest in and to a portion of said tide lands, which portion, comprising some 27.56 acres, more or less, the latter company leased to plaintiff in the year 1920, at an annual payment of $300 per acre for the first five years, increasing materially at the commencement of the second, third, fourth, and fifth respective five-year periods thereafter, then to be at the rate of $600 per acre per annum for the balance of the term of the lease, extending to July 23, 1947.

The complaint further alleged that said rentals to be paid by plaintiff represented the full value of its occupancy and use of the premises; that, however, in 1925, the county assessor of Los Angeles county assessed its leasehold interest, denominated "Possessory interest in land under ordinance numoer 37036 N. S.," upon a valuation of $210,840 and levied a tax thereon of $7,569.14 for said year; that plaintiff thereupon protested the assessment upon numerous grounds, claiming that said valuation was fixed in a purely arbitrary way, without reference to the true value of the leasehold interest itself as distinguished from the value of the fee title to the land, and that the tax was so excessively high and arbitrary as to amount to fraud. Plaintiff further alleged that it paid the tax under protest and petitioned for a hearing before the board of equalization, which hearing was duly had and evidence received and heard, and that said board then sustained the assessor's valuation of said possessory right as being fair, equitable, and not discriminatory, all to the injury of plaintiff for the various reasons set forth in its protest and in said pleading, wherefore plaintiff prayed judgment against defendants for the full amount of said tax so paid under protest, to wit, $7,569.14, together with interest, costs, and other general relief. By a second count of the complaint plaintiff also sought to recover upon similar facts and like grounds, a tax in the sum of $323.10 paid by it under protest, pursuant to an assessment levied against its right to occupy, and maintain and operate a private wharf upon, certain other tide lands owned by the city of Los Angeles, adjoining and used with the previously mentioned tract, plaintiff's interest therein being denominated "Possessory interest in land under order number 563, Parcel number 4."

Defendants answered, asserting that said assessments were honestly arrived at and were made after a full and complete examination of plaintiff's properties, by the adoption and use of the same method used in all other cases involving property of the same character, similarly situated, without any discrimination or inequality whatsoever.

The case went to trial, and, after testimony, more or less preliminary, had been given, plaintiff offered to prove that the full cash value of its said interests was not more than one-half or possibly one-third or one-fourth of what the county had assessed them for. The court thereupon refused to entertain any further evidence other than the record of proceedings had in the matter before the board of equalization and thereafter in effect affirmed the action of said board, granting in favor of defendants here the judgment of nonsuit from which plaintiff now prosecutes this appeal.

A further explanation of the situation of plaintiff with reference to these lands is advisable. Plaintiff has assembled in a contiguous body some 40 acres of land located on San Pedro harbor, using it for an industrial plant for its lumber and kindred business, and has constructed a private wharf and other valuable improvements thereon. Some fifteen acres of this combined area consists of a tract owned in fee simple by plaintiff, fronting on said harbor and adjoining the land in controversy on its northerly side. For convenience, we shall designate this area as tract A. The larger acreage leased by plaintiff from Consolidated Lumber Company consists of some 27.56 acres, which we shall designate tract B. A third tract, known as the wharf tract, is a strip of land about 40 feet in width and 1,000 feet in length lying immediately in front of tract B and forming the area between the pier head line and the bulkhead line, which tract we shall call, for convenience, tract C. Tract B is also cut by the tracks of the municipal belt railway and also by a sewerage plant. These two last-mentioned ownerships occupy in the aggregate some 2½ acres of the tract.

Tract B was assessed in the year 1925 at $210,840. In 1924, the same area was assessed at $110,240, and for the year 1923, the assessment was reduced to $55,000. Tract C was assessed for the year 1925 at $9,000. Tract A, the land owned in fee by plaintiff, was zoned and assessed at 24 cents a square foot for a large portion thereof and at 16 cents a square foot for the remainder.

The proceedings before the board of equalization disclose that in the assessment here under review tracts A, B, and C were considered as a unit and as constituting one ownership. They were likewise zoned in the same way, tract A being assessed as above described at 24 cents and 16 cents per square foot and tract B in identically the same way and at the same figure, while tract C was assessed throughout at 24 cents a square foot; on such assessments the figures above noted were derived. In other words, on the face of the proceedings, it is clear that the assessor and board of equalization made little, if any, distinction between the property owned in fee simple by plaintiff and the property held by it merely under a term lease. Both counts of the complaint allege willful and arbitrary overvaluation of said areas to such an extent as to constitute fraudulent conduct on the part of said officials. An examination of the proceedings discloses without controversy that in valuing the smaller area, for example, no account whatsoever was taken of the purchase price or consideration paid by plaintiff for its lease. Likewise no account was taken of the cost of valuable improvements placed upon said area by plaintiff. The same statement is substantially true of tract B. The annual payments made by plaintiff to Consolidated Lumber Company were given little or no place in the calculation of the assessor. In fact, there was no effort whatsoever to ascertain the gross or net annual earnings of plaintiff on the property, as a whole or in separate parcels. Neither was any allowance made for fixed charges or for depreciation or for the amortization of other capital outlay. Nor was there any definite differentiation arrived at between the waterfront or wharf tract and the back area. On the whole the record before the board of equalization shows clearly that the assessor and said board disregarded practically every factor that should have been considered in arriving at a just valuation. Mahoney v. City of San Diego, 198 Cal. 388, 402, 403, 245 P. 189.

Plaintiff introduced testimony tending to show that the rent paid for the property was the full value of the leasehold interest in tract B and that as to tract C the value was not to exceed $1,000; yet it was willing to accept an assessment of $55,000 on tract B, as made in 1923. In support of the valuation fixed by the assessor only one witness was called, whose testimony was so unsatisfactory as to amount to a confession of employing a purely arbitrary and erroneous method of appraisal.

[1, 2] In the case of Blinn Lumber Co. v. County of Los Angeles et al. (Cal. Sup.) 14 P.(2d) 512, this day decided, we have set forth substantially the system which should be employed in the valuation of leasehold estates, that is, the duration of the leasehold estate must be taken into account as well as the fact that the estate of the lessee is a limited one and the excess of annual benefits over burdens must of necessity be the important factor in such an appraisal. The capital employed, whether in making an outright purchase of the lease or in assuming the payment of rentals periodically, must, with interest, be amortized during the life of the lease in order to prevent the waste of capital and to reflect the true worth of the premises. Improvements placed upon the property which revert to the lessor must also be taken into account and amortized over the same period. Taxes and other fixed charges must also be considered. The combined net earnings of the lease over the entire term is its ultimate value and its present value as of any date upon any assumed rate of interest can be computed from this basis and the result so obtained is the approximate present value of the leasehold.

[3] In the case last cited we condemned an assessment on the identical property here denominated tract B, of $110,240, as being so excessive as to amount to constructive fraud. Without any evidence of a substantial change in conditions we are here called upon to endorse an assessment on said property of nearly twice that amount. Manifestly this cannot be done. The record before the board of equalization itself is sufficient to show that the assessor failed to employ a legal and proper method of valuation of plaintiff's property rights and as a result plaintiff has been assessed and required to pay an exorbitant and arbitrarily fixed tax. These views make it unnecessary to discuss the propriety of the action of the lower court in refusing to allow plaintiff to support its allegations of constructive fraud aliunde the record before the board of equalization.

The judgment is reversed.

This is an action to recover money paid under a contract for the purchase of shares of stock, after notice of recission and tender of consideration received. Defendant Peters, vice president and agent for stock sales of Lincoln Holding Corporation, went from Los Angeles to Winslow, Ariz., to sell shares to plaintiffs. Defendant then knew that a permit to issue shares had been secured only in California, and not in Arizona. A subscription agreement was signed at Winslow, for 252 shares at $10 per share, with the privilege on the part of plaintiffs of cancellation of 100 shares. At the time of execution, plaintiffs paid $920 cash and certain bank stock valued at $600, leaving a balance of $1,000. About one month later plaintiffs wrote to defendant at Los Angeles to cancel the remaining 100 shares, and on receipt of this letter the corporation forwarded a certificate for 152 shares. Some time later, plaintiffs discovered that the corporation had no permit for Arizona, and this proceeding was commenced. Judgment was rendered for plaintiffs, and defendant appealed.

[1] It is obvious that, if the contract was made in Arizona, it was void, and plaintiffs were entitled to recover. Defendant contends that the letter requesting cancellation of the 100 shares, and the reply, constituted a new contract which was made in California, the place of mailing the acceptance. The facts, however, show clearly that the subscription contract was made in Arizona, and that the consideration passed there. The exercise of the option to cancel the shares was not the making of an entirely new subscription contract.

PRESTON, J.

Appeal by defendants from judgment entered upon a verdict awarding plaintiff damages in the sum of $6,000 for injuries sustained as a result of being hit by an automobile driven by defendant Adams, an employee of defendant Southern California Telephone Company, a corporation. The several contentions made by appellants relate to the alleged insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict and judgment, the alleged award of excessive damages, and alleged misconduct of a juror.

The accident occurred on February 15, 1928, about 7:15 p. m., where a crossroad intersects the Los Angeles-San Diego state highway at Del Mar, Cal. The highway was paved to a width of about twenty feet and on each side was a fifteen-foot dirt or gravel strip. Respondent was standing back on the graveled portion of the road, awaiting an opportunity to cross from the west to the east side thereof, when appellant Adams from the north, and a limousine and a smaller car from the south, approached the intersection. Unexpectedly the smaller car swerved to the middle of the road and passed the limousine at a point in front or nearly in front of respondent. Appellant Adams, fearing a collision and feeling that his car had been forced off the pavement, turned it on to the gravel; then, suddenly seeing respondent, he turned still further to the right to avoid striking her. This effort, however, was unsuccessful. His car hit respondent on the left knee, threw her forward some distance, turned in a semicircle, and finally came to a stop about thirty feet from where she lay.

[1, 2] Practically all of the evidence bearing upon the issues of negligence and contributory negligence is to be found in the detailed accounts of the accident given by respondent and by appellant Adams. Their testimony is not free from conflict. From it the jury could have believed that said appellant exercised ordinary care in that, confronted by imminent peril, he took the only course which seemed possible if an accident were to be avoided. However, the jury chose to base its verdict upon that evidence supporting the allegations of negligence on the part of the driver of the car. This conclusion, reached under conflicting evidence upon an issue of fact, of course, will not be disturbed upon appeal. The record contains evidence to the effect that respondent was standing fifteen feet from the paved portion of the highway, in a place of apparent safety, waiting for the three cars to pass, when appellants' car turned or was forced off the pavement and that the driver thus had a space of fifteen feet in which to travel without hitting her or colliding with either of the northbound cars. It is true that he was suddenly confronted with the peril caused by one of the northbound cars attempting to pass the other but in this stress of circumstances he was obliged to use only ordinary care to avoid an accident and it was for the jury to decide under the evidence whether he used such care. They decided adversely to him, evidently drawing the conclusion or inference that, by the use of ordinary care, he could have passed between respondent and the approaching cars without striking her. This court has no right on appeal to draw an opposite inference where, as here, the inference of the jury finds reasonable support in the evidence. It may be added that respondent also testified that the two northbound cars had already passed each other before she was struck and that she was so far off the road that it "didn't enter her head" that appellants' car would come near her. She also claimed, although flatly contradicted by witnesses for appellants, that she was in an area which was or had been marked as a pedestrian zone and that she was carrying a flashlight.

[3, 4] Appellants contend that the evidence was insufficient to show damage from any source to the extent of the $6,000 award. On this issue also the evidence was contradictory and might well have served as the basis for a smaller verdict. However, as said in the case of Kelley v. Hodge Transportation System, 197 Cal. 598, 610, 242 P. 76, 81: "Unless we are able to say that the award of damages made by the jury * * * were grossly disproportionate to any compensation reasonably warranted by the facts as presented to us on appeal as to shock the sense of justice and raise at once a presumption that it was the result of passion, prejudice, or corruption, rather than an honest and sober judgment, this court may not exercise the power of revision." Citing many cases. Here competent and sufficient evidence was received to support the award made by the jury. In substance, it showed that respondent, a woman over fifty years of age, was thrown some ten feet, her hat and shoe were knocked off and she found herself with her head on the paved part of the highway and her body on the gravel; that she was in the hospital from February 16th to April 2d, suffering severely, with her left knee broken, her leg cut and bruised and her side black, blue and swollen; that her leg was kept in a basket for nearly three weeks; then in a cast, after which she removed to a hotel where she was around on crutches for several weeks, thereafter using a cane until the healing was complete. She testified that the use of her right leg, to save her left, caused her right knee to swell and pain. Medical witnesses for appellants testified that she was suffering from hyperthropic arthritis in both knee joints, a process of slow growth which could neither have been caused nor contributed to by the fracture, but the physician who attended her testified: "In my opinion that * * * abnormal deposit of bone in the joint was the result of an inflammation in the joint which was undoubtedly caused by the primary fracture. * * * Those bony spurs are there, and they always will be there. * * * I am of the opinion that that joint will always be sensitive; that there will always be a limitation of motion and that the normal function of the joint will always be impaired." Asked whether it was not common for a person of respondent's age to have arthritis, he replied: "I would say it was not unusual; but also, I would say this: To—not to have it to the extent of presenting the objective bony malformation that is apparent in this case."

Lastly, appellants complain of alleged misconduct of a juror and prejudicial error arising from the following incident: Near the close of the trial, at the request of appellants' attorney, the court and counsel retired to the judge's chambers and the attorney stated that at the close of the previous day's session, while R. W. Scott, who was to be a witness for appellants, Mr. Blackwood, respondent's attorney, and others were waiting for the elevator, an elderly lady, later identified as juror Mrs. Katherine D. Jackson, approached Mr. Blackwood and asked what part of the south he came from; that Mr. Blackwood answered and the juror then said in substance: "My husband was a judge in that part of the country at one time. * * * I expected you to charge the jury more than you did and to furnish us with some wonderful oratory at the beginning of the trial," whereupon Mr. Blackwood, in substance, replied that he would save that until later. Because of this incident, said attorney requested the court to declare a mistrial and dismiss the jury. The court replied that he would first consider the matter and interrogate the parties concerned. Court and counsel then re-entered the courtroom and requested Mrs. Jackson and Mr. Scott to step into the judge's chambers. This was done and Mr. Scott, in the presence of the court and counsel, then confirmed the occurrence substantially as above related. Mrs. Jackson, however, claimed that all she said to Mr. Blackwood was, in substance: "We hope we will hear some good old Kentucky oratory," to which he replied: "That will come later on." The court thereupon conferred with Mr. Davis, another juror, in the courtroom; then returned once more to his chambers with counsel, where the motion for dismissal was renewed upon the ground that Mrs. Jackson had evidenced an interest in the case favorable to respondent, was guilty of misconduct, and, in any event, the effect upon her of having been confronted with Mr. Scott's charges would be for her to discredit, if not entirely disbelieve, any testimony subsequently given by him. The court denied the motion and the trial proceeded. Thereafter affidavits on the subject were filed by both parties on motion for new trial but they contained no additional matter.

[5, 6] Appellants do not rely so much upon the contention that the statements of the juror were improper as upon the claim that the necessary effect of the conference in chambers was that the juror would be prejudiced against Mr. Scott when he was called as a witness. But appellants are in no position to urge this complaint as there is no showing whatsoever that they made any objection when the court proposed to investigate the matter. Neither is there any showing that ill will or prejudice toward the witness resulted from the court's action. When called Mr. Scott merely testified to the effect that the portion of the road where respondent stood was traveled continually by automobiles going to the stores and by the bus and that, when he examined the highway about February 18, he found no pedestrian markings on it. His testimony was at most cumulative. Furthermore, from a review of the record it is apparent that appellants suffered no injury from the occurrence. This also is a matter upon which the conclusion of the trial court, unless plainly wrong, will not be disturbed on appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

WEBSTER v. WEBSTER.

L. A. 12248.

Sept. 28, 1932.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 28, 1932.

1. Divorce ⇐254.

Interlocutory divorce decree awarding wife certain sum represented by husband's note secured by mortgage for maintenance and support awarded wife portion of community property.

2. Divorce ⇐252.

Award to divorced husband of community property in kind, and to wife fixed sum represented by husband's note secured by mortgage and also support money payable monthly until remarriage, held proper (Civ. Code, § 139).

3. Appeal and error ⇐907(3).

On appeal on judgment roll alone, presumption is in favor of regularity of lower court's proceedings.

4. Divorce ⇐286.

On appeal on judgment roll alone, appellate court would presume trial court properly determined that best interests of parties to divorce suit required disposition of property provided for (Civ. Code, § 146).

5. Stipulations ⇐18(3).

Parties' stipulation in open court that allegations of supplemental complaint would be deemed denied held binding (Code Civ. Proc. § 2d3).

6. Appeal and error ⇐643(4).

Appellate court may direct diminution of record any time during pendency of appeal.

7. Appeal and error ⇐659(1).

Appellate courts favor amendment enabling them to review lower court's decision with facts lower court had before it.

8. Appeal and error ⇐176.

Parties having proceeded to trial without objecting to failure to file written answer to supplemental complaint in accordance with stipulation, plaintiff could not urge on appeal that allegations stood admitted.

9. Divorce ⇐254.

Interlocutory divorce decree, properly construed, did not attempt to dispose of community property, and any language purporting to do so could be disregarded as surplusage.

The decree, after decreeing that plaintiff should be entitled to divorce upon expiration of one year from date thereof, declared that at that time court should grant such other and further relief as might be necessary to complete disposition of action. The decree also awarded community property in kind to husband and, in lieu of awarding portion of property in kind to wife, granted to her a lump sum represented by husband's note and secured by mortgage on real property awarded to husband, and also awarded wife $40 per month for her support and maintenance, and charged husband with expense incidental to maintenance, support, and education of minor child.

10. Divorce ⇐254.

Court in divorce case may determine, in interlocutory decree, status of property and disposition to be made.

11. Divorce ⇐284.

Statute precludes entry of final divorce decree pending appeal from that portion of interlocutory decree determining property rights (Civ. Code, § 132).

12. Divorce ⇐182.

That Supreme Court had dismissed, because not taken within time allowed, appeal from purported final divorce decree, made pending appeal from interlocutory decree, did not make final decree valid.

WASTE, C. J.

Plaintiff appeals from that portion of an interlocutory decree of divorce which fixes and determines the property rights of the parties. The appeal is on the judgment roll alone.

On January 14, 1929, the plaintiff instituted an action for separate maintenance to which the defendant in due time filed an answer. Defendant also cross-complained for a divorce. Thereafter, and in the early stages of the trial, plaintiff was granted leave to file a supplemental complaint for divorce upon the ground of extreme cruelty. Defendant did not file a written answer thereto, it being stipulated in open court that the allegations of the supplemental complaint should be deemed denied. At the conclusion of the trial findings of fact were waived and the court below entered its interlocutory decree granting a divorce to plaintiff upon the ground of extreme cruelty. This decree awarded the community property in kind to the defendant husband. In lieu of awarding a portion of the property in kind to the plaintiff wife, the interlocutory decree granted to her a lump sum of money, represented by a promissory note in the sum of $3,500 to be executed by the defendant husband and to be secured by a mortgage on the real property awarded to the defendant husband. Plaintiff was also awarded $40 a month for her support and maintenance, to be paid by the defendant until such time as the plaintiff remarried. The defendant was also charged with the expense incidental to the maintenance, support, and education of the minor child of the parties.

[1, 2] As already intimated, the plaintiff has not appealed from that portion of the interlocutory decree entitling her to a divorce, but confines her attack to theose portions of the decree which fix and determine the rights of the parties in and to the community property. Plaintiff's first assault thereon is grounded upon the erroneous assumption that the decree awards all of the community property to the defendant, and grants to her only an award of money for support and maintenance under section 139 of the Civil Code. This is asserted to be error. A reasonable construction of the interlocutory decree readily discloses that plaintiff was awarded a portion of the community property, her share being awarded to her in money rather than in kind, the same being secured by a mortgage on the real property. The fact that the decree awards said sum "for the maintenance and support of the plaintiff," does not make it any the less an award of a portion of the community property. In addition thereto, plaintiff was awarded support money, payable monthly, until such time as she remarried. This is a proper method of distribution of the property and is a matter to be determined in the sound discretion of the trial court. Marshall v. Marshall, 196 Cal. 761, 765, 239 P. 36; Meyer v. Meyer, 184 Cal. 687, 195 P. 387; Gaston v. Gaston, 114 Cal. 542, 546, 46 P. 609, 55 Am. St. Rep. 86. We perceive no abuse in its discretion.

[3, 4] Plaintiff next contends that under section 146 of the Civil Code, and the authorities construing the same, the court below should have awarded her in excess of one-half of the community property. We find it unnecessary to here determine whether or not in actions for divorce based on charges of extreme cruelty the trial court should, or must, award in excess of one-half of the community property to the unoffending spouse. Assuming this to be the general rule, as urged by the plaintiff, a point we need not decide, we cannot say on the record now before us that the court below, in awarding the property as above indicated, did violence to this asserted general rule. The appeal being on the judgment roll alone, every presumption and intendment is resolved in favor of the regularity of the proceedings in the court below. Coleman v. Farwell, 206 Cal. 740, 276 P. 335; Johnston v. Callahan, 146 Cal. 212, 79 P. 870; Kelly v. McDonald, 98 Cal. App. 121, 276 P. 404. In the absence of the evidence it is, of course, impossible for us to say that the court below awarded less than one-half of the community property to the plaintiff, or otherwise erred or abused its discretion in awarding the same. In this state of the record it will be presumed that the trial court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, determined that the best interests of the parties would be served by the disposition above outlined.

[5] Plaintiff would have us accept the allegations of the supplemental complaint as to the value of the community property, thus indicating, so she asserts, the unequal distribution of the same. This we cannot do. The parties stipulated in open court that the allegations of the supplemental complaint were to be deemed denied. This stipulation appears in the reporter's notes taken upon the trial of the cause and has been brought to our attention by diminution of the record heretofore duly authorized by this court over the plaintiff's objection. Such a stipulation made in open court constitutes "not only agreements between the parties, but between them and the Court, which the latter is bound to enforce, not only for the benefit of the party interested, * * * but for the protection of its own honor and dignity." Meagher v. Gagliardo, 35 Cal. 602; 23 Cal. Jur. 811, § 2. Nothing in section 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure militates against the binding effect of a stipulation entered into and executed by the parties in open court and duly reported in the proceedings of the trial. McLaughlin v. Claussen, 116 Cal. 490, 48 P. 487; Smith v. Whittier, 95 Cal. 279, 287-288, 30 P. 529, 530; Welch v. Stratton, 73 Cal. App. 765, 768, 239 P. 380. In Smith v. Whittier, supra, it is stated: "The evident object of this section [section 283, Code Civ. Proc.] is that, whenever the attorney shall enter into an agreement for the purpose of binding his client, there shall be such a record thereof as will preclude any question concerning its character or effect, and that the extent of the agreement may be ascertained by the record, if oral, that it shall be entered in the minutes, and, if written, that it shall be filed with the clerk. 'It is not intended to enlarge or abridge the authority of the attorney, but only to prescribe the manner of its exercise.' Preston v. Hill, 50 Cal. 53 [19 Am. Rep. 647]. The section does not require a construction that in no instance shall an agreement which the attorney may make in behalf of his client be binding unless entered in the minutes of the court or filed with the clerk. Its provisions have reference to executory agreements, and not to those which have been wholly or in part executed, and it was with reference to oral agreements of this character that the court said in its opinion in Borkheim v. B. & M. Ins. Co., 38 Cal. 628 [relied on by plaintiff herein]: 'Of such agreements, therefore, there can be no specific performance.' If under the terms of a mutual stipulation, which was only verbal, one party has received the advantage for which he entered into it, or the other party has at his instance given up some right, or lost some advantage, so that it would be inequitable for him to insist that the stipulation was invalid, he will not be permitted to repudiate the obligation of his own agreement upon the ground that it had not been entered in the minutes of the court. * * * If the party admits that he made such verbal stipulation, it will be as binding upon him as if it had been entered in the minutes of the court. Patterson v. Ely, 19 Cal. 36; Reese v. Mahoney, 21 Cal. 306. If, however, the terms of the verbal agreement are disputed, courts refuse to settle such disputes, or to try a collateral issue for the purpose of determining whether any agreement had been made. * * * The same principles are applicable to the enforcement of a written agreement which has not been filed as to a verbal one which has not been entered in the minutes of the court. If the parties have acted upon such written agreement to such an extent that it would be inequitable not to recognize its binding effect, as, for example, if a party has obtained under the agreement that in consideration of which the other became bound thereby, or has been relieved of some burden which was the consideration for which it was given, or if the other party has been reasonably led thereby to forego any step which but for the agreement he would have taken, courts will not allow the agreement to be repudiated upon the ground that it had not been filed with the clerk."

In the instant case and during the early stages of the trial on plaintiff's complaint for separate maintenance and defendant's cross-complaint for divorce, it was stipulated in open court that plaintiff might file a supplemental complaint for divorce and that the allegations thereof should be deemed denied. Such supplemental complaint was thereafter filed and the cause proceeded to trial and judgment. In other words, the verbal stipulation has been fully executed, plaintiff receiving the benefit thereof and defendant, relying thereon, having been led to forego his right to file a written answer to such supplemental complaint, which written answer he would have filed but for the stipulation. Under these circumstances, and in the language of Smith v. Whittier, supra, it would be inequitable to permit plaintiff to now repudiate the agreement. Moreover, this is not a case where the terms of the stipulation are locked up in the breasts of the parties or their respective counsel, thus precluding an accurate ascertainment thereof. The terms and extent of the stipulation are brought to our attention by a duly authenticated excerpt of the proceedings in the court below. There can therefore be no dispute or doubt in this regard.

[6, 7] There is no merit in plaintiff's contention that the trial court by reason of lapse of time was without jurisdiction to authenticate the "Excerpt from Proceedings at Trial," wherein appears the stipulation above referred to. Plaintiff confuses the jurisdiction of the trial court with that of this court. Upon suggestion of the defendant and to meet the assertion of plaintiff that the allegations of the supplemental complaint had not been denied, this court, after hearing and over plaintiff's objection, directed diminution of the record. As a result of this court's order, the "excerpt of proceedings" was filed herein. It is well settled that an appellate court, in the exercise of its jurisdiction, may direct the correction or diminution of a record at any time during the pendency of the appeal; and, this without reference to the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. McMahon v. Hamilton, 202 Cal. 319, 325, 260 P. 793; Dugan v. Forster, 101 Cal. App. 144, 281 P. 411; Barnett v. Marsili (Cal. App.) 10 P.(2d) 472. In such a case we are not confronted with a want of power or jurisdiction in the trial court, assuming the six months' period to have expired, but rather with the inherent power of an appellate court to cause the amendment of a record before it so that the same might speak the truth. Appellate courts look with favor upon an amendment the effect of which is to enable them to review the decision of the lower court in view of all the facts which that court had before it when it made its decision. McMahon v. Hamilton, supra.

Nor do we think the plaintiff has suffered any disadvantage or prejudice by reason of such diminution of the record. Plaintiff prosecuted her appeal on the judgment roll alone and then made the erroneous and misleading statement that the allegations of the supplemental complaint as to the value of the community property had not been denied by the defendant when, as matter of fact, the parties had, as already stated, orally stipulated in open court that said allegations should be deemed denied. The only method available to the defendant to overcome plaintiff's erroneous statement was by diminution of the record duly authorized by this court. It is therefore immediately apparent that defendant, and not plaintiff, was, until such diminution, the wronged party.

[8] The parties having proceeded to trial and judgment without objection being made in the trial court as to the failure to file a written answer to the supplemental complaint, it is now too late to urge that the allegations of such supplemental complaint stand admitted. Turner v. East Side Canal Co., 169 Cal. 652, 654–655, 147 P. 579; Gervaise v. Brookins, 156 Cal. 110, 112, 102 P. 332; Kern Valley Bank v. Koehn, 19 Cal. App. 247, 249, 125 P. 358.

[9, 10] Citing Remley v. Remley, 49 Cal. App. 489, 193 P. 604, and other cases, plaintiff next contends that the interlocutory decree improperly purports to make a final adjudication of the property rights of the parties rather than merely determining the manner in which the property should be disposed of or assigned upon the entry of the final decree. Assuming the rule to be that the court below was without power to dispose of the community property in the interlocutory decree, a point we need not now decide, we are of the opinion that the decree here involved, when construed as a whole, may reasonably be said to constitute but a determination of how and the manner in which the property should be assigned upon the entry of the final decree. This construction is borne out by that portion of the decree which, after decreeing that plaintiff shall be entitled to a divorce upon the expiration of one year from the date thereof, declares that "at that time the court shall grant such other and further relief as may be necessary to complete disposition of this action." However, granting that the interlocutory decree contains some language susceptible of the interpretation contended for by the plaintiff, and granting further that such disposition of the property in the interlocutory decree would be improper, it is our opinion that the language thus purporting to make final disposition of the property may properly be disregarded as surplusage. It does not represent a departure from the jurisdiction of the court. Sullivan v. Superior Court, 72 Cal. App. 531, 534, 237 P. 782. There can be no doubt as to the propriety of the trial court's action in determining in the interlocutory decree the status of the property and the disposition to be made thereof. Pereira v. Pereira, 156 Cal. 1, 9–11, 103 P. 488, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 880, 134 Am. St. Rep. 107; Strupelle v. Strupelle, 59 Cal. App. 526, 531, 211 P. 248; Remley v. Remley, supra. This being so, plaintiff's rights will be fully protected by an order directing the court below upon entering the final decree to assign the property according to the determination expressed in the interlocutory decree. A similar direction appears in Strupelle v. Strupelle, supra, and Remley v. Remley, supra.

[11] In announcing our conclusion on this phase of the case we are not embarrassed by the trial court's purported entry of the final decree during the pendency of this appeal. Section 132 of the Civil Code prohibits the entry of a final decree of divorce "if any appeal is taken [and pending] from the interlocutory judgment." This section has been held to preclude the entry of a final decree though the appeal be only from that portion of the interlocutory decree determining the property rights of the parties. Newell v. Superior Court, 27 Cal. App. 343–345, 149 P. 998, 999. In the cited case it is stated:

"It has been determined that in a divorce action under the provisions of our Code the function of an interlocutory decree includes not only the establishment of the right of a party to a divorce, but includes also the hearing and final determination of the rights of the parties as to property. Any disposition of property rights made in connection with the hearing of the principal cause of action is regularly included in and becomes a part of the interlocutory decree. * * *

"In the present case there is an interlocutory judgment which has become final with respect to the plaintiff's right to a divorce, but is subject to a pending appeal affecting the provisions made therein for the support of the plaintiff. Until the determination of that appeal the superior court is not in a position to know whether it will be required to make some other and different order affecting a matter closely connected with the granting of the divorce. * * * The provision contained in section 132, Civil Code, postponing the entry of final judgment until after final disposition of any appeal from the interlocutory judgment, was adopted in recognition of the fact that in granting a divorce the court has a variety of duties to perform affecting the property rights of the parties and the future welfare of those parties and their children; and it was deemed advisable that in such cases all of those matters, as far as possible, should be finally adjusted in connection with the granting of a divorce."

[12] It necessarily follows that the "final decree" entered by the court below pending this appeal was premature and improper. The fact that this court heretofore dismissed an appeal from such purported "final decree" adds nothing to its validity. The appeal was not heard on its merits but was dismissed solely because it had not been taken within the time allowed by law. Moreover, inspection of our records discloses that plaintiff, apparently realizing the impropriety of the entry of such "final decree" pending the present appeal, moved the court below, under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, to set aside and vacate said purported "final decree." An appeal from the order refusing to vacate such "final decree" is now pending in this court. Webster v. Webster, L. A. No. 13288. When the latter appeal comes before us for decision, it necessarily follows from what has been said that the order refusing to vacate the purported "final decree" will have to be reversed.

For the foregoing reasons, that portion of the interlocutory decree determining the property rights of the parties is hereby affirmed. Upon entering its final decree of divorce, the trial court will assign and dispose of the property according to the determination expressed in such interlocutory decree; and when it makes its final decree, it may then, pursuant to the authority conferred by section 140 of the Civil Code, make provision in that decree for such reasonable security for the payment of the money allowed to plaintiff as it may deem proper.

Motion to dismiss appeal. The facts are without dispute. The complaint in the action, which is one to condemn real property for railroad purposes, was filed on March 16, 1899. The answer of defendant and appellant was filed June 27, 1899. Appellant filed with his answer a cross-complaint, and, some six years later, on February 24, 1905, filed an amended cross-complaint. The answer of plaintiff and respondent to the amended cross-complaint was filed June 8, 1905. No proceedings were taken and no stipulations, documents, or other pleadings were filed in the action from that time until January 15, 1931, more than thirty-one years after the answer was filed and more than twenty-five years after the filing of the answer of respondent to appellants' amended cross-complaint. On March 12, 1931, respondent Southern Pacific Railroad Company served and filed its notice of motion to dismiss the action for want of prosecution; the cause not having been brought to trial within five years after answer filed. On April 17, 1931, there was made and entered in the minutes of the trial court the following order: "The motion of the plaintiff, to dismiss the above entitled action having been heretofore argued by respective counsel and submitted to the court for a ruling and by the court taken under advisement, it is now ordered that the motion be and it is hereby granted and the action is dismissed." A note of this order was entered in the clerk's register of actions on the same day. On April 18, 1931, the following judgment was signed by the trial court and entered in the judgment book: "The motion of the plaintiff to dismiss the above entitled action came on regularly for hearing before the above entitled Court on the 10th day of April, 1931; * * * and said motion having been submitted to the Court; and the Court having entered herein its minute order dismissing said action; and good cause appearing therefor. It is ordered, adjudged and decreed that the above entitled action be, and it is hereby dismissed. Done in open court this 18th day of April, 1931. [Signed.]" Appellant thereafter moved to vacate the judgment, which motion was denied. Appellant filed a notice of appeal from the judgment of dismissal and also from an order refusing to vacate it. The notice of appeal was filed on June 17, 1931, within sixty days after the entry of the formal judgment, but more than sixty days after the entry in the minutes of the trial court of the minute order dismissing the action.

If the minute order be construed the final judgment of the court dismissing the cause, as contended by respondent, then the notice of appeal from the judgment was filed too late. If, however, the time for taking the appeal began to run on the date of the entry of the formal judgment, entered April 18, 1931, the notice of appeal was given in time, and this court has jurisdiction to consider the cause. Our jurisdiction to entertain appeals, of course, is dependent upon a compliance with the statutory prerequisites. The question here involved is primarily one of jurisdiction.

[1, 2] The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure (see Code Civ. Proc. § 668) invoked by appellants, requiring entry of judgments in the judgment book, apply to judgments in favor of one party or another upon the merits of the case. Here there has been no decision upon the merits. The action has simply been dismissed under the provisions of section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure for failure to prosecute with reasonable diligence and for failure to bring the case to trial within the time prescribed by the statute. It has been said that such an order of dismissal is not a judgment at all in the strict sense, but is to be treated as such for all the purposes of taking an appeal, because it finally disposes of the particular action and prevents further proceedings as effectually as would any formal judgment based on ruling on demurrer, or on findings or verdict on the facts. Wood, Curtis & Co. v. Missouri, etc., Ry. Co., 152 Cal. 344, 92 P. 868. The rule is well established in this state from a very early period that a minute order of the trial court dismissing an action is a final judgment, and the time for appeal therefore runs from the entry of such minute order. Tripp v. Santa Rosa Street R. R., 69 Cal. 631, 11 P. 219. This case has been followed with approval in the later cases of Dempsey v. Underhill, 156 Cal. 718, 106 P. 73; Howe v. Key System Transit Co., 198 Cal. 525, 531, 246 P. 39; Nelson v. Geiss (Cal. App.) 7 P.(2d) 720. In all dismissals of actions, whether made under sections 581, 581a, 581b, or 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the minute order of the court constitutes a final judgment from which an appeal must be taken. 2 Cal. Jur. p. 402; Id. pp. 158, 159. Nor does the fact that a formal judgment was entered in the judgment book thereafter suspend or toll the time for appeal. Matthai v. Kennedy, 148 Cal. 699, 84 P. 37; Bengel v. Traeger, 100 Cal. App. 526, 280 P. 538; Lewis v. Hammond Lumber Co., 114 Cal. App. 390, 300 P. 49. The motion to vacate the order dismissing the action is not appealable. Tripp v. Santa Rosa Street R. R., supra.

The motion to dismiss the appeal from the judgment of dismissal is granted, and the appeal is dismissed.

FARMERS' & MERCHANTS' BANK OF LOS ANGELES v. BANK OF ITALY.

Sac. 4197.

Supreme Court of California.

Sept. 27, 1932.

1. Garnishment ⇐118.

Where garnishment is levied under writ of execution, judgment creditor must proceed under statutes prescribing proceedings supplementary to execution and not statutes dealing with attachment (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 544, 714–721).

2. Garnishment ⇐118.

Judgment creditor garnishing judgment debtor's debtor under writ of execution could not maintain suit against garnishee without complying with statutes prescribing proceedings supplementary to execution (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 714–721).

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 714–721, require that the execution creditor must first secure an examination of the judgment debtor's debtor before the court, respecting any alleged indebtedness to the judgment debtor, and then, if such alleged debtor of the judgment debtor denies the indebtedness under Code Civ. Proc. § 720, the judgment creditor may sue.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; J. C. Needham, Judge.

Action by the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Los Angeles against the Bank of Italy. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Samuel V. Cornell and W. Coburn Cook, both of Turlock, and Alfred C. Skaife and Irene Bryan, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

T. B. Scott, of Modesto, and Louis Ferrari and Keyes & Erskine, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of defendant. The facts as found by the trial court are not in dispute and are as follows:

On July 31, 1922, one Hemple borrowed $500 from respondent bank, and gave to that bank at its Modesto branch his note for that sum, and pledged as security therefor certificates representing twenty-five shares of the Security State Bank of Turlock, one share of United States Steel Corporation, preferred, and three shares of the Butterick Company, all of which shares were indorsed in blank. On August 10, 1922, appellant brought an action against Hemple for $5,013 in Stanislaus county. In this action a writ of attachment was levied upon the Security State Bank attaching the interest in the shares of that bank owned by Hemple and pledged to respondent. On August 23, 1922, appellant recovered judgment by default against Hemple for the amount prayed for. On the same date a writ of execution was issued. On September 27, 1922, a notice of garnishment under this writ was served on the respondent. On September 30, 1922, the respondent made answer to the garnishment in which it was stated that respondent was not indebted to Hemple. About October 9, 1922, respondent sold to one Johnson Hemple's note and transferred to Johnson the collateral pledged as security therefor. The transfer by respondent to Johnson was made subject to the rights of appellant under its garnishment. In November, 1922, the interest of Hemple in the shares of the Security State Bank was sold under an alias writ of execution, being purchased by appellant for $500. In 1923 appellant commenced this action against respondent.

[1, 2] It is rather difficult to ascertain the exact theory upon which the complaint is based. Appellant seems to be of the opinion that under the facts of this case it had the right to proceed by action directly against the garnishee after it had transferred the pledged stock. Appellant makes no pretense that the complaint is based on the theory of a creditors' bill in equity to subject to the satisfaction of the judgment assets which cannot be reached by execution. The facts necessary to such an action are not alleged. See Bond v. Bulgheroni (Cal. Sup.) 8 P.(2d) 130. In its opening brief appellant states: "The appellant in the case at bar proceeds against the respondent under section 544 of the Code of Civil Procedure, making a garnishee liable to a judgment creditor for the property in his hands at the time of a garnishment." However, that section can have no application to the instant case for the reason that it only applies when a garnishment has been levied under a writ of attachment. In the instant case respondent was not garnished under a writ of attachment, but under a writ of execution. Section 544 of the Code of Civil Procedure has no application to cases where the garnishment is levied under a writ of execution. It is well settled in this state that if the garnishment is levied under a writ of execution the judgment creditor must proceed not under the Code sections dealing with writs of attachment (such as section 544 of the Code of Civil Procedure), but under the Code sections prescribing proceedings supplementary to execution, i. e., sections 714 to 721 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There is one fundamental difference between the two procedures. By the express terms of section 544, persons indebted to the judgment debtor are, upon receiving notice that such debts are attached, made directly liable to the attaching creditor. But no such direct liability is provided for in the sections supplementary to execution. By these sections an action arises against the garnishee only when the steps provided as conditions precedent are complied with. This distinction has been long recognized in this state. In Nordstrom v. Corona City Water Co., 155 Cal. 206, at page 211, 100 P. 242, 244, 132 Am. St. Rep. 81, it is stated: "There is, furthermore, this peculiarity in the Code sections regulating garnishments. By the express terms of the statute relating to attachments, persons indebted to the defendant are, upon receiving notice that such debts are attached, made directly liable to the plaintiff for the amount thereof. Code Civ. Proc. § 544. No such direct liability is, however, provided in the case of a levy of execution upon such debts, and this court has, on several occasions, pointed out that the levy of execution upon a debtor of the judgment debtor does not give the plaintiff a cause of action against the garnishee." Since respondent herein was not garnisheed under a writ of attachment it follows, of course, that the appellant has no cause of action under section 544 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Appellant's cause of action, if any exists, must be based upon the provisions of sections 714 to 721 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The complaint fails to allege, and the evidence clearly shows, and appellant admits that it did not comply with the provisions of those sections. Those sections require that the execution creditor must first secure an examination of the judgment debtor's debtor before the court, respecting any alleged indebtedness to the judgment debtor, and then if such alleged debtor of the judgment debtor denies the indebtedness, under section 720 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the judgment creditor may sue.

It must be remembered that whatever rights appellant may have against respondent exist solely by virtue of statute. The respondent is not indebted to appellant—there is no privity between a judgment creditor and his debtor's debtor. Formerly the remedy of such a judgment creditor was by a creditor's bill, but now, except in unusual cases, of which this is not one, rights of the judgment creditor against the debtor's debtor are governed entirely by those provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure providing for proceedings supplementary to execution. Section 714 et seq. Under those sections an alleged debtor of the judgment debtor may be fully examined under oath as to any assets of the judgment debtor under his control, witnesses may be called, and if it appears that any such assets are in his hands, the court may order them to be turned over to the judgment creditor. However, if the person alleged to have the property of the judgment debtor claims any interest in the property, or denies the debt, then and only then the judgment creditor, under section 720 of the Code of Civil Procedure, may bring an action against such person to recover the property. Before 1907 it was further required that as an additional condition precedent the judgment creditor, before such an action would lie, must secure from the court before whom the examination was held an order authorizing him to sue. By an amendment to section 720 in 1907 (St. 1907, p. 686) that condition precedent was abolished, but that was the only effect of the 1907 amendment. The other conditions precedent still exist, and must be complied with before any action under section 720 will lie. We are not here concerned with how strictly the code sections must be complied with. We have no doubt that substantial compliance is all that is required. In the instant case appellant entirely ignored the proceedings contemplated by the Code. If appellant desires to avail itself of the remedies granted by the Code, it must do so under the conditions therein provided. The respondent has been sued in this action by one to whom it is not indebted. Respondent is entitled, before any such action will lie, to the protection guaranteed by the code.

The principles above enunciated have long been settled in this state. In Herrlich v. Kaufmann, 99 Cal. 271, page 274, 33 P. 857, 858, 37 Am. St. Rep. 50, the court stated:

"The complaint goes upon the theory that the plaintiff herein, Herrlich, having a money judgment against Mrs. McDonald, and having, upon an execution thereon, served Kaufmann with a notice of garnishment, thereby acquired as direct a cause of action against the latter as in any case where indebitatus assumpsit would lie. But this is not the law. There is, at common law, no privity between a judgment creditor and his debtor's debtor; there is no contract relation between them, and no relation of any kind which, of itself, gives the former a direct cause of action at law against the latter.

"Formerly, assets of a judgment debtor, which could not be effectively seized by the sheriff under an execution, such as a debt owing to the defendant, could be reached, upon a proper showing, through a court of equity, by means of a creditor's bill or suit; but in this state, and in most of the other states, a legal remedy is afforded by statutes providing for proceedings supplementary to execution, and the general rule is that when there are such statutory proceedings they must be pursued.

"The Code of Civil Procedure of this state, from section 716 to section 721, specifically provides how a judgment creditor may proceed against a debtor of his judgment debtor. Those sections provide, in brief, that after the issuing of an execution, upon a showing by affidavit or otherwise that a person is indebted to the judgment debtor in an amount exceeding $50, the judge may order such person to appear and answer concerning such alleged indebtedness. If he admits the indebtedness he may be ordered to apply the amount thereof to the satisfaction of the judgment. If he denies any indebtedness, and the denial seems, after a hearing, to be bona fide, the court or judge may authorize the judgment creditor to institute a suit against such person to recover such alleged debt. Now, in the case at bar, the plaintiffs entirely ignored these statutory provisions, and without procuring an order for appellant to appear and answer, and without any order authorizing them to commence an action against appellant, brought this suit upon the theory of a direct liability of appellant to them, as hereinbefore stated."

The court therefore concluded that the complaint did not state a cause of action.

Again, in Matteson, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Conley, 144 Cal. 483, at page 484, 77 P. 1042, this court stated: "The question is as to whether an action can be maintained directly against a person who has been served with an execution to recover money due from such person to the execution debtor. We think the question must be answered in the negative. The defendant is not indebted to the plaintiff. At common law there is no privity between a judgment creditor and his debtor's debtor. There is no contract relation between them, and we know of no case in which it has been held that such action would lie, in the absence of a statute authorizing it. In place of a creditors' bill, and as a remedy more direct and certain, we have a chapter on proceedings supplementary to execution. Code Civ. Proc. § 714 et seq. Under the provisions of this chapter a debtor of a judgment debtor may be fully examined as to property, credits, money, or other assets in his possession or under his control. Witnesses may be examined, and the judge may order any property of a judgment debtor not exempt from execution, or due to the judgment debtor, to be applied toward the satisfaction of the judgment. If it appears that the person alleged to have property of the judgment debtor, or to be indebted to him, claims an interest in the property adverse to him, or denies the debt, the court or judge may authorize, by an order made to that effect, the judgment creditor to institute an action against such person for the recovery of such interest or debt. In this case the plaintiff did not attempt to comply with the provisions of said chapter concerning proceedings supplementary to execution. Defendant has not been examined concerning any property or moneys due by him to Carlisle. No order has been made as to the application of any assets of Carlisle in the hands of defendant, nor has any order been made authorizing this action.

It is therefore evident that the proceedings contemplated by the Code have been entirely ignored. The defendant, without having been examined or ordered to pay any money, has been sued by one to whom he is not indebted. Plaintiff does not claim that defendant is indebted to him. If he would reach property or credits in the hands of defendant for the purpose of satisfying his judgment against Carlisle, he must do so in the manner provided by law." See, also, Phillips v. Price, 153 Cal. 146, 94 P. 617; Carter v. Los Angeles Nat. Bank, 116 Cal. 370, 48 P. 332.

It therefore follows that since appellant has failed to comply with the statutory provisions above enumerated, no cause of action exists against respondent. This makes it unnecessary to discuss the many other points raised in the briefs of counsel.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

WESTERN PIPE & STEEL CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al.

Civ. 8336.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 23, 1932.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 23, 1932.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 21, 1932.

1. Master and servant ⇐419.

Accident commission has, within statutory time limit, continuing jurisdiction of decision denying adjustment of compensation for serious and willful misconduct of employer (St. 1917, p. 850, § 20 (d); p. 834, § 6 (b), as amended).

2. Master and servant ⇐419.

Accident commission had "good cause" for exercising continuing jurisdiction of decision denying adjustment for employer's serious and willful misconduct, where employee failed to produce all available testimony at first hearing (St. 1917, p. 850, § 20 (d); p. 834, § 6 (b), as amended).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Good Cause," see Words and Phrases.]

Limitation not pleaded to claim for adjustment of compensation, account of employer's serious and willful misconduct, was waived (St. 1917, p. 841, § 11 (b).

A. I. Townsend, of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

By this proceeding it is sought to annul an order of the industrial accident commission dated February 29, 1932. Joseph Elbert Huston was injured July 26, 1928, during the course of his employment with the petitioner, which corporation was at the time self-insured. The petitioner paid compensation to Huston at the rate of $20.83 per week at all times subsequent to one week following the accident, together with all hospital and medical expenses. However, on May 14, 1930, Huston filed an application asking for an adjustment of his claim, alleging that his injuries were caused by the serious and willful misconduct of his employer, the petitioner. After a hearing thereon the respondent commission determined that the accident was occasioned by the serious and willful misconduct and ordered the compensation increased by one-half. Upon the petition of the employer, however, a rehearing was granted and the commission arrived at a different conclusion. The respondent Huston then petitioned for a rehearing, which was denied, following which order he petitioned this court for a writ of review, which was denied, and the award became final. Subsequently and on November 5, 1931, he filed with the commission a petition that his case be reopened upon the ground of a mistake of fact which he could establish by additional evidence to be produced at the hearing. Over the strenuous objections of petitioner the commission heard the evidence and made its order reopening the case and determining that the accident was caused by the misconduct, ordering the compensation increased to $31.24 weekly, or one-half, beginning August 5, 1928. It is this award which the petitioner claims the respondent commission had no jurisdiction to render. The principal contention in this particular is that section 20(d) of the Workmen's Compensation Act (Stats. 1917, pp. 831, 850) does not apply to cases involving "proof" of serious and willful misconduct, and hence that the decision made after the rehearing became final and beyond the power of the respondent commission to alter or amend.

The section referred to reads as follows: "(d) The commission shall have continuing jurisdiction over all its orders, decisions and awards made and entered under the provisions of sections six to thirty-one, inclusive, of this act and may at any time, upon notice, and after opportunity to be heard is given to the parties in interest, rescind, alter or amend any such order, decision or award made by it upon good cause appearing therefor, such power including the right to review, grant or regrant, diminish, increase or terminate, within the limits prescribed by this act, any compensation awarded, upon the grounds that the disability of the person in whose favor such award was made has either recurred, increased, diminished or terminated; provided, that no award of compensation shall be rescinded, altered or amended after two hundred forty-five weeks from the date of the injury. Any order, decision or award rescinding, altering or amending a prior order, decision or award shall have the same effect as is herein provided for original orders, decisions or awards."

[1] There can be no doubt, regardless of our preconceived notions, of the construction which must be given to the designated section since the case of Bartlett Hayward Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 203 Cal. 522, 265 P. 195, 199. It is therein said: "It is our conclusion, therefore, that the continuing jurisdiction of the commission as provided by section 20(d) of the Act of 1917 is not limited to the consideration of changes in the physical condition of the workman, but is extended to the right to rescind, alter or amend the orders, decisions, or awards upon good cause appearing therefor. What constitutes 'good cause' depends largely upon the circumstances of each case. The term is relative. It may be assumed that the determination of the commission as to what constitutes 'good cause,' while entitled to great weight, would not be conclusive." And again, in discussing whether the commission was barred from exercising its continuing jurisdiction, the court there said: "We find no provision of the act which operates as an estoppel as against the commission to exercise its continuing jurisdiction within the stated time, either as to the changed condition of the injured employee or as to the other matters, law or fact, which would constitute 'good cause' for the exercise thereof." (Italics ours.) It is thus seen that, dependent upon good cause, the respondent commission has, within the specified time limit, general continuing jurisdiction over "its orders, decisions and awards made and entered under the provisions of sections six to thirty-one inclusive" of the act. The provision for the increase of the amount of compensation for injury occurring by reason of the "serious and wilful misconduct of the employer" is found in section 6(b) of the act (as amended). Hence it follows that the respondent commission has continuing jurisdiction over awards of compensation for injuries thus occasioned.

[2] It is argued, however, that newly discovered evidence does not constitute good cause—that such testimony should have been produced theretofore or the employee forever barred by the award which became final when his petition for the writ of review was denied. The contention thus advanced would unquestionably be held sound if we were considering litigation in the ordinary forum. The old maxim, "Interest reipublicæ ut sit finis litium," would be determined to be applicable. But here we are confronted with a different situation, as is pointed out in the exhaustive opinion in the Bartlett Case. It was there determined that a mistake of law on the part of the commission, i. e., giving the employee "a rating of 25 per cent. permanent disability, when as matter of law * * * he was entitled to a rating of 100 per cent. permanent disability," constituted "good cause." How, then, can we say that the commission did not have jurisdiction to determine that a mistake of fact occasioned by the failure or inability of the employee to produce certain testimony at a former hearing constitutes good cause? Logically there is no distinction.

Reliance is had by petitioner upon the authorities of Hindes v. Industrial Accident Commission, 73 Cal. App. 726, 239 P. 339; Benton v. Industrial Accident Commission, 74 Cal. App. 411, 240 P. 1021; and Crowe Glass Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 84 Cal. App. 287, 258 P. 130. The first two are effectively disposed of and explained in Bartlett Hayward Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, and the third is distinguished in Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 208 Cal. 532, 282 P. 948.

[3] Finally it is asserted that the claim of the respondent Huston was barred by his failure to file a claim for adjustment on the ground that the injury was occasioned by the serious and willful misconduct of the employer until one year and ten months after the accident. It is a sufficient answer to this contention to point out that the period of limitation was not pleaded as an affirmative defense, as is required by section 11(b) of the act.

Award affirmed.

STEPHENS, Justice pro tem.

I concur:

In concurring I wish to express my opinion that any break in the rule of finality of decision is regrettable. Courts presided over by trained judges are very strictly limited in their power of opening cases after judgment. The value of knowing that a certain judgment is final is greater in most cases than the possibility of advantageous change. The temptation to present perjured or colored testimony to meet a condition revealed in the first trial is often too great to be successfully resisted. These are good reasons, and there are others, supporting the doctrine of finality of decision as applied to courts. They certainly apply with equal force to judgments rendered by commissions untrained in our system of jurisprudence.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

[1] We have before us in this case, which involves an appeal from the judgment in favor of plaintiff as well as from an order denying a motion for new trial, an appellant's brief of 106 pages. The headings appearing therein are as follows: "Statement of Facts," "Appellant's Grounds of Appeal," "Excessive Damages," "The Court should have Allowed the Defendant to Introduce Evidence of Compensation Insurance," and "Defendant Demurs to Plaintiff's Complaint." Under the second heading, "Appellant's Grounds of Appeal," are listed specifications of error designated by letters of the alphabet, commencing with "a" and running to "u." That part of rule VIII of the Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal reading as follows: "The briefs must present each point separately, under an appropriate heading, showing the nature of the question to be presented," was designed to lighten the labors of the appellate tribunals by requiring the litigants to present their cause systematically and so arranged that those upon whom the duty devolves of ascertaining the rule of law to apply may be advised, as they read, of the exact question under consideration, instead of being compelled to extricate it from the mass. An appellant's brief which fails to comply is equally confusing to the respondent, who labors under an unwarranted handicap in attempting to understandingly reply. There is no reason—no great or insurmountable difficulty is presented by the rule—why there should not be a compliance. It may possibly be that the heading "Excessive Damages" and the one "The Court Should have Allowed the Defendants to Introduce Evidence of Compensation Insurance," can be construed as a partial meeting of the requirements. For that reason we shall take note of them instead of dismissing the appeal, but treat the remainder of the brief for what it is, a presentation insufficient to require consideration or comment.

Turning therefore to the first question, "Excessive Damages," we find no reason whatever assigned from which it may be argued that the verdict is excessive; the appellant contenting himself with the assertion that if $7,500 (the amount of the verdict) is "one-half of the amount of compensatory damages under said section" (subdivision 4, § 6 (a), Workmen's Compensation Act [as amended by St. 1929, p. 430]), "such verdict for $7,500 must necessarily be construed as if it was for $15,000, and excessive damages. That notwithstanding such subdivision 4, of section 6 of said Workmen's Compensation Act, $7,500 is excessive damages." Hence nothing is presented under the heading which requires consideration.

[2] By the other point it is urged that the appellant, the defendant who was neither self-insured nor insured by any carrier of compensation insurance, should have been permitted to prove that "for a period of about seven years" he had had compensation insurance and would have had at the time the respondent, his employee, was injured except for the negligence of his broker. A complete answer to this contention is found in Soria v. Cowell Portland Cement Co., 99 Cal. App. 108, 277 P. 1061, 1062, wherein it is said: "The statute covers all cases in which the employer is not insured. The fact that an employer intended, or endeavored, to take out insurance has no bearing on the fact that he was not insured at the time of the injury."

[3] For the reason that there is no appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial the order is: Judgment affirmed. Appeal from order denying motion for new trial dismissed.

Order setting aside decree must be affirmed, where no proper record was presented.

The only record presented consisted of documents purporting to contain copies of decree with certificate of county clerk annexed, but without other authentication. Action by Fred Sobzhak against Espiridion Rivera. From an order granting defendant's motion to set aside a default decree, plaintiff appeals.

STURTEVANT, J.

This purports to be an appeal from an order made on August 12, 1930, by the trial court granting the motion of the defendant to set aside a decree entered against him on April 24, 1930. It cannot be heard, and the order appealed from must be affirmed because there is no record on which this court can act. 2 Cal. Jur. p. 980.

On November 17, 1930, there was filed in the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court one document which purports to contain copies of a decree for registration and some other papers filed in a proceeding commenced to register a title. Stats. 1915, p. 1932. Annexed to said document is a certificate by the county clerk in which he certifies that said copies are full, true, and correct. That document is not authenticated in any other manner. There is attached to the plaintiff's brief a supplement. The supplement is wholly printed, and purports to be a bill of exceptions. It does not elsewhere appear in the record. At most it merely purports to be a printed copy not otherwise authenticated. Furthermore, it does not show what papers, if any, were used on the hearing in the trial court. On a record so made up this court is not authorized to make any order excepting to dismiss or affirm.

If we were at liberty to make a complete examination of the papers, the same result would follow. The affidavit of merits was sufficient. Furthermore, the affidavit made by the defendant showed that he did not appear in the action because the plaintiff stated to him that no judgment would be taken against him. That statement was not denied in the affidavit of the plaintiff. The trial court, therefore, did not err in setting aside the default.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Nov. 25, 1932.

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇐350.

Evidence, in action for breach of contract to sell realty for consideration stated in option given plaintiffs' assignor, held sufficient to fix value thereof at sum exceeding such consideration by amount of damages awarded.

A real estate expert testified that property, for refusal to sell which for $90,000, as provided by option, plaintiffs were awarded $150,000 damages, was worth $300,000, considering lease on property at small rental.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⇐350.

Evidence held to justify judgment for plaintiffs in action for breach of contract to sell realty for consideration stated in option given plaintiffs' assignor.

There was evidence that property was worth amount exceeding agreed consideration by more than amount of damages awarded plaintiffs and that they were actual record owners of option when action was instituted and trial had.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⇐350.

Evidence that defendants in action for breach of contract to sell realty refused to convey for agreed sum wholly because of great increase in value of property held to justify findings of bad faith (Civ. Code, § 3306).

4. Vendor and purchaser ⇐350.

Evidence in action for breach of contract to sell realty held sufficient to show tender of agreed price by plaintiffs.

There was evidence that plaintiffs attempted to pay only portion of agreed consideration and told defendants that they wanted to subdivide property and give mortgages in payment of option to purchase, but that defendant husband told plaintiff that option was no good because his wife did not sign it, which was untrue; that written offer, complying with statutory requirements, was made and refused, though amount of consideration was not actually presented in cash; and that defendants' attorney notified plaintiffs that defendants declined to accept offer because no consideration was paid them for option.

YORK, J.

This is an appeal by defendants Aurelio Garau and Sarah Garau from a judgment rendered in favor of plaintiffs for the benefit of Sara F. Hersh, plaintiff, as her sole and separate property and estate, against said defendants Garau, jointly and severally, for the sum of $150,000. The cause of action arose out of a written option given by the Garaus to Morris Rauch, plaintiffs' assignor to purchase certain real property for a consideration of $90,000. The sum of $150,000 was the whole amount asked for in the complaint, and was the amount fixed by the court as the value of the property over and above the consideration named.

Appellants state their grounds of appeal as follows:

1. Excessive damages appearing to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice.

2. Insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision of the court.

3. That the decision of the court is against the law.

4. Errors of law occurring at the trial and excepted to by the appellants.

[1] As to the first point, there is some conflict in the evidence, but there was sufficient evidence to fix the value of the property at the sum of $150,000, plus the $90,000 consideration, or a total value in excess of $240,000. There was direct evidence of a value of $300,000 given by a real estate expert, who fixed that value, taking into consideration a lease on the property at a small rental.

[2] As to the second point—insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision of the court—this is partly covered by the foregoing statement. In addition thereto, there was evidence that the plaintiff was the actual record owner of the option at the time the action was instituted, and at the time of the trial.

The third point, that the decision of the court is against law, is not specifically discussed in the briefs, or at least the argument in support thereof is not segregated. There was a great deal of evidence about a very complicated transaction between the original owner of the option and the two plaintiffs, but there was sufficient evidence to support each of the findings made by the trial court, and as the findings of the trial court are sufficient to justify the judgment, we cannot see that there was any insufficiency in the evidence to justify the decision of the court.

Appellants in their opening brief raise the following questions:

[3] (1) They maintain that there was insufficient evidence to constitute bad faith under section 3306 of the Civil Code. If the trial court believed the testimony of plaintiff Hersh and disbelieved the testimony of the witness Garau, there was sufficient evidence of bad faith before the court to justify the findings in that particular. There was sufficient evidence to show that the refusal to convey for the sum of $90,000 was wholly because of the fact that the property had increased in value to such an extent that the defendants for that reason alone refuse to proceed with and to complete the deal.

[4] (2) Appellants also contend that there was a failure to show any tender, and in support thereof show evidence as to a "dicker" which was attempted by the plaintiffs to pay only a portion of the consideration of $90,000, and also certain evidence that was introduced as to the plaintiff Samuel Hersh telling the defendant Aurelio Garau that he wanted to subdivide the property and give certain mortgages to Mr. Garau in payment of the option. A direct conflict appears in the evidence on the question of tender. There is evidence, however, that said Garau told said Hersh that the option was no good, and that Mrs. Garau had not signed the option. However, upon evidence, the court found that Mrs. Garau had signed the option. There was a written offer made, which complied with the requirements of the law, and there is evidence that Mr. Garau refused the offer, although there was no actual presentment of the $90,000 in cash. Thereafter, a notification was given to the said plaintiff Samuel Hersh, by Haas & Dunnigan, by Walter F. Haas, a member of said firm, acting with the authority of and as the attorneys of and for said Aurelio Garau and Sarah Garau, that the said Garaus declined to accept said Samuel Hersh's offer, stating that their reason for declining to accept such offer was for the reason that no consideration of any kind was paid to Mr. or Mrs. Garau by either Morris Rauch, Wanda Rauch, his wife, or the said Hersh, for the option mentioned in their letter. Said notification also stated that "there having been no consideration for such option, Mr. and Mrs. Garau do not feel that they are bound by the same, and therefore decline to carry it out."

The trial court made a finding that in the said notice so written by said Haas & Dunnigan as agent of, on the authority of, and as the attorneys of and for the said Aurelio and Sarah Garau, they, the said Haas & Dunnigan, further stated: "You may consider this letter a final refusal on their part to do so."

It was found by the court upon evidence that, at the time Samuel Hersh elected under said option to purchase the said property for said sum of $90,000, the said premises had a market value of and were reasonably worth the sum of $240,000, which fact was at all times known to said Sarah Garau and Aurelio Garau; and the court found that the true reason why the said defendants refused to convey the said property and declined to comply with the terms of said option was because the said property at the time the said option was exercised was worth not less than $150,000 more than the purchase price thereof named in the option, and that the said defendants declined the offer of Samuel Hersh and declined and refused to convey the said property because of and for the reason that the said property, namely, the lands and premises described in said option, Exhibit A annexed to plaintiffs' complaint, at said time was worth not less than $240,000 and not less than $150,000 more than the purchase price named in said option.

The court further found that if said property at the time said option was exercised by Samuel Hersh, and at the time the defendants declined to convey the premises under said option, had been worth no more than the purchase price named in said option, then and in that event the defendants would have acknowledged the option, would have accepted the said election on the part of Samuel Hersh, and would have conveyed the said property to him on receiving the said $90,000, the purchase price thereof.

The court further found that the refusal and declination of defendants to carry out their said option and to make the conveyance and transfer therein called for was in bad faith, and that said refusal was not made in good faith on the part of both or either of said defendants.

The court also found, upon sufficient evidence, that it was true that at all times mentioned after the transfer and assignment to him of the said option, the said Samuel Hersh and the said Sara F. Hersh were, and each of them was, ready, able, and willing to buy said property and pay defendants the purchase price thereof, namely, the purchase price named in said option, Exhibit A annexed to plaintiffs' complaint.

The judgment is affirmed.

Haas & Dunnigan and W. E. McClintock, all of Los Angeles, for respondents Garau.

YORK, J.

This is an appeal by intervener Hirschfeld from that portion of the judgment in the above-entitled matter in favor of plaintiff and against said intervener and the whole thereof, and from the order of court denying a new trial to said intervener.

In our opinion filed this day in Hersh v. Garau (Cal. App.) 14 P.(2d) 534, which is on the appeal of the defendants Garau from the judgment, we have rendered an opinion which covers the principal issues in the case. In addition to the points discussed in said opinion, appellant Hirschfeld attempts to raise several other points which he does not distinctly set out, referring in one part of his brief to certain findings of the trial court which he objects to, without stating exactly what his grounds of objection are, or without setting forth the findings themselves, or their substance, as required by rule VIII of the rules of practice of this court. It is sufficient to say that each of the findings objected to is supported by the evidence.

[1] The principal objection of the intervener Hirschfeld seems to be that the court refused him permission to file an amended complaint. Three years elapsed before intervener filed his complaint in intervention. However, no amended complaint in intervention was ever prepared by the intervener. Some time after the trial of the case was commenced, three statements were made to the court in which he or his attorney asked leave of the court to amend, by adding to the complaint in intervention the statement that another assignment had been made, other than the one pleaded, with the further statement that it had been lost, the contents of which, it was stated, they intended to prove by oral testimony. He also stated in general terms that the document would comply with all of the objections which had been made by his opponents. The court denied his application on the ground that the offer came too late. Intervener counters this with the statement that he did not know before that there would be objection made to the particular form of assignment that he set up in his complaint, and therefore he could not have known what was necessary, at least, until after the court had held that the document so set up in the complaint was a quitclaim deed and did not constitute an assignment of any portion of the option held by the plaintiff Hersh. This motion was directed to the sound discretion of the court, and we can see no abuse of such discretion by the court in denying leave to amend at that time. Such motion came too late.

We find no errors in the rulings of the court that were objected to by the intervener.

[2] The attempted appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial is dismissed, as there is no provision of law for such an appeal.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

SETH et al. v. LEW HING et al. *

Civ. 7942.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 13, 1932.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 13, 1932.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 10, 1932.

1. Appeal and error ⇐1015(2).

Order granting new trial cannot be sustained, where there is no substantial conflict in testimony, and evidence would be insufficient as matter of law to support verdict for movant.

2. Banks and banking ⇐77(6).

Joint liquidators of foreign bank, duly appointed under foreign ordinances, could prosecute action on note, as against contentions that there was no assignment of note to liquidators and no evidence that bank was defunct corporation.

3. Corporations ⇐639.

Method of winding up foreign corporation is governed by law of its residence; California statutes not applying (Civ. Code, §§ 278, 401).

4. Banks and banking ⇐77(6).

Compliance with requirements of foreign ordinances by joint liquidators of foreign bank appointed to sue on note would be presumed from recitals of orders of foreign court (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1913, 1915).

5. Banks and banking ⇐77(6).

Suit on note held properly brought in name of joint liquidators of foreign bank, rather than of bank, where laws and order of foreign court expressly authorized liquidators to sue.

6. Evidence ⇐81.

When, under foreign laws, joint liquidators stand in receiver's shoes for purpose of prosecuting proceedings on creditors' behalf, they presumably have same powers and duties receivers have under California laws, hence are "proper parties" to prosecute such suits (Code Civ. Proc. § 568).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Proper Party," see Words and Phrases.]

7. Bills and notes ⇐92(1).

Note executed by bank directors for loan to bank held supported by consideration (Civ. Code, § 1605).

Directors received consideration, in that they were directors and stockholders in the bank, which received over $96,000 in gold from the promisee and was thus able to keep open its doors, and, moreover, when the note was executed the money in gold was taken out of the account of the promisee and credited to the account of a third person with the bank, and the detriment thus suffered by the promisee was a good and sufficient consideration for the note.

8. Bills and notes ⇐92(1).

That makers personally did not receive proceeds thereof did not render note void for want of consideration (Civ. Code, § 1605).

9. Evidence ⇐423(6).

Where makers of note received consideration, extrinsic evidence that makers were accommodation makers held incompetent, since makers could not be accommodation makers under statute (Civ. Code, § 3110).

10. Evidence ⇐402.

Except to prove want of consideration, fraud, accident, or mistake, which might nullify instrument, parol evidence is inadmissible to vary or contradict bill of exchange (Civ. Code, § 1625; Code Civ. Proc. § 1856).

11. Evidence ⇐441(11).

Instruction precluding recovery on note if executed with express understanding that makers would not be held liable personally held error.

12. Evidence ⇐441(11).

In action on note, evidence of parol agreement that makers should not be held liable personally held inadmissible (Civ. Code, § 3110).

13. Evidence ⇐441(11).

Maker of note cannot rely upon oral promise not to be held liable, absent fraud, mistake, or want of consideration.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Action by J. H. Seth and another, joint liquidators of the Oriental Commercial Bank, Limited, against Lew Hing and others. From an order granting defendants' motion for a new trial, after verdict for plaintiffs, plaintiffs appeal.

Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Lillick, Olson & Graham and Ira S. Lillick, all of San Francisco (Allan E. Charles, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

Russell P. Tyler, of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, P. J.

Plaintiffs sued as joint liquidators of the Oriental Commercial Bank, Limited, of Hongkong, China, upon a joint and several promissory note of defendants in the sum of $99,534.96. The cause was tried with a jury, which returned a verdict for plaintiff upon the note with accrued interest in the sum of approximately $127,000. The trial court granted defendants' motion for a new trial, and from that order the plaintiffs have appealed upon typewritten transcripts.

The facts are not in dispute. The answer admitted the execution and delivery of the note, but alleged that it was executed without consideration and as a mere accommodation to the payees with the oral assurance that they would not be called on to pay it. No payments on principal or interest were made. The eleven defendants who executed the note were at the time directors of the Canton Bank of San Francisco. Four of these constituted the financial committee and as such had active management and control of the Canton Bank. Five of these were at the time also directors of the China Mail Steamship Company, a corporation operating in San Francisco. Defendant Lew Hing was president of the Canton Bank and manager of the China Mail; defendant Fong was the secretary, Mark Thue, the treasurer, and Chin Lain the president, of the China Mail. Some of the defendants owed the Canton Bank large sums of money and some were heavy owners of its capital stock. The steamship company was badly involved—it owed the Canton Bank $72,000 on a promissory note and over $24,000 through an overdraft. Involuntary proceedings in bankruptcy had been commenced, and in September, 1923, the examiner of the state banking department notified the officers of the Canton Bank that unless the indebtedness of the China Mail to the bank was cleared the bank's license would be revoked. The directors of the Canton Bank appealed to the Oriental Bank, which was the owner of 51 per cent. of stock of the Canton Bank and which had a large sum on deposit with the latter. The Oriental Bank authorized the directors of the Canton Bank to take from this deposit a sum sufficient to pay the indebtedness of the steamship company upon the execution and delivery of the promissory note of all the directors. Upon the execution of this note $96,250 in gold was taken from the account of the Oriental Bank and the indebtedness of the steamship company was fully paid. The note in suit was executed on November 1, 1924, as a renewal of this note plus the interest then accrued. The steamship company failed to meet its obligations, and thereafter the Oriental Bank went into the hands of a receiver and the plaintiffs herein were authorized under order of the court in the city of Hongkong to prosecute this action as joint liquidators. The defendants rested their case on the special defense that the note was without consideration and that the payee had promised not to hold them liable.

[1] Preliminarily we should consider the function of this court on an appeal from an order granting a new trial. On this point the authorities are in accord with the statement found in Moss v. Stubbs, 111 Cal. App. 359, 363, 295 P. 572, 573, 296 P. 86, that: "It is equally well settled that, where there is no substantial conflict in the testimony on material issues, and the evidence as a whole would be insufficient as a matter of law to support a verdict in favor of the moving party, an order granting a new trial cannot be sustained. Springer v. Pacific Fruit Exchange, 92 Cal. App. 732, 268 P. 951; Wendling Lbr. Co. v. Glenwood Lbr. Co., 153 Cal. 411, 95 P. 1029; Empire Inv. Co. v. Mort, 169 Cal. 732, 147 P. 960; Harvey v. Machtig, 73 Cal. App. 667, 239 P. 78, 82." Other authorities to the same effect are Hitchcock v. Rooney, 171 Cal. 285, 288, 152 P. 913; Estate of Baird, 198 Cal. 490, 507, 246 P. 324; Vertson v. City of Los Angeles, 116 Cal. App. 114, 2 P.(2d) 411. No one of the cases cited by respondents supports their view. In general they hold that an order granting a new trial must be reversed when the undisputed evidence would demand a directed verdict in favor of the appellant. This is merely a more restrictive manner of stating the same rule which we have quoted from Moss v. Stubbs without, however, limiting the rule to such an extent. Other cases cited merely support the elementary principle that in general the trial court is vested with a wide discretion in ruling on a motion for a new trial and this principle is not controverted here.

[2-6] The respondents insist that these appellants are without legal capacity to sue because (a) there is no evidence of an assignment of the note to these appellants; (b) no evidence that the Oriental Bank is a defunct corporation; (c) that if it were defunct the suit should have been prosecuted by the trustees under the terms of section 401, Civil Code; (d) that there was no evidence that these appellants had complied with the laws and orders of the court of Hongkong; and (e) that the suit should have been brought in the name and on behalf of the corporation. There was received in evidence duly authenticated copies of orders of the Supreme Court of Hongkong and of the Companies Act No. 58 of 1911 from the ordinances of Hongkong. These records disclose that the Oriental Bank was in the hands of a receiver and that the appellants had been duly appointed under the ordinances of Hongkong to act as joint liquidators and to prosecute this particular action. Answering the points in order in view of this evidence we may conclude: (a) and (b) The corporation being in the hands of a receiver, it is "defunct" for all purposes herein and no assignment was necessary for the prosecution of this action (19 Cal. Jur. p. 964). (c) That section 401, Civil Code, has no application to a foreign corporation (section 278, Civ. Code) and the method of winding up the affairs of such a corporation is governed by the law of its residence. (d) That compliance with the requirements of the Hongkong ordinances is to be presumed from the recitals of the orders of the court of that jurisdiction. Sections 1913, 1915, Code Civ. Proc. (e) That the suit was properly brought in the name of the joint liquidators, they having been expressly authorized so to do by the laws and the order of court under which they are operating and that they are thus the real parties in interest. When, under the laws of a foreign jurisdiction, "joint liquidators" stand in the shoes of a receiver for the purpose of prosecuting court proceedings on behalf of the creditors, it will be presumed that such "joint liquidators" have the same powers and duties in that regard as receivers have under the laws of this state (Christ v. Superior Court, 211 Cal. 593, 598, 296 P. 612), and that they are, therefore, the "proper parties" to prosecute such suits. Code Civ. Proc. § 568.

[7] The only real issue in the case is whether there was a legal consideration for the note. Unfortunately respondents have given us no aid in the consideration of this vital issue, being content with the bald statement "that none of the defendants received any benefit from the execution of either of the notes." But, what is a consideration? Our Civil Code, section 1605, declares that: "Any benefit conferred, or agreed to be conferred, upon the promisor, by any other person, to which the promisor is not lawfully entitled, or any prejudice suffered, or agreed to be suffered, by such person, other than such as he is at the time of consent lawfully bound to suffer, as an inducement to the promisor, is a good consideration for a promise." In 6 Ruling Case Law, p. 654, it is said: "A valuable consideration, in the sense of the law, may consist either in some right, interest, profit, or benefit accruing to one party, or some forbearance, detriment, loss, or responsibility given, suffered, or undertaken by the other. Of course, there can be no question as to the sufficiency of the consideration where there is a benefit to the promissor as well as a detriment to the promisee."

As benefits accruing to the promisors in the instant case appellants refer to the admitted facts that respondents were directors and stockholders in the Canton Bank, which received over $96,000 in gold from the promisee and was thus able to keep open its doors. That such benefits made a good consideration for the directors' note is the uniform rule of decision. In Stern v. McDonald, 47 Cal. App. 79, 83, 190 P. 221, 223, it is said: "It has been held by numerous authorities that a note or bond, executed by the directors of a bank to make good an impairment of the bank's assets, so that the bank may continue in business, is based upon a valid consideration." In Bohning v. Caldwell (C. C. A.) 10 F.(2d) 298, a case where the facts were similar to those of the instant case, the court emphasized the fact that the directors' note saved the bank from failure, saved the directors as stockholders from an assessment on their stock, and increased the assets of the bank in which they were interested. Appellants cite to the same effect: Interstate Trust & Banking Co. v. Irwin, 138 La. 325, 70 So. 313; Dykman v. Keeney, 10 App. Div. 610, 42 N. Y. S. 488, 493; Union Bank of Brooklyn v. Sullivan, 214 N. Y. 332, 108 N. E. 558, and Sickles v. Herold, 11 Misc. 583, 32 N. Y. S. 1083, and Id., 15 Misc. 116, 36 N. Y. S. 488. Other authorities to the point are cited in Stern v. McDonald, supra.

Secondly, and with equal force, the appellants find a valid consideration in the undisputed evidence coming from respondents that when the note was executed "the $96,250, in gold was taken out of the account" of the Oriental Bank and credited to the account of the steamship company with the Canton Bank. That the detriment thus suffered by the Oriental Bank was a good and sufficient consideration for the note would seem to be too plain for controversy. Respondents do not argue the point and all the authorities we have found support the principle urged by appellants. In Crocker National Bank, etc., v. Say, 209 Cal. 436, 440, 288 P. 69, 71, our Supreme Court dismissed the point raised in a similar case with the statement that the detriment suffered by the plaintiff bank (payee) was an adequate consideration and that the point did not require discussion. Authorities to the same effect are cited in Prudential Trust Co. v. Moore, 245 Mass. 311, 316, 139 N. E. 645, a case involving a somewhat similar state of facts.

[8] Running through the brief on this point the respondents suggest a lack of consideration because they did not personally receive any of the money paid by the Oriental Bank. This circumstance was held insufficient to defeat a consideration under similar facts in Crocker Nat. Bank, etc., v. Say, supra, where the court say: "The fact that the defendants personally did not receive the proceeds of the note would not, of course, render the note void for want of consideration."

[9, 10] As a second defense the respondents argue that they were mere accommodation makers and that they were assured by the payee that they would not be held personally liable for payment. The point is presented as though it involved the single question of the admissibility of the parol testimony to show the collateral agreement. But there is more than that involved. In the first place, respondents were not accommodation makers. Section 3110, Civil Code, defines an "accommodation party" as "one who has signed the instrument as maker, * * * without receiving value therefor, and for the purpose of lending his name to some other person." The respondents do not meet either one of the two conditions imposed. They received value for their note and they did not lend their name to any other party. Extrinsic evidence to show that the maker of a note was an accommodation maker is limited to those cases in which there was no consideration because, otherwise, the maker could not be an accommodation party under the statute. A more exact statement of the rule is found in Cashman v. Harrison, 90 Cal. 297, 304, 27 P. 283, 285, where the court say: "Except for the purpose of proving want of consideration, fraud, accident, or mistake, which might nullify the instrument, parol evidence is inadmissible to vary or contradict a bill of exchange." There is hardly any other subject of the law upon which the authorities are more uniform. See Leonard v. Miner, 120 Cal. 403, 406, 52 P. 655; Lompoc Valley Bank v. Stephenson, 156 Cal. 350, 104 P. 449; Wright v. Shoenhair, 100 Cal. App. 163, 166, 280 P. 174; College Nat. Bank v. Morrison, 100 Cal. App. 403, 407, 280 P. 218. Civ. Code, § 1625; Code Civ. Proc. § 1856.

[11-13] The position of respondents on this point is not clear. They suggest in their brief that the evidence was offered for the sole and only purpose of explaining the circumstances and to establish lack of consideration. But they proposed an instruction which the trial judge gave to the jury advising that if they believed that the note was executed at the request of the Oriental Bank "with the express understanding * * * that said defendants would not be personally called upon to pay said note, your verdict must be in favor of the defendants." The error of the instruction is apparent from the authorities just cited. It is also apparent that throughout the trial of the case respondents urged their defense arising out of the parol agreement that they should not be held liable. That the evidence was not admissible for that purpose is too plain for argument. Respondents cite and rely on First Nat. Bank of Reedley v. Reed, 198 Cal. 252, 244 P. 368; Liberty Bank v. Nonnenmann, 96 Cal. App. 478, 274 P. 568; Liberty Bank v. Ernst, 93 Cal. App. 560, 269 P. 959; Pacific-Southwest Bank v. Valley Finance Corp., 99 Cal. App. 728, 279 P. 222, 280 P. 134; section 3110, Civil Code. No one of the cases is helpful. In the Reed Case the question of the admissibility of the evidence was not considered, but the opinion discloses that it was received for the purpose of showing no consideration for the note. In the Nonnenmann and Ernst Cases the defense was want of consideration and fraud and the admissibility of the parol evidence was not questioned. In Pacific-Southwest Bank v. Valley Finance Corp., supra, the defense was no consideration for which purpose the evidence was admitted. The Code section is merely a definition of an accommodation party and does not relate to the subject of evidence. There is no disagreement in the authorities cited by either party, and we have found no departure from the rule that the maker of a promissory note cannot rely upon an oral promise not to be held in the absence of fraud, mistake, or want of consideration. On the other hand, when there is neither fraud nor mistake and a consideration has passed, the maker is bound by his written promise and may not rely upon parol evidence to prove a collateral agreement relieving him from liability.

Appellants argue that none of the defenses pleaded was available because the respondents failed to prove that the president had authority to make the oral contract relied on and because the respondents are estopped to deny their obligation since the note went into the hands of the receiver. Many authorities to both points are cited to which may be added the recent decision in Wood v. Kennedy (Cal. App.) 3 P.(2d) 366. No useful purpose would be served by discussing these points, as we have heretofore shown that the record demands a reversal of the order for the reasons given. Respondents' suggestion of misconduct during the course of the trial does not merit consideration.

The judgment is reversed and remanded to the trial court with directions to enter an appropriate judgment upon the verdict.

TURNBULL v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al.

Civ. 8693.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 21, 1932.

1. Dismissal and nonsuit ⇐60(1).

Court was required to dismiss action which had been at issue over 10 years, notwithstanding party moving for dismissal was in contempt (Code Civ. Proc. § 583).

2. Dismissal and nonsuit ⇐45.

Statutory requirement that action be dismissed unless brought to trial within 5 years after filing of answer held mandatory (Code Civ. Proc. § 583).

Code Civ. Proc. § 583 provides that any action shall be dismissed by the court on motion of defendant, after due notice to plaintiff, or by the court on its own motion, unless brought to trial within 5 years after defendant has filed his answer, except where the parties have stipulated in writing that the time may be extended.

3. Mandamus ⇐43.

Mandamus held proper remedy to compel dismissal of action not brought to trial within 5 years after filing of answer (Code Civ. Proc. § 583).

4. Dismissal and nonsuit ⇐60(1).

Trial court must dismiss action not brought to trial within 5 years after filing of answer, regardless of how facts are brought to court's attention (Code Civ. Proc. § 583).

Petition for writ of mandate by Albert C. Turnbull against the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of San Francisco, and Honorable T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge of Department 8 thereof.

Writ granted.

Carrol A. Murphy, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SPENCE, J.

Petitioner seeks a writ of mandate to compel respondents to dismiss a certain action entitled, Harriet A. Turnbull v. Albert C. Turnbull, said action being No. 128,810 in the files of the respondent court. The answer of respondent admits that the time for bringing the action to trial was never extended by stipulation of the parties and alleges that petitioner's motion to dismiss was denied by the respondent court on the ground that petitioner was in contempt at the time the motion was made.

[1-3] The essential facts are undisputed. The action was filed in 1921 and was at issue on both the complaint and cross-complaint as early as April, 1922. In December, 1921, the respondent court had made its order requiring petitioner to pay to the plaintiff in said action the sum of $40 per month as alimony pendente lite. No further proceedings were had, and the motion to dismiss was made after the cause had been at issue for more than ten years. In the trial court plaintiff filed an affidavit in opposition to the motion to dismiss and petitioner filed a counter-affidavit. Plaintiff's affidavit admitted that petitioner had paid a total of $3,800, but alleged that there was a balance unpaid of $1,240. It further alleged facts tending to show that at all times petitioner had the ability to fully comply with said order, but had failed to do so. Petitioner's affidavit showed that a smaller amount remained unpaid than the amount stated by plaintiff and alleged facts tending to show his inability to fully comply with the order. The conflict is immaterial on this proceeding and we may assume that all of the facts alleged by plaintiff were true and that petitioner was in contempt at the time he made his motion to dismiss.

It is petitioner's contention that, even assuming that he was in contempt for failure to fully comply with the order made in 1921, it was the duty of the trial court under section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure to dismiss the action. In our opinion this contention must be sustained. The pertinent portion of that section reads: "Any action heretofore or hereafter commenced shall be dismissed by the court * * * on motion of the defendant, after due notice to plaintiff or by the court upon its own motion, unless such action is brought to trial within five years after the defendant has filed his answer, except where the parties have stipulated in writing that the time may be extended." It has been repeatedly held that these provisions are not discretionary but mandatory and that the only exception is the one stated in the section itself. Sacramento Transportation Company v. California Reclamation Co., 205 Cal. 42, 269 P. 640; Andersen v. Superior Court, 187 Cal. 95, 200 P. 963; City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court, 185 Cal. 405, 197 P. 79; Larkin v. Superior Court, 171 Cal. 719, 154 P. 841, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 670; Cruse v. Superior Court, 102 Cal. App. 290, 283 P. 73. It is also well settled that mandamus is an appropriate remedy where the trial court refuses to dismiss the action. Andersen v. Superior Court, supra, and cases cited therein.

Respondent stands upon the proposition that petitioner, being in contempt, is not entitled to the relief sought. They cite and rely upon certain cases typical of which are Weeks v. Superior Court, 187 Cal. 620, 203 P. 93; Schubert v. Superior Court, 109 Cal. App. 633, 293 P. 814; Funfar v. Superior Court, 107 Cal. App. 488, 290 P. 626. In reply petitioner calls our attention to several cases in which writs have been issued compelling the trial courts to act under certain circumstances even though the petitioners were in contempt. Manriquez v. Superior Court, 199 Cal. 749, 251 P. 1118; Jansen v. Superior Court, 99 Cal. App. 718, 279 P. 227; Archer v. Superior Court, 81 Cal. App. 742, 254 P. 939. It is conceded by petitioner and respondents that none of the authorities are directly in point. In our opinion the duty placed upon the trial court under the mandatory provisions of said section 583 distinguishes the present case from the authorities relied upon by respondents. Under that section it is the duty of the trial court "upon its own motion" to dismiss the action whenever it appears that the delay in bringing the action to trial exceeds the five-year period and that there has been no stipulation extending the time. This was clearly indicated in the recent case of Sacramento Transportation Company v. California Reclamation Company, supra, where the motion was made by the plaintiff rather than the defendant. The court there said at page 44 of 205 Cal., 269 P. 640, 641: "The purpose of section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure is to compel the parties to action in the direction of a speedy trial of causes after issue joined. The trial court in the instant case would have been bound on its own motion to dismiss the action upon having the facts showing an unwarrantable delay brought to its attention, and the fact that it was the plaintiff itself who made the motion is immaterial, since the duty of the court in the premises was mandatory, whether or not a motion to dismiss was made under said section by either of the parties to the action."

[4] We believe that the manner in which the facts are brought to the attention of the trial court is entirely immaterial. Where, as in the present case the facts are admitted and it is made to appear to the trial court that the delay has exceeded the statutory limit without a stipulation extending the time the trial court has no alternative but must dismiss the action.

Let a peremptory writ of mandate issue as prayed.

STURTEVANT, J.

Plaintiff commenced an action to recover damages for injuries sustained in an automobile collision. The owner of the automobile appeared and answered by interposing certain denials and pleading contributory negligence. The insurance carrier of the plaintiff's employer appeared and filed a complaint in intervention. The defendant answered the complaint in intervention. A trial was had before the trial court sitting with a jury. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and from the judgment entered thereon the defendant has appealed.

In the afternoon of the 26th day of August, 1930, the plaintiff was in the act of making a delivery of some automobile parts to a customer of his employer. He had the packages in his hand and was traveling on foot. He passed down the north side of Grove street to the west side of Van Ness avenue. At the crossing made by Grove and Van Ness there were at that time electric signals. A signal stood on each one of the four corners. The plaintiff testified that when he arrived at the corner he waited for the signal to say "go." He looked to his left and saw a car. That car, according to his testimony in different places, was 75, 100, or 175 feet away. He looked to his right and saw no cars approaching; then he entered Grove street to cross to the south side. As he entered the street and until the impact he was looking to his right. When he got to the center of the street he saw the same car right on top of him. It was a car's length away. The plaintiff testified that he did not know what took place after that. The next thing he remembered was being in an ambulance. One of his witnesses, Mr. Paulson, testified that on the day of the accident he was acting as the driver of a truck for a dyeing works. He had driven west on Grove, and as he approached Van Ness the signal registered "stop." He stopped on the north side of Grove east of Van Ness. As he stopped there the defendant approached from behind, passed him on the left, and proceeded across Van Ness. As the defendant did so the traffic on Van Ness, moving toward the south, forced the defendant to swerve to his left and the defendant was driving on the center of Grove. About that time and when on the opposite side of Van Ness he saw the defendant's car hit the plaintiff. The plaintiff was hit by the right-hand end of the defendant's front bumper, was swung around to the right-hand side, and knocked down.

The defendant testified that he had been traveling on the north side of Grove street in a westerly direction; that when he approached Van Ness avenue he looked at the stop sign and it said "go"; that he was ten feet away from the signal; that he did not stop, but proceeded on his way on the right-hand side. There were no cars in front of him. As he entered the intersection he saw a man facing the north standing on the northwest corner. As soon as defendant reached the corner it seemed to him that that man kind of fell over defendant's machine. As the defendant proceeded he was looking ahead to see if anybody was in front of him. He saw the man standing on the corner the whole time he was crossing the intersection. The defendant was driving a Hupmobile of the model of 1929 and it was equipped with four-wheel brakes. As the defendant crossed the intersection no automobiles were moving north or south on Van Ness avenue. The defendant testified that when he reached Van Ness avenue he was traveling ten miles an hour. That up to the time of the accident he did not go faster. At the time of the impact the defendant testified that his right-hand wheels were six feet from the Grove street curb. At the time of the accident another machine approached from the east side of Van Ness avenue and stopped alongside of the defendant. When the plaintiff fell over the defendant's car he hit the car in about the middle. After the impact the defendant stopped his car. He testified that he stopped it within ten feet. As the defendant got out of his car the plaintiff was rising to his feet. The plaintiff was in the pedestrian lane. He was on the right-hand side of it five or six feet from the sidewalk. As the defendant entered the intersection he did not see any cars at his side. Behind him there were some coming. The plaintiff was never in front of defendant's car but approached its side. As plaintiff stepped into the street he was looking toward the city hall (over his left shoulder).

At the time and place of the accident, as we have stated above, on each of the four corners of the intersection there had been installed and were in operation electrically operated traffic signals. Under the terms of the ordinance then in force it was provided: "It shall be unlawful for any operator of an automobile or pedestrian to disobey the instructions of any mechanical or electrical traffic signal, traffic sign or marks upon the street placed in accordance with the provisions of this ordinance. * * * The ringing of a bell in connection with any mechanical or electrical traffic signal shall indicate preparation for a change in the direction of traffic movement.

When such bell is sounded no traffic shall enter the intersection until a green or go signal is shown."

It was stipulated that at the time and place of the accident the electrical devices were so geared as to allow passage of traffic 34 seconds on Van Ness and 18 seconds on Grove and that there were two bells four seconds apart which indicated preparation between "stop" and "go."

[1] As to compliance or want of compliance with the provisions of the ordinance, it is patent that either the defendant or the plaintiff was unlawfully in the intersection at the time of the accident. As to which one was within his rights was a question for the jury. The one who had, under the law, the right of way was not entitled to disregard entirely all other matters of care for himself and for others. Hence the case presented other questions than the sole question as to compliance with the terms of the ordinance.

[2, 3] The defendant attacks many instructions given at the request of the plaintiff. The court instructed the jury: "I instruct you that a person lawfully crossing a public street has the right to assume that all other persons using the street will also use ordinary care and caution. This rule allows pedestrians to assume, until the contrary reasonably appears, that the drivers of motor vehicles will obey and abide by the traffic laws and regulations, and will use due care and vigilance to avoid inflicting injury to them." It is said that the instruction, as given, foreclosed the jury from deciding the question of contributory negligence. By its terms it did not necessarily do so. It refers to pedestrians "lawfully" using the streets. It will be noted that contributory negligence is not mentioned. All of the instructions are to be read together. In other instructions the subject of contributory negligence was fully and correctly covered. But, acting on request of the defendant, the court also gave an instruction: "I instruct you that defendant had a right to assume that plaintiff would look and see vehicles along his line of vision and that he would exert ordinary care to avoid collision with them." In Hoy v. Tornich, 199 Cal. 545, at page 552, 250 P. 565, 568, addressing itself to a similar record, the court said: "The instructions so given at defendant's request must be presumed to have removed any prejudicial effect of the instruction of which complaint is made."

[4] The court gave the jury an instruction: "In determining whether or not the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, I instruct you that if there is no evidence to the contrary the law presumes that the plaintiff did everything that a reasonably prudent person would have done under the circumstances for the protection of his own safety. This is a species of evidence that continues throughout the case unless the contrary appears by other competent evidence." The defendant asserts that witnesses having been called on each side regarding the facts of the case, the presumption had disappeared. Heretofore the question has been much debated; however, at the present time, we think the question has been set at rest. Olsen v. Standard Oil Co., 188 Cal. 20, 25, 204 P. 393; Smellie v. Southern Pacific Co., 212 Cal. 540, 299 P. 529. It was not error to give the instruction.

[5] The court instructed the jury on the doctrine of the last clear chance. It is claimed that said doctrine has no application to the facts in this case. In Hoy v. Tornich, supra, the court was discussing the same contention. It quoted with approval from Wahlgren v. Market Street Railway Co., 132 Cal. 656, 665, 62 P. 308, 64 P. 993: "* * * 'We think counsel had a right to argue to the jury that the employees were interested witnesses, and, though they both testified that they did not see plaintiff before her injury, yet, there being no obstruction to the view, the conductor must have seen her from where he was at the switch before the car passed him, if he was looking for approaching pedestrians, as his testimony would seem to imply.'" So in the instant case. If we assume that the defendant had the right of way, was proceeding to cross Van Ness, was looking straight ahead into the unobstructed street, and the plaintiff, while looking to his right and away from the defendant, walked out to the center of the street, and that the defendant, seeing the plaintiff's movements, nevertheless proceeded and knocked the plaintiff down, then and under those circumstances it may not be said that the doctrine of the last clear chance had no application.

[6] The defendant complains because the trial court instructed the jury on imminent peril. He complains that the instruction was inapplicable to the facts of this case. That contention we think is too broad. If, as he claimed, the plaintiff waited until the signal said "go" and that then he walked forward using due care and that he did not see the defendant's automobile until it was only a car's length away, then the plaintiff was in "imminent peril." Viewing the facts from that angle it was not error to give the instruction.

[7] The defendant complains of the instructions given with respect to the amount of care exacted of an automobile driver as compared with the amount of care exacted of a pedestrian. The defendant argues that they might "* * * well have misled the jury into believing that this was a situation requiring a higher degree of care on the part of the defendant than otherwise. * * * Who can say but that this ambiguous instruction did not mislead the jury when considered with the other prejudicial and erroneous instructions?" We have just shown that the other instructions were neither erroneous nor prejudicial. As the defendant is appealing, the burden rests on him to show that the instructions regarding care misled the jury. The burden does not rest on respondent to show that error was not committed, but the burden rests on the appellant.

[8] It is contended that the court instructed with respect to matters not in issue. In that connection the defendant quotes the record that no witness testified that the defendant was proceeding more than ten miles per hour. He then calls our attention to an instruction in which the trial court stated the speed limit to be fifteen miles per hour. Conceding that the instruction is subject to the criticism, it was not prejudicial.

An instruction regarding the violation of the express provisions of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517, as amended) referred to an injury to a "third person." The defendant asserts that he does not know what it means. A most casual reading shows that it was an awkward expression referring to the plaintiff.

Several other instructions are objected to as having been "garbled" from the discussion in certain decisions. The criticism is justified. Furthermore, it may be conceded that the practice is not to be commended. However, no single one of the instructions so attacked contains prejudicial error.

[9] The defendant tendered an instruction as to a "mere accident." The trial court refused to give it. It was a correct statement of the law, but the trial court was right in holding that the instant case presented no such question.

[10] The defendant contends that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. If we accept the defendant's version of the facts that contention is sound. If we accept the plaintiff's version of the facts the contention is not sound. In this connection the defendant claims that it was the duty of the plaintiff as he crossed the street to look both ways before entering the street and thereafter to continually look in the direction from which the traffic would be approaching. When weighed under a statutory rule such as the ordinance above quoted, the defendant cites us to no authority declaring his contention to be correct under all circumstances. As negligence has reference to time, place, and circumstance, we are not prepared to hold the defendant's contention a sound rule of law.

The defendant asserts that the trial court erred in refusing to grant a new trial. He bases the point on the alleged errors hereinabove discussed. In view of what we have already said, the point may not be sustained.

Finally it is asserted that the verdict is excessive. The amount of the verdict rested on the testimony of medical experts. The plaintiff called as his expert Dr. Catton. The substance of his testimony was that in the accident the plaintiff suffered a concussion of the brain and that the effects of the concussion have not disappeared, but some have continued, and in his judgment that the injury is permanent. In his opinion a condition exists that is epileptic in its nature. If the jury accepted the opinion of Dr. Catton it was within its rights in bringing in the verdict that it returned into court.

The judgment is affirmed.

2. Partnership ⇐336(3).

Evidence in partnership accounting suit established that after partnership dissolution, but before settlement, individual partner accepted bonds at face value in consideration of contract, so as to make such bonds chargeable against him at face value in accounting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hugh J. Crawford, Judge.

Suit by John Hayes, Jr., against Henry E. Knerr. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

Appeal from order denying motion for new trial dismissed, judgment affirmed.

Henry M. Lee, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

A. W. Sorenson and Margaret E. Faires, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MARKS, J.

[1] Appellant and respondent were copartners engaged in construction work. A written partnership agreement was executed in April, 1926, which, among other things, provided that all losses and profits resulting from partnership operations were to be shared equally by the partners. During October, 1928, they effected a voluntary dissolution of the partnership and attempted to arrive at an amicable distribution of the partnership assets. They were unsuccessful in reaching such a settlement and this litigation followed, which resulted in an accounting and a judgment in favor of respondent in the sum of $1,795.58. Appellant has appealed from this judgment and the order denying his motion for new trial. Such order is not appealable. Section 963, Code Civ. Proc.

While appellant states various grounds for a reversal of the judgment, we need consider but one of them here, namely, the charging against him on the accounting of $10,000, the par value of participating certificates or bonds of the Arcady Apartment Hotel Company, originally a partnership asset, when these certificates did not have a market value of that amount. In his opening brief appellant thus states the question before this court: "If the bonds were to be charged to defendant at their face, or $10,000.00, then on the accounting plaintiff would be entitled to judgment against defendant for the sum of $1,795.58. But if chargeable at their market value, which the undisputed evidence shows is nothing, then the plaintiff would not be entitled to anything and the defendant would be entitled to judgment against the plaintiff in the sum of $3,204.42."

After the parties had agreed to dissolve the partnership and while they were attempting to strike a balance on the partnership accounts, appellant gave to respondent three writings as follows:

"Los Angeles, Calif. Jan. 14, 1929.

"For and in consideration of the contract entered into by Christ Thorne and John Hayes for brick and hollow tile work in Ford Garage Glendale cal. I agree to accept $10000.00 of Arcady Apartment Hotel Co. Certificates.

"H. E. Knerr."

"Los Angeles, Calif., Jan. 14, 1929.

"Mr. Christ Thorne,

"Please pay to John Hayes out of balance remaining to my credit on Glendale High School brick, tile and stone contract Five Thousand Dollars ($5000.00). Above to be paid when due, according to contract.

"H. E. Knerr."

"Los Angeles, Calif. Jan. 14, 1929.

"Our books at this date, apper to show a balance due John Hayes of about Two Thousand Dollars (2000.00)

"Proper balance to be determined by an audit of our books.

"H. E. Knerr.
"John Hayes."

[2] From the evidence submitted by respondent it appears that on January 14, 1929, he had a contract with one Christ Thorne to do the necessary brick and tile work on a garage building in the city of Glendale; that appellant desired to acquire this contract and do the work called for under it; that appellant offered to pay respondent $5,000 and further to accept the participating certificates, or bonds, of the Arcady Apartment Hotel Company at their par or face value; that respondent assigned the Christ Thorne contract to appellant, who performed the work under it, and appellant received the participating certificates or bonds and gave respondent the three writings heretofore quoted; and that respondent received the $5,000 called for in the order on Christ Thorne.

[3] The trial court found that appellant agreed to and did take and accept these participating certificates or bonds at their face or par value of $10,000 and in the accounting charged them to him at such an amount. This finding is amply supported by the evidence. Appellant's testimony contradicted this evidence, but this merely created a conflict in the evidence which the court resolved against him. We cannot reverse a judgment because of a conflict in the evidence. 24 Cal. Jur. 1013 and cases cited.

The attempted appeal from the order denying the motion for new trial is dismissed.

The judgment is affirmed.

LANDIS, Justice pro tem.

In payment of a part of the purchase price of certain real property sold by plaintiffs to defendants on December 18, 1922, defendants executed and delivered to plaintiffs their promissory note in writing in the sum of $18,000 and interest, payable five years after date, and to secure the payment of said note executed on the same date a trust deed covering the said real property. Defendants having failed to pay the note when due, the property was sold under and pursuant to the terms of said trust deed for the sum of $10,000. By this action plaintiffs seek to recover the sum of $8,751.84 representing the deficiency or the balance due on said promissory note after the sale of the property under the trust deed.

Under the claim and contention that defendants were the owners thereof, in August, 1929, plaintiffs caused to be attached certain property which will be referred to as the "Urstadt property," and thereafter, pursuant to an order of the trial court allowing it, Essie J. Urstadt and Milton A. Urstadt were allowed to intervene by filing a complaint in intervention, under which complaint interveners claimed title to the said Urstadt property and sought a decree against plaintiffs and defendants quieting their title to the said Urstadt property. The trial court gave judgment for plaintiffs and against defendants for the balance due on the promissory note, and gave judgment for interveners and against plaintiffs and defendants quieting their title to the Urstadt property. This appeal is by the plaintiffs from the part of the judgment quieting the title of the interveners to the Urstadt property against the plaintiffs.

[1] The question presented on this appeal is whether or not the evidence was sufficient to support the findings of the trial court upon which was based the decree quieting title of the interveners to the Urstadt property and against the plaintiffs, or to be more specific, that the conveyance to the interveners was not made with fraudulent intent. The trial court having determined from the evidence that the conveyance was not made with fraudulent intent, such determination of the evidence is conclusive on appeal, unless it shall appear as a matter of law that it is insufficient to support the findings.

It may be noted that to the complaint in intervention plaintiffs' answer was limited to a denial of interveners' title and a claim that their attachment was a lien on the Urstadt property. No specific charges of fraud were made, and no attempt was made to set aside the conveyance from the defendants to the interveners. Plaintiffs contend that the said conveyance to interveners was fraudulent, and therefore their attachment in their action against the defendants constituted a lien upon the Urstadt property, and base such contention upon the following facts which they claim are shown by the evidence and which they contend constitute badges of fraud and justify an inference of fraudulent intent, to wit: That the conveyance was to a daughter and son-in-law; that the debt on the note held by plaintiffs was to mature on December 18, 1927; that the purported consideration as to support was vague and inadequate and arising from the alleged loans was uncertain, consisting of amounts uncertain as to total and time; that there was no assumption of the existing incumbrance on the Urstadt property mentioned in the deed of October 11, 1927; that, by the execution of the conveyance attacked, the defendants rendered themselves insolvent; that the property conveyed had a net value of $17,500; and that possession was retained by the defendants.

In support of their contention, plaintiffs appear to rely first and principally upon the added proviso to section 3442 of the Civil Code as amended in 1895 (St. 1895, p. 154), which provides that any transfer or incumbrance of property made or given voluntarily, or without a valuable consideration, by a party while insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency, shall be fraudulent, and void as to existing creditors; and, second, that the case falls within the class of cases in which a conveyance may be set aside at the instance of a creditor, when the conveyance is made with intent to defraud.

The facts necessary for an understanding sufficient for a determination of the issues involved are as follows: About December, 1922, plaintiffs sold to defendants an orchard property for $25,000. Defendants paid $7,000 in cash, and gave a note for $18,000 secured by a trust deed on the property. Defendants paid $500 on the principal in 1924 and $500 on the principal in 1927, and paid the interest up to December 19, 1928. The property was sold under the trust deed in July, 1929, and bid in by plaintiffs for $10,000, leaving a deficiency on the note of $7,000, plus interest and costs. The defendants owned another orchard property entirely distinct from and having nothing to do with the property incumbered by the plaintiffs' trust deed, being the property herein referred to as the Urstadt property. The defendants are elderly people, and the parents of Essie J. Urstadt, who, with her husband, are the interveners in this case. On October 11, 1927, the defendants executed a deed to their said daughter and her husband of the Urstadt property. There was then a mortgage on said property in the sum of $3,500 held by a bank. The defendants were indebted to the interveners for money advanced to them from time to time in small amounts aggregating between $500 and $700. The Urstadt property was conveyed by the defendants to the interveners pursuant to an agreement entered into by and between the defendants and interveners by the terms of which the indebtedness for the moneys advanced to the defendants was canceled, the mortgage indebtedness owing to the bank was assumed by the interveners, and the interveners undertook to care for and support the defendants during the remaining years of their lives. The defendants continued to live upon the conveyed premises, but from the date of the deed forward all taxes and expenses of running and maintaining the property were paid by the interveners, and all contracts and transactions concerning the operation of the property were made independently by the interveners, and all proceeds therefrom taken and retained by them, and the interveners also continued to furnish the means of subsistence for the defendants.

[2] Although generally speaking the rule is that whether or not the conveyance was made with an actual intent to defraud a creditor is never a question of law, but is always one of fact, which is to be determined from all the evidence adduced, and that it is always within the province of the court to decide what circumstances are sufficient evidence of fraud (12 Cal. Jur. p. 1045, § 87, and cases there cited), since the enactment of section 3442 of the Civil Code in 1895 the rule has been laid down that the concurrence of insolvency and a want of consideration are conclusive evidence of an intent to defraud existing creditors. 12 Cal. Jur. p. 1018, § 60, page 1019, and cases there cited, and page 1065.

As defined by the Civil Code, § 3450, a debtor is insolvent, within the meaning of this title, when he is unable to pay his debts from his own means, as they become due. In its popular and general sense and in the sense of the statute, insolvency is used to denominate the insufficiency of the entire property and assets of an individual to pay his debts. Van Riper v. Poppenhausen, 43 N. Y. 68, Paulding v. Chrome Steel Company, 94 N. Y. 334.

[3] For the reason that the debt was not due plaintiffs in October, 1927, when the conveyance attacked was executed, coupled with the facts that, in addition to the property conveyed which had a value of $17,500 and on which there was a mortgage of $3,500, defendants then owned the property purchased from plaintiffs upon which the deed of trust was given and which they had purchased for $25,000, and that, since there is no evidence in the record other than the price for which it was sold showing what the value of the property purchased was at any time, it must be presumed that its value was $25,000, and that the indebtedness owing by defendants at the time of the conveyance was $17,000 with the interest paid up and the principal not due, leaving an equity in the property of $8,000, it cannot be held that defendants were insolvent.

[4] With respect to the contention that the conveyance was fraudulent or without consideration, the undisputed evidence shows that the conveyance was made for the following considerations: (a) The canceling of the indebtedness due the grantees from the grantors, then amounting to between five and seven hundred dollars; (b) the assumption by grantees and the release of grantors of the indebtedness secured by incumbrance on the conveyed property, amounting to $3,500; and (c) the agreement on the part of the grantees to support and maintain the grantors during the balance of their lives, the value of which is indeterminate.

[5] It is only when a transfer is made or given voluntarily, or without a valuable consideration by a party while insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency, that the statute declares such transfer to be fraudulent and void as to existing creditors. Denehy v. Stewart, 41 Cal. App. 88, 181 P. 839; Hopkins v. White, 20 Cal. App. 234, 246, 128 P. 780, 785. A valuable consideration is such as money or the like, and the adequacy or inadequacy of the amount, or its disproportion to the actual value of the property, does not affect the question of the kind of consideration. Lindley v. Blumberg, 7 Cal. App. 140, 93 P. 894. The adequacy of the consideration is an element of the good faith of the transaction, and has no bearing upon whether the consideration is a valuable or good one. Frey v. Clifford, 44 Cal. 335, 342; Clark v. Troy, 20 Cal. 219, 220, 224.

There appears to be no doubt that the trial court was warranted in holding that the conveyance was made without any fraudulent intent, and, applying the rule that the findings of the trial court on a matter of fact will never be disturbed on appeal, except in those cases where the utter lack of any evidence to support such findings renders it a matter of law (Reay v. Butler, 95 Cal. 206, 214, 30 P. 208), it follows that the judgment of the trial court should not be disturbed, and, for the reasons herein discussed, it is affirmed.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

This is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit, and an order denying a motion for a new trial.

The Central Manufacturing District, as owner, was erecting the Produce Terminal Building in Vernon, Cal., during December, 1927, and immediately prior thereto. The general contractor was the Wm. P. Neil Company, and the respondent the Barber Door Company was a subcontractor having agreed to install the doors, together with the hardware and mechanism for operating the same. The appellant was a lessee of room or stall No. 4216 in the building, the term of the lease beginning January 1, 1928, but the agreement therefor containing the following provisions: "1. In the event that the premises above described are available for occupancy by Purchaser prior to the first day of January, 1928, the Purchaser" (lessee) "may take possession of said premises at such time and without the payment of any additional money other than that specified in this agreement. 2. The purchaser agrees that its entry into occupancy of said premises shall constitute an acknowledgment that the same are suitable for its business and that the building and improvements thereon have been received by the Purchaser in good and firstclass condition. * * *"

[1, 2] Plaintiff's complaint set forth that defendant took possession of the premises described in the lease about December 3, 1927, for the purpose of installing the doors and in particular a north exterior door in room No. 4216, which was to be approximately seventeen feet long and fourteen feet high, thus giving a clearance of above twelve feet; that on December 6 the door was substantially but not entirely completed; that two days thereafter, i. e., on December 8th, and when the door "had been practically but not entirely, completed, * * * and while the same was still under the control and supervision of defendants, and before the said improvement had been accepted and approved by the general contractor, or the owner, * * * plaintiff in the course of his business, raised said door and proceeded to walk out of said room No. 4216, passing under said door, so suspended; that when plaintiff had proceeded to a point directly beneath said door, due to the negligent manner in which said door, and the mechanism which operated it, had been constructed, installed and maintained, said door crashed down upon plaintiff" injuring him. It is also alleged that the defect was not obvious and was unknown to plaintiff, but on the other hand the defendant knew or by the exercise of reasonable care should have known its defective condition and also knew that plaintiff was operating the door subsequent to December 6th. In addition to the facts already noted, the evidence which was produced by the appellant and which, of course, must be taken at its full probative value, may be summed up as follows: At each end of the door was attached a cable which passed over and around a drum fitted near the end of the shaft and tightened thereon by set-screws on opposite sides of the shaft. Connected to the other end of the cable was the counterbalance weight, the two of them being almost, but not quite, as heavy as the door. At the time of the accident the door was, as alleged in the complaint, partially uncompleted. The only testimony describing their exact condition was elicited from the defendant, who testified that the door was hung on December 6th, the cables attached and the set screw tightened on the shaft, but that it was not completely installed; that the weight box had not been inclosed and the stops on the side of the door had not been completely installed; that the safety catches on the door had not been installed; that the shaft had not been countersunk for the set screws in the pulleys; that the cables carrying the weights and door had not been finally tested and that the safety catches referred to would have held the door even though there had been no counterweight. It was stipulated that at the time the door fell the set screws had slipped on the shaft, although it was expressly stated that the stipulation did not include "stipulating that the slipping of the set screws caused the falling of the door." The testimony on this point is to the effect that an inspection after the accident disclosed that the pulley or drum had turned on the shaft. Also it was testified that on the 6th the men who were working on the doors hung the one in question and worked it up and down; and that it is not customary to countersink the set screws on the day the door is hung; that the purpose of countersinking is to increase the safety factor; but that there is not a grave likelihood that without such countersinking the drum may give way unless there is greater weight on it than the door. An expert witness testified that in the mechanism described the greatest stress or major portion of the strain would be at the points of the screws, but a portion of it carried by the shaft.

From the foregoing recital of the allegations of the complaint and the testimony it is apparent that the appellant's contention that he made out a case in the trial court cannot be upheld. It is obvious that while appellant claims to have been a lessee in possession, hoping thereby to establish a relationship between himself and independent contractor (the respondent), yet in almost the same breath he attempts to reject those provisions of the lease agreement which show that his occupancy prior to January 1, 1928, i. e., on the day in question, was permissive only. His legal predicament is further made manifest by his statement that defendant was in possession for the purpose of installing the doors and that they were not completely finished and yet he (the appellant) was in possession. We fail to find in the situation portrayed any duty incumbent on respondent toward the appellant to have countersunk the set screws on the day the door was hung or prior to the 8th. While the reason for not doing so is not assigned in the testimony, to the effect that the screws are not countersunk on the day the door is set, it may well be, as is suggested in the briefs, that it is necessary to allow the cables to stretch. Such an intimation may possibly be contained in the sworn statement that the cables had not been finally tested. Be that as it may, it is obvious, as before stated, that no duty toward appellant to sink them rested upon the respondent. In Schmidt v. Bauer, 80 Cal. 565, 22 P. 256, 5 L. R. A. 580, the following quotation from Sweeny v. Old Colony & Newport R. Co., 10 Allen (Mass.) 368, 372, 87 Am. Dec. 644: "'In order to maintain an action for an injury to person or property by reason of negligence or want of due care, there must be shown to exist some obligation or duty towards the plaintiff which the defendant has left undischarged or unfulfilled,'" is approved. It is manifest that appellant could not recover under the rule. Furthermore, bearing in mind the quoted provisions of the lease the following language from Aguilar v. Riverdale Co-operative Creamery Ass'n, 104 Cal. App. 263, 285 P. 889, 890, is applicable. First: "* * * If his status was that of a bare licensee he is barred from recovery because, in that capacity, he assumed all the risks attached to the condition of the premises or which were incident to the operation of the business conducted thereon, and appellant owed him no duty except to refrain from doing him willful or wanton injury (Lindholm v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co., 79 Cal. App. 34, 248 P. 1033, and cases cited therein); and no such injury is claimed or established." Second: "Nor does the fact that appellant granted respondent permission to come upon the premises affect respondent's status as a bare licensee, for it is well settled that mere permission of an owner to enter and use a portion of his premises does not of itself amount to an invitation."

[3] In this connection it is argued that the trial court erred in admitting over the objection of plaintiff and during the time he was being cross-examined his lease with the Central Manufacturing District. If it was material to prove that he was a lessee, then certainly it was important to know the conditions under which he was given permission to use the premises particularly those appertaining to his possession prior to the beginning of the term. The prior discussion demonstrates that appellant's contention cannot be sustained.

[4] Complaint is also made that the court erroneously sustained objections to certain questions propounded to a certain expert witness. It is to be noted that the questions were not directed to the point of whether the door was hung in accordance with established principles, but whether it was the most efficient manner and whether the witness could under the circumstances compute the safety factor. Aside from this consideration, however, is this prevailing fact, that the record is silent upon and fails to disclose how appellant was injured by the sustaining of the objections. It is incumbent upon appellant to show error. We cannot indulge the presumption, in the absence of a showing to that effect, that rejected testimony would have been material and relevant. Crusoe v. Clark, 127 Cal. 341, 59 P. 700, Callaway v. Wilson, 141 Cal. 421, 74 P. 1035, and Estate of Angle, 148 Cal. 102, 82 P. 668.

It is not necessary for us to pass upon the assignment of error in the exclusion of certain conversation which appellant sought to elicit between one of the men who hung the door and the appellant because he very properly and frankly admits that the offer falls "short of the requirement of the rule" with respect to foundation.

Other points are suggested, but discussion thereof would serve no useful purpose.

On July 2, 1930, the trial court made findings, and on the same day it caused a judgment to be entered against certain defendants in the above-entitled action. On August 20, 1930, the defendant Hogan made a motion to set aside his default and vacate the decree. His motion was denied on August 28, 1930, and thereafter on August 30, 1930, he appealed from the judgment and the order. On September 19, 1930, the defendant gave notice that he had appealed and asked for a transcript. Code Civ. Proc. § 953a. The transcript was certified by the county clerk on October 10, 1930, but, when presented to the trial judge, acting on the objection of the plaintiffs, he refused to certify the transcript. The refusal was under the facts clearly correct. Title Ins., etc., Co. v. California, etc., Co., 168 Cal. 397, 143 P. 723.

In his brief the defendant bases all of his points on his objections to the ruling made refusing to set aside his default. But, by reason of the plaintiffs' objections to the record which is before us, those points may not be considered by this court.

However, if we were at liberty to act on the record before us, it would be necessary to enter the same judgment. In making his motion to vacate his default the defendant attempted to proceed under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. To excuse his neglect to appear and file his answer in due time, he alleged that he was incarcerated in the county jail when the summons was served on him. The mere fact that he was so incarcerated without the statement of additional facts showing that he was deprived of means to communicate with his attorney did not constitute an excuse for the defendant's failure to appear and plead after being served with the summons.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

SPENCE, J.

Petitioner seeks a writ of prohibition to restrain the respondent court from further proceedings under an order to show cause.

Petitioner and Rowena D. Creager were husband and wife up to the time that a decree of divorce was obtained by the wife in the Second judicial district court of the state of Nevada. By the terms of that decree, petitioner was ordered to pay to said Rowena D. Creager the sum of $30 per month as alimony commencing on the 1st day of March, 1930. In 1931 said Rowena D. Creager filed in the respondent court an action seeking to enforce the Nevada decree. The complaint was entitled "Complaint on Foreign Judgment." Plaintiff set forth the decree of the Nevada court, and alleged that no appeal had been taken and that the decree had not been modified. She made further allegations regarding the amount due and unpaid thereunder and the fact that both plaintiff and defendant were residents of this state. The prayer of the complaint asked that "said judgment be established as a foreign judgment," and that the unpaid amount be adjudged due and owing from defendant to plaintiff. Petitioner defaulted, and the trial court entered judgment as follows: "That said judgment be and the same is hereby established herein as a foreign judgment. It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that there is now due and owing at this date from defendant to plaintiff as and for alimony under said decree the sum of Five Hundred and Seventy Dollars ($570.00)." Thereafter, upon affidavit of plaintiff, the trial court ordered petitioner to show cause "why he should not be adjudged guilty of contempt of court for failure to pay alimony." Thereupon petitioner commenced this proceeding.

Petitioner contends that "said order is void for the reason that it was and is in excess of and beyond the jurisdiction of said court to make the same." In support of this contention, he proceeds to question the validity of the judgment upon the ground that the Nevada decree upon which it was based was not a final judgment within the protection of the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution (Const. of United States, art. 4, § 1), but a judgment for continuing monthly payments of alimony subject to the further order of the Nevada court. This general question has been before the courts in numerous cases, among which are: Sistare v. Sistare, 218 U. S. 1, 30 S. Ct. 682, 54 L. Ed. 905, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1068, 20 Ann. Cas. 1061; Lynde v. Lynde, 181 U. S. 183, 21 S. Ct. 555, 45 L. Ed. 810; Barber v. Barber, 21 How. 582, 16 L. Ed. 226; Cyr v. Cyr, 206 Cal. 8, 272 P. 751; Bruton v. Tearle, 117 Cal. App. 696, 4 P.(2d) 623; Rinkenberger v. Rinkenberger, 99 Cal. App. 45, 277 P. 1096; Cummings v. Cummings, 97 Cal. App. 144, 275 P. 245; Levine v. Levine, 95 Or. 94, 187 P. 609; McGregor v. McGregor, 52 Colo. 292, 122 P. 390; Holton v Holton, 153 Minn. 346, 190 N. W. 542, 41 A. L. R. 1415; Armstrong v. Armstrong, 117 Ohio St. 558, 160 N. E. 34, 57 A. L. R. 1108; Page v. Page, 189 Mass. 85, 75 N. E. 92, 4 Ann. Cas. 296. We deem it unnecessary, however, to discuss these authorities. Petitioner's contention here is similar to that made by the appellant in Cummings v. Cummings, supra, where the court said on page 152 of 97 Cal. App., 275 P. 245, 248: "It should be borne in mind that appellant's complaint is not of the failure of our courts to recognize a judgment of a sister state as required by the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution. His contention is that the trial court gave too much faith and credit to the New York judgment. Hence there is no federal question involved."

[1-3] We think it entirely clear that the judgment of the respondent court gave full faith and credit to the Nevada judgment in its entirety. By its terms the Nevada judgment was "established herein as a foreign judgment." If such recognition exceeds the requirements of the Federal Constitution, but is authorized by the laws of this state, petitioner may not complain. Section 1913 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "The effect of a judicial record of a sister state is the same in this state as in the state where it was made, except that it can only be enforced here by an action or special proceeding. * * *" This section clearly implies that an action may be maintained in this state to enforce a foreign judgment, and, as the Nevada judgment was not impeached, the trial court properly entered its judgment establishing the Nevada judgment for the purpose of enforcement here.

[4] The question then arises as to the manner of its enforcement. Petitioner contends that it cannot be enforced by contempt proceedings like an original award of alimony by the respondent court, but only by execution in the same manner as an ordinary money judgment. In our opinion, this contention cannot be sustained. Petitioner's contention would have some force if the plaintiff had merely used the Nevada decree as the basis for obtaining an ordinary money judgment for accrued installments of alimony in an action at law against petitioner. In such case the language quoted by petitioner from In re Williams' Estate (Sur.) 118 N. Y. S. 562, would be applicable. The court there said at page 565: "From these authorities it would appear that when the claimant saw fit to transfer her claim, which was in judgment in the state of South Dakota, to a suit at law in the state of New York, and recover judgment thereupon, the judgment obtained was simply a mere money judgment, and said judgment was enforceable, not as a judgment in alimony, as the original judgment in South Dakota could be enforced, but simply as a money judgment, similar to a judgment ex contractu." But here the plaintiff did not seek a mere money judgment, but sought and obtained a judgment whereby the Nevada decree was "established herein as a foreign judgment." For the purpose of enforcement in this state, we believe that the respondent court properly treated its own judgment, based upon and establishing the Nevada judgment, in the same manner as an original award of alimony by the respondent court. The language used in Cummings v. Cummings, supra, supports this view. The court there said at page 151 of 97 Cal. App., 275 P. 245, 248: "While the question seems to be a new one in this state, yet there is respectable authority in other states to support the doctrine that a judgment for alimony of a sister state may be enforced in the same manner that it could have been enforced if originally obtained here." This question is discussed at some length in Fanchier v. Gammill, 148 Miss. 723, 114 So. 813, 814, and the court came to the conclusion that "a decree for alimony granted by a foreign court may be established and enforced by and through the equity courts of our state," and that such judgment "with its peculiar right of enforcement, as one for alimony, should be established and enforced by the equity courts of our state in the same manner, and to the same extent, as it could have been enforced by our court if originally obtained in our state."

We are therefore of the opinion that the respondent court did not exceed its jurisdiction in ordering petitioner to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt. The alternative writ of prohibition is discharged, and the petition denied.

ABBOTT v. COOPER et al. *

Civ. 939.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 23, 1932.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 20, 1932. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Nov. 23, 1932.

1. Appeal and error ⇐927(3).

On appeal from judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff's evidence must be taken as true and all reasonable inferences must be drawn in plaintiff's favor.

2. False imprisonment ⇐8.

Jailer taking into custody private police officer arrested without warrant by officer of rival private police patrol stating he did not know what charges were, held liable for false imprisonment (Pen. Code, §§ 142, 1597, 1611; Pol. Code, § 4157).

Facts disclosed that both the officer arrested and the arresting officers were members of different private police patrols, and also deputies under different constables of the township; that officer suing for false imprisonment was arrested without warrant and kept in custody for about 8½ hours and then released; that he was refused release on bail or the use of a telephone; and that on jailer's inquiry as to what the charges were, arresting officer replied that he did not know.

3. Sheriffs and constables ⇐157(3).

Sheriff and his surety held not liable for false imprisonment for deputy's act of taking, as jailer, into custody private police officer arrested without warrant or charge against him (Pen. Code, §§ 142, 1597, 1611; Pol. Code, § 4157).

Sheriff and surety were not liable for such action of deputy sheriff acting as jailer because, though jailer had general authority to receive prisoners, such authority was not unlimited and unrestricted, and because jailer taking prisoner arrested without warrant, with information indicating that no crime was charged against such prisoner, not only exceeded his authority, but assumed an authority in a case where the law imposed upon him no duty to act.

4. Sheriffs and constables ⇐100.

Constable held not liable for his deputy's unlawful imprisonment of private police officer made without constable's knowledge, consent, or ratification.

Action by L. A. Abbott against Edward F. Cooper and others. From the judgments, plaintiff appeals.

BARNARD, P. J.

This is an action to recover damages for false imprisonment. At the time of his arrest and imprisonment, plaintiff was engaged in conducting a private police patrol in the city of San Diego, being also a deputy under one of the constables of San Diego township. The defendants Carson and Worsham were engaged in conducting another private police patrol in or about the city of San Diego, both being also deputies under the defendant Webber, another constable of San Diego township. About 2 o'clock on the morning of November 26, 1930, Carson and Worsham arrested the plaintiff and took him to the county jail where, upon their request and order, he was locked up by the defendant Macy, who, as a deputy under the defendant Cooper, the sheriff of San Diego county, was in charge of the jail. The plaintiff was held in jail for about eight and one-half hours and then released. This action was brought against the two persons making the arrest, the constable under whom they were deputies, the deputy sheriff in charge of the jail, the sheriff, and the surety on his bond. The defendants Carson and Worsham made no appearance and judgment against them was entered in the sum of $2,000. At the conclusion of the plaintiff's case judgments of nonsuit were entered in favor of the other four defendants, and from these judgments of nonsuit this appeal is taken.

It appears from the evidence that on the night in question, the appellant and one of his assistants, named Sizer, were driving along in an automobile upon a mission connected with their business of a private police patrol. While so proceeding they came upon Carson and Worsham, whose car had in some manner become caught in a bridge, and stopped and assisted them in extricating their car. Carson and Worsham recognized the appellant and called him by name. Shortly after the appellant drove on, Carson and Worsham followed him and ordered him to pull into the curb. When he complied Worsham asked him what he was looking for, and upon receiving the reply, "I don't know as that is any of your business," Carson ordered the appellant from his car and told him he was under arrest. The appellant's gun was taken from him and he, with Sizer, was taken to the county jail. The respondent Macy received the appellant and took from him various articles, including his deputy constable badge and his private police badge. Upon the appellant's asking Macy the reason for his detention, Macy turned to Carson and asked him what the charges were, to which Carson replied: "Damned if I know. Damned if I believe he is allowed out in the county. We will leave him in here over night and let Sheriff Cooper decide it in the morning." Whereupon Macy asked Carson if Sizer was to be arrested also, to which Carson replied: "No, he is our friend; we don't want him, we want Abbott." Thereupon Sizer was released. The appellant also testified that he was refused permission to use the telephone; that he asked to be released on bail, saying: "I am a bonded man. If I have to have bail, can't I get out on bail." That Macy replied: "No, it's up to Carson, if he wants to let you out, it's all right." And that Macy then asked Carson if he would let the appellant out and that Carson replied: "No, I am carrying out my orders, lock him up." The appellant further testified that at the time of his arrest and imprisonment he was dressed in a blue uniform; that he had on his badge; that he was operating under a license from the state prison board; and that about 8:30 o'clock the next morning he was handed his articles and told to, "Get out of here."

[1] This, being the only evidence, must be taken as true in view of the motion for nonsuit, and all reasonable inferences therefrom must be drawn in favor of the appellant. It seems a fair and reasonable inference from this evidence that the arrest in question was made because of some rivalry between the respective private patrols and not because of any offense committed by the appellant. So far as appears from the evidence, there was no justification for the arrest, it was made without authority of law, and for the purposes of this appeal it must be held to have been unauthorized and unlawful. The only questions raised relate to the responsibility of parties other than those making the arrest.

[2] The first question presented is as to the liability of respondent Macy. The appellant argues that it appears from the evidence that Macy knew or should have known that the arrest was illegal and that he had no right to imprison the appellant. On behalf of this respondent it is urged that, under sections 142, 1597, and 1611 of the Penal Code and section 4157 of the Political Code, it was his duty to receive and hold the appellant when presented at the jail as a prisoner by the defendant Carson, a peace officer. It is argued that such a jailer is merely a ministerial officer and that it is no part of his duty to make any investigation or any decision as to whether or not any person brought to the jail shall be kept there. While it should not be held to be the duty of a jailer to make any extensive investigation before receiving a prisoner brought to him for custody, we think this contention of this respondent cannot be fully sustained. This arrest was made without a warrant, and whether Carson and Worsham be considered as having made the arrest as deputies of a constable or as private persons, they were only authorized to make an arrest for an offense committed or attempted in their presence or under certain circumstances upon the belief that the person arrested had committed a felony. Pen. Code, §§ 836 and 837. In Boaz v. Tate, 43 Ind. 60, the court said: "We have said that the marshal had authority to arrest when the offence was committed in his view and, under certain circumstances, commit to jail; that such authority necessarily conferred upon the jailer the right to receive and imprison the prisoner. If he had the right to receive the prisoner when brought to him by the marshal with the declaration that he had been arrested for an offence committed on view, that declaration would stand in the place of a mittimus in other cases, and it would be the duty of the jailer to receive him as a prisoner, without regard to the question of his guilt or innocence."

Conceding that a similar rule applies in this state and that a jailer is justified in receiving a prisoner without a warrant upon the declaration of the officer or person bringing him in that the arrest has been made for an offense on view or in the belief that a felony has been committed, the circumstances here fall far short of showing any such justification. Even if it could be held that a jailer is authorized to receive and hold a prisoner in the absence of any statement or declaration on the part of the officer or person bringing him in, we think it must be held that such a jailer has no authority to receive and place in custody a person brought in by another when the information furnished to the jailer affirmatively shows that the arrest has been made without authority, and that the person making the arrest neither knows what the charge is nor makes the claim that any offense has been committed either in his presence or otherwise. We think the information here conveyed to the respondent Macy was such that he knew or should have known that the arrest was illegal, and was such as to inform him that he had no right to imprison the appellant. It follows that, so far as shown by this evidence, the respondent Macy was himself liable for his wrongful act, whether done officially or otherwise (Gomez v. Scanlan, 155 Cal. 528, 102 P. 12), and that, as to him, the judgment of nonsuit was improperly entered.

[3] The next question is as to the liability of the respondent sheriff and his surety for the unauthorized act of the respondent Macy. In Jones v. Van Bever, 164 Ky. 80, 174 S. W. 795, 801, L. R. A. 1915E, 172, the court said: "From this uniform line of authority we find the rule to be thoroughly established that, in order to render the sheriff liable for the act of his deputy, the act of the deputy must be done by virtue of his office as deputy; and, in order for the deputy's act to have that character, it must be done in an attempt to serve or execute a writ or process, and as a means to that end, or in acting under a statute giving him the right to arrest without a warrant; otherwise he is acting as an individual. In other words, when a deputy sheriff, although he assumes to act as such, commits a wrong under circumstances where the law does not impose a duty on him to act at all, the wrong is not a violation of any official duty, and is not embraced within the sponsorship of his principal."

In Hawkins v. Thomas, 3 Ind. App. 399, 29 N. E. 157, 159, the court said: "It follows as a logical sequence that in an action upon an official bond it is necessary to allege and prove the existence of conditions and circumstances requiring some official action upon the part of the officer, and that the injury sought to be redressed was inflicted while the officer was so attempting to act or on account of his failure to act at all. In the complaint in the case before us, the only allegation upon this subject is the general averment that the marshal and his alleged deputy were acting illegally, but under color of office. It does not appear that any writ or process of any kind had issued to either of them, or that any offense had been committed against the federal laws, or that they even claimed such to be the case. The averment that the officer was acting under color of authority is a mere conclusion, and is not sufficient to show that the injury resulted from an official act."

In Ivy v. Osborne, 152 Tenn. 470, 279 S. W. 384, the court said: "It appears from the declaration that the deputy sheriff arrested plaintiff without authority. He had no warrant, and no offense was committed in his presence. The liability of the sheriff, for the acts of the deputy, is not controlled by any statute of this state, but is grounded upon the common law. For failure of the deputy to properly perform an official act, deemed the act of the principal, the sheriff and his bondsmen would be directly liable to the person aggrieved. * * * But for wrongs done while acting beyond the scope of his authority, the deputy alone is liable as a personal wrongdoer."

The case of Hawkins v. Thomas, supra, is quoted with approval in Felonicher v. Stingley, 142 Cal. 630, 76 P. 504, 505, in which case the court also said:

"The weight of authority and the rule in this state is that the officer and his sureties are responsible for every abuse of his official powers. When he has in his hands a valid writ, and, under cover of the writ, claiming to act under it, he goes beyond it, and commits a trespass, his sureties are liable. * * *

"The sureties of a sheriff or constable are not liable for trespasses committed by such sheriff or constable not under color of office, nor in the line of official duty. For malfeasance and extraofficial acts the surety is not responsible. Murfree on Official Bonds, §§ 460, 461, and cases cited; Mechem's Public Office & Officers, § 238. Therefore, in order to charge the sureties in this case, it is necessary to allege and prove that Stingley, while attempting to perform some official act in the general line of his official duties, committed an unlawful trespass upon plaintiff or her property."

In that case the court further quoted from the case of Hawkins v. Thomas, as follows: " 'But the officer was acting under a valid writ, and by virtue of the mandate of the law, and the trespass consisted in an abuse of the power vested in him, and not in the performance of an act which the law did not enjoin upon him at all. It was an instance of exceeded, rather than usurped, power. Such acts are within the express line of the surety's undertaking—that his principal shall faithfully discharge the duties of his office according to law. But when an officer, though he assumes to act as such, commits a wrong under circumstances where the law does not impose upon him any duty to act at all, the wrong is not a violation of any official duty, and consequently is not embraced within the sponsorship of the surety.' "

These authorities seem to lay down the rule that where a deputy, in performing some duty imposed upon him by law, exceeds his authority, the act performed is in the line of his duty and his principal will be liable for any wrongful performance thereof; but where such a deputy, instead of merely exceeding his authority in fulfilling a duty imposed upon him by his position, proceeds to usurp a power and authority not given him by law, and to act in a matter in which the law imposes upon him no duty to act, such action is not in the line of his official duty and therefore his principal is not responsible therefor. While it may be said that the respondent Macy had general authority to receive prisoners and that this was in the line of his duty, we think that such authority is not unlimited and not unrestricted; that in this instance he not only exceeded his authority, but assumed an authority in a case where the law imposed upon him no duty to act; and that for this usurpation of power his principal is not liable. There is nothing in the nature of the office of a deputy sheriff acting as a jailer which gives him authority to imprison a person without a warrant, when the only information given him clearly indicates that no crime is charged against the person and that the person making the arrest has acted without authority. It neither appears here that respondent Macy was acting under instructions from the sheriff, pursuant to any writ, or in the scope of his official duty as authorized by law. Under such circumstances, we think neither the sheriff nor his surety is liable.

[4] The only remaining question is as to the liability of the respondent Webber. No attempt was made to prove knowledge, acquiescence, consent, or ratification upon his part, as to any of the acts of his deputies on this occasion, and it was not even shown that the things done by them were done as such deputies. In any event, under the authorities above cited, Carson and Worsham were merely personal wrongdoers, and this respondent could not be held liable for this unwarranted arrest made without even a semblance of legal authority.

The judgment of nonsuit in favor of Edwin S. Macy is reversed. The judgment of nonsuit in favor of each of the other respondents is affirmed.

McBRIDE v. DORR et al. (two cases).

Civ. 7189.

CRAIG, Acting P. J.

Two actions upon promissory notes were consolidated for the purposes of trial in the Superior Court, upon which a judgment adversely to the plaintiff's demands was rendered, and he appealed.

[1] Many asserted grounds assigned for reversal are resolved by the appellant into three concise comprehensive inquiries which are presented for determination. Briefly stated, the questions to be decided are, as to whether or not said notes were completely executed, were based upon an illegal consideration, and whether or not any consideration was given therefor. Since each of these questions arises from specifications of insufficiency of the evidence, it becomes apparent that, if there was sufficient substantial evidence before the trial court to support the findings of fact and judgment, upon any hypothesis, as to the third specification, the judgment cannot be set aside. Chaplin v. Amador, 93 Cal. App. 358, 269 P. 544. It appeared that the plaintiff and others as promoters and directors of a corporation each furnished funds with which the same was established and qualified to issue shares of its capital stock in this state, that at the instance of the board of directors statements of their respective investments were directed to be prepared, and McBride was given promissory notes, renewals of which were the subject of the instant controversy, as evidences of his advancements pending the issuance of certificates of stock therefor. It was contended at the trial and is here urged that said notes represented an indebtedness of the appellant's copromoters, yet a witness whose evidence is relied upon by all of the parties, and who was familiar with the transaction, testified that the board decided to determine, when in funds, from the sale of stock which, if any, items should be adopted, ratified, and paid as the indebtedness of the corporation; and to quote: "The Court: Paid out of this money that came in? A. No, paid by the issue of capital stock. That is my recollection, that it was to be paid by the issue of capital stock to those persons who had incurred this expense." "In helping organize the company, he [McBride] was to have issued to him the number of shares of stock stated in the application. In addition to that, in addition to those shares he was to have issued to him stock up to the amount of cash that he had advanced." It is conceded in effect that, upon the advice of their counsel, the board ultimately decided not to issue any stock, although authorized so to do by a permit from the division of corporations. From this and other evidence of like import the trial court may well have concluded that the instruments in question were not intended as contract or evidences of financial obligations, but that they were executed pursuant to an oral understanding of a contemplated stock issue, as evidences of an investment in a common enterprise. Smith Co. v. Muller, 201 Cal. 219, 256 P. 411; Gleeson v. Dunn, 113 Cal. App. 347, 298 P. 119.

[2] Since it inevitably follows that there was no consideration for the instruments upon which the action was founded, the question as to their due execution becomes moot.

The judgment is affirmed.

MERCANTILE FINANCE CORPORATION v. HUCKE et al.

Civ. 8651.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 23, 1932.

Appeal and error ⇐973.

Appellate court cannot disturb order on conflicting evidence dismissing action for failure to bring it to trial, absent clear abuse of discretion (Code Civ. Proc. § 583).

Affirmed.

Samuel S. Gelberg, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John C. Kleber, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

NOURSE, P. J.

This is an appeal from an order dismissing the action made under section 583, Code of Civil Procedure, for want of prosecution within two years after answer filed.

The complaint (to foreclose a mortgage on real property) was filed June 10, 1927, against thirty-five defendants. The last answer was filed October 7, 1927. The default of seven defendants was entered and the plaintiff voluntarily dismissed as to all except Sorrille. The cause was set for trial on April 26, 1929, but went off the calendar. On October 31, 1929, plaintiff gave notice of motion to set the cause for trial and August 12, 1930, was set for that purpose. At that time the defendant Sorrille moved to dismiss the action upon the ground that plaintiff had failed to bring it to trial within two years after the answer was filed. This motion was granted.

Appellant's attack upon the order is based on the ground that the trial court abused its discretion in granting the motion. Discretion in this respect is exercised on determining the issue of fact whether the plaintiff's failure to bring the cause to trial within the two-year period is excused. Where the evidence on this issue is conflicting, the appellate courts cannot interfere with the order unless the whole record shows a clear abuse of discretion. Here the appellant cites some circumstances tending to excuse its neglect over a part of the period only. The evidence as a whole, however, discloses that for more than two years after respondents' answer was filed appellant's neglect was inexcusable.

The order is affirmed.

Counsel for appellant in their petition for rehearing do not seem to grasp the underlying reason for our affirmance of the judgment of the lower court. 13 P.(2d) 1049.

Bryan Houston Bowman filed her cross-complaint in the court below seeking to vacate an order of the superior court which set aside the final decree of divorce terminating the marriage of Frances C. Bowman and Horace D. Bowman. In filing this cross-complaint she took the position of a plaintiff (cross-complainant) asking relief in a court of equity. The trial court, upon ample evidence, found that she did not come into court with clean hands. Under the well-established doctrine of equity that a person must come into a court of equity with clean hands, the trial court denied her the relief she sought in her cross-complaint, and in so far as she sought redress under its allegations, left her where it found her. For a like reason, among others, we also left her in the same position she occupied at the time she filed her cross-complaint, in so far as the relief she sought by this pleading is concerned.

Petition for rehearing denied.

BUENA VISTA WATER STORAGE DIST. v. SHIELDS, County Treasurer.

Civ. 1027.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 23, 1932.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 20, 1932. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 21, 1932.

1. Statutes ⇐194.

Special statutory provision controls general one; special provision being treated as exception to general provision.

2. Waters and water courses ⇐183½.

County treasurer may receive water storage district's assessments without county auditor's certificate, and pay district warrants without auditor's warrant (St. 1911, p. 1095; Pol. Code, §§ 4093, 4101, 4102; St. 1921, p. 1727, as amended).

This is so, since provisions of St. 1921, p. 1727, as amended, that landowners in the district must pay their assessments to county treasurer, that county treasurer shall forthwith pay this money into county treasury, and that county treasurer must pay out this money upon a warrant issued by the officers of the district, are controlling over provisions of Pol. Code, §§ 4093, 4101, 4102, that the treasurer must receive no money into the treasury unless accompanied by auditor's certificate, and disburse moneys placed in his custody by official authority only on county warrants issued by auditor.

3. Waters and water courses ⇐183½.

Water Storage District Act provisions for handling district funds held controlling over Political Code provisions requiring auditor's certificate for receipts and auditor's warrant for disbursements (St. 1921, p. 1737 et seq., §§ 20, 56, and §§ 19, 21, 24, 28, as amended; St. 1911, p. 1095; Pol. Code, §§ 4093, 4101, 4102).

4. Waters and water courses ⇐183½.

County treasurer held obligated to pay warrant issued by water storage district, where county treasury contained sufficient funds, notwithstanding treasurer allegedly kept district fund segregated and it was stolen (St. 1911, p. 1095; Pol. Code, §§ 4093, 4101, 4102; St. 1921, p. 1727, as amended).

This was so, since St. 1921, p. 1727, as amended, clearly provides that, while a record of the water district fund shall be kept and the district credited in this fund with moneys collected for it, the actual cash shall be placed in the county treasury, which implies the mingling with other moneys therein, and negatives the idea that money so placed shall retain its identity.

Petition by the Buena Vista Water Storage District for a writ of mandate against J. P. Shields, County Treasurer of Kern County.

Writ granted.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; SEAWELL, J., dissenting, 15 P.(2d) 861.

Ray Bailey, Dist. Atty., and W. A. McGinn, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Bakersfield, for respondent.

Thornton & Watt, John Ralph Wilson, and Myrick & Deering and Scott, all of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

BARNARD, P. J.

This is an application for a writ of mandate, an alternative writ having been issued by the Supreme Court and made returnable before this court. The purpose of the action is to compel the respondent county treasurer to pay from a fund asserted to be in the county treasury to the credit of the petitioner a certain warrant issued by the petitioner district.

The petition alleges that the petitioner is a water storage district organized and existing under and by virtue of the California Water Storage District Act; that the respondent Shields is the county treasurer of Kern county; that in the year 1929 an assessment was levied upon the lands within the district in the sum of $942,731.11, the assessment being unpaid and bonds being issued and sold for that amount in accordance with the provisions of the Water Storage District Act; that, pursuant to the provisions of the act named, the petitioner has from time to time called installments of accrued interest on said assessment and said installments have been paid to respondent and by him forthwith paid into the county treasury of Kern county to the credit of the bond fund of petitioner; that on June 28, 1932, and ever since that date, there has been and now is on deposit in said county treasury to the credit of said bond fund the sum of $31,861.81; that on June 28, 1932, pursuant to a resolution of its board of directors, the petitioner made and issued its warrant, drawn on respondent, in the sum of $28,281.93, for the purpose of paying the bond interest due and payable on July 1, 1932; that said warrant was presented for payment to the respondent on June 30, 1932; and that said respondent refused and still refuses to pay the same.

In his return to the writ, the respondent admits most of the allegations of the petition, but justifies his refusal to pay the warrant upon two grounds. While admitting that the amounts alleged to have been paid to him by the landowners in the district were actually received by him as county treasurer and that they were by him paid into the county treasury, it is alleged that this was done by him without the authority of the auditor of that county, and that he has never received the authorization of said auditor to receive said assessments into the county treasury. As a second defense he alleges that he placed all of the moneys received on said assessments in a separate parcel; that at all times he kept said moneys segregated, separate, and apart in said parcel from other moneys in the county treasury; that about noon on June 25, 1932, the parcel containing said moneys thus received on said assessments was feloniously and forcibly taken from the possession of a deputy county treasurer of said county; and that, by reason of said robbery, there are not sufficient funds in the county treasury of Kern county to the credit of the bond fund of the said water storage district with which to pay the warrant in question.

At the oral argument it was stipulated that there was at the time the warrant was presented sufficient money in the county treasury to pay the same. Testimony was introduced to the effect that the amounts paid in on the assessment in question were kept in the treasurer's office in a certain leather wallet, segregated from other funds, and that on June 25, 1932, at a time when the deputy treasurer had brought out the wallet for the purpose of exchanging certain bills therein for certain other bills, the wallet was taken from the deputy at the point of a gun. In the argument and in the briefs, the first defense interposed by the respondent has been enlarged by adding the contention that the treasurer may not, under the law, pay out any of these funds except upon a warrant drawn by the county auditor.

The first point presented by respondent and by amici curiæ in his behalf, is that such funds as are here involved may only be received by a county treasurer upon the certificate of the county auditor and may only be paid out upon a warrant drawn by the county auditor, for the reason that certain statutes relating to the duties of a county treasurer and a county auditor apply to the handling of the funds of such a district as this and that, as so applied and considered in connection with the provisions of the Water Storage District Act, these statutes are controlling. The statutes especially relied upon are sections 4101, 4102, and 4093 of the Political Code.

Section 4102 provides that the treasurer must receive no money into the treasury or for deposit with him as treasurer unless accompanied by the certificate of the auditor, which is provided for in section 4093.

Section 4093 reads as follows:

"To settle with debtors of county. The auditor must examine and settle the accounts of all persons indebted to the county, or holding moneys payable into the county treasury, and must certify the amount to the treasurer, and upon the presentation and filing of the treasurer's receipt therefor, give to such persons a discharge, and charge the treasurer with the amount received by him, provided, that all persons or officers indebted to the county or holding moneys payable into the county treasury, must make oath, before the auditor, of the total amount of money payable by him to the county or into the county treasury, and on what account. Moneys payable into the county treasury, as the term is used in this section, shall include moneys belonging to estates of deceased persons and required by law to be paid to the county treasurer, taxes on inheritances and transfers, all moneys deposited by order of court, and all other moneys deposited with such treasurer by virtue of any official authority whatever."

Section 4101 provides in part that the treasurer must:

"2. File and keep the certificates of the auditor delivered to him when moneys are paid into the treasury. * * *

"6. Disburse the county moneys and all other money placed in his custody by official authority only on county warrants issued by the county auditor, except on settlement with the state."

The claim of petitioner is based upon the Water Storage District Act (St. 1921, p. 1727), with its subsequent amendments. The provisions of this act are numerous and of considerable length, and it will only be necessary to call attention to certain portions thereof. After various provisions relating to the formation and control of such a district, and the levying of assessments for the purpose of carrying out the purposes thereof, section 19 of the act provides that two copies of the assessment roll, as finally fixed, shall be certified and transmitted to the board of directors of the district, who shall file one copy in their records and transmit one copy to the county treasurer. It is then provided in section 20 that such assessment list must remain open for payment in the office of the county treasurer for a period of thirty days, during which time any person may pay the amount of the charge assessed against his land to the county treasurer. By section 21 it is provided, among other things, that at the end of thirty days the county treasurer must make a return to the board of directors of the district of all assessments paid, and that "thereafter all unpaid assessments and accrued interest shall be collected when and as called, and paid to the treasurer of the county or counties, who shall collect and hold such moneys to the credit of the district." This section has other provisions to the effect that moneys collected by the treasurer shall be deposited to the proper fund of the district and to the credit of the district. Section 24 of the act provides, among other things, for the issuance of bonds. It is conceded that in pursuance of these provisions this particular district has so issued bonds. This section also contains the following provisions:

"All moneys collected by a county treasurer upon any assessment upon which bonds shall have been issued, including all moneys derived from sale of land for delinquent installments, or from redemption thereof, or from sale of lands bought by such treasurer at any such sale as trustee of the bond fund of the district, shall be by such treasurer forthwith paid into the county treasury of the county from which the same arose to the credit of the bond fund of such water storage district, and shall be used exclusively for the payment of principal and interest of said bonds issued on such assessment. * * *

"All moneys collected by any county treasurer upon account of an assessment on which bonds shall not have been issued shall be similarly accounted for to the treasurer of the district, and shall be credited to the general fund of the district. * * *

"The county treasurer of each of the several counties shall report all transactions of delinquencies and sales to the treasurer of the district who shall keep a record thereof in the office of the district."

Section 28 contains the following:

"All claims against the district shall be paid by warrants of said district. To provide a fund for that purpose the board of directors may from time to time draw from the general fund deposited and kept to the credit of the district in the office of the county treasurer of a county having funds belonging to the district in his possession sums aggregating not more than twenty-five thousand dollars, which said sum shall be deposited with the treasurer of the district and paid out by him upon warrants of the district, and he shall report to the board of directors in writing at its regular meeting in each month the amount of money in the district treasury and the amount of receipts and the amount and items of expenditures for the month preceding, which said report shall be verified and filed with the secretary of the board."

Section 56 (St. 1921, p. 1765) provides in part as follows:

"Warrants, drawn by the board of directors shall be signed by its president and secretary and countersigned by its treasurer, and shall be drawn upon the county treasurer of a county having funds belonging to the district in his possession for payment of the principal or interest of bonds, and upon the treasurer of the district or the county treasurer of such a county, as the case may be, for payment of all other claims and demands."

It is argued on behalf of respondent that the provisions of the Political Code, above referred to, were intended by the Legislature to be a part of the Water Storage District Act, and that, until those provisions are complied with, the money raised by and for the purposes of such a district can neither be received into the county treasury nor paid out therefrom. While this act provides that the amount of the district assessments shall be paid to the county treasurer, shall by him be forthwith deposited in the county treasury in a fund to the credit of the district, and shall be paid out upon warrants drawn by the officers of the district and directed to the treasurer, a somewhat different procedure is contended for by respondent. It is argued that, when any landowner pays his assessment to the county treasurer, he must obtain a receipt therefor; that he is then required to present this receipt to the county auditor; that he must then make oath as to the amount of money payable by him and on what account the payment is made; that the auditor must file the taxpayer's receipt and charge the treasurer; that the auditor must give to the landowner a discharge; that the auditor must certify the amount to the treasurer; that the treasurer may not deposit the amount in the county treasury until furnished with such a certificate from the auditor; and that the money may then be paid out by the treasurer only upon the warrant of the auditor. It is argued that this gives the auditor the necessary check upon the transaction, and the inference seems to be that in some unexplained manner the warrant drawn by the district, as provided for in the act, shall be by the payee taken to the county auditor and exchanged for a corresponding warrant drawn by the auditor.

In our opinion, the suggested procedure adds to the Water Storage District Act a number of provisions not placed therein by the Legislature. By the terms of that act itself, no duty is placed upon the county auditor and no provision is made for giving him such information as would naturally be required to enable him to keep a check upon the transactions involved, although under general statutes he is furnished with the information needed in order to keep a check upon those transactions in which his certificate and warrant addressed to the county treasurer are required. On the other hand, the Storage Act makes full provision for a complete check upon all transactions of the county treasurer in connection with district affairs, by the board of directors of the district, including the making of frequent and complete reports, and the provision that each shall keep a copy of the assessment roll. In addition, the act in question contains definite and specific provisions for the paying out of the funds upon warrants drawn by officers of the district and directed to the county treasurer.

It was held that section 4101 of the Political Code, as it formerly read, prohibiting the county treasurer from paying out moneys in the county treasury except upon warrants issued by the auditor, applied only to county moneys (MacMullan v. Kelly, 19 Cal. App. 700, 127 P. 819). This section of the Code and a number of related sections were so amended in 1911 (St. 1911, p. 1095) as to extend this prohibition to any money paid into the county treasury or placed in the custody of the county treasurer by official authority, to require that a certificate of the auditor accompany any such money paid into the treasury, and to require that no such moneys be paid out except upon a warrant issued by the county auditor. As so amended, these respective sections would seem to be broad enough to cover the situation here in controversy, and, in the absence of any other expression from the Legislature, might well be held to be controlling in the question before us. But the Legislature, having the power to enlarge the scope of these statutes, as was apparently done in the amendments of 1911, likewise had the power to restrict their scope or to require a different procedure in a specific instance. The Water Storage District Act was passed ten years later than these amendments, and we are called upon to decide whether, in passing this act, the Legislature intended to include therein and make a part thereof those amended sections of the Political Code which have been referred to.

[1] In 23 California Jurisprudence, at page 762, the general rule of statutory construction is thus set forth: "It is a settled rule of statutory construction that a general provision is controlled by one that is special, the latter being treated as an exception to the former. A specific provision relating to a particular subject will govern in respect to that subject as against the general provision, although the latter standing alone would be broad enough to include the subject to which the more particular provisions relate. Moreover a provision, although expressed in general and comprehensive language, is construed with reference to the general intent of the act."

In Matter of the Estate of James A. Brewer, Deceased, 156 Cal. 89, 103 P. 486, 488, the court said: "But 'where two statutes treat of the same subject, one being special and the other general, unless they are irreconcilably inconsistent, the latter, although latest in date, will not be held to have repealed the former, but the special act will prevail in its application to the subject-matter as far as coming within its particular provisions.' "

Some of the provisions of the act here in question are inconsistent with these prior statutes, and cannot be reconciled therewith except by reading into the act a number of provisions that were definitely omitted therefrom by the Legislature.

[2, 3] The Water Storage District Act is a special act, passed for a definite and specific purpose, and containing a full and complete procedure for raising money and paying claims incurred in carrying out the purposes of the act. Although the machinery therein provided for raising and spending money differs in several material respects from the corresponding plan of handling the general finances of a county, it would appear that such different procedure was intentionally inserted in the act by the Legislature. Not only would this appear from the omission of the very considerable requirements which the respondent would now read into the act, but from its affirmative provisions requiring assessments to be paid directly to the county treasurer, requiring that a copy of the assessment roll be furnished to the county treasurer and kept in his office, requiring him to forthwith deposit all moneys collected in the county treasury, and authorizing and requiring him to pay out the same upon district warrants only. In our opinion, this is a case where a specific act of the Legislature must be held to be controlling over prior existing general statutes.

We take it that this act means what it says when it provides that landowners in the district must pay their assessments to the county treasurer, that the county treasurer shall forthwith pay this money into the county treasury, and that the county treasurer must pay out this money upon a warrant issued by the officers of the district. And that it was the intention of the Legislature in enacting this statute to have the provisions thereof, which are complete in themselves, govern and control in the handling of funds raised for the use of such districts.

[4] The second point raised is that it was the right and duty of the county treasurer to keep the funds collected for the petitioner segregated from county funds, that because of the robbery referred to there is not sufficient money in this particular fund in the county treasury to pay the warrant in question, and that this constitutes a complete defense in this proceeding. In effect, the contention is that the funds stolen were in fact the property of the district and that the consequent loss must fall upon the water storage district. In support of this contention, we are referred to the provisions of the act; that the assessments referred to shall be collected by the county treasurer and held to the credit of the district; that they shall be deposited in the proper fund of the district; that they shall be deposited to the credit of the district; that they be credited to the bond fund of the district; and many others of like import. It is argued that these various provisions not only contemplate that all moneys collected for the district shall be credited to the district in a particular fund, but that they authorize and require the county treasurer to make a physical segregation, keeping such moneys separate and apart from other funds in the treasury. No law to this effect is pointed out to us, the act itself is specific in requiring such moneys to be paid into the county treasury, and we are unable to see in the provisions referred to anything other than a requirement of bookkeeping. Taking the act as a whole, it seems to clearly provide that, while a record of such a fund shall be kept, and while the district shall be credited in this fund with moneys collected for it, the actual cash shall be placed in the county treasury. The very act of placing money in a "treasury" seems to imply a mingling with other moneys therein, and negatives the idea that money so placed shall retain its identity. The provisions that moneys collected under the terms of the act shall be placed in the treasury and entered in a bond fund to the credit of the district are, to our minds, inconsistent with the idea that such moneys are merely to be held in the custody of the treasurer, kept separate and apart from all other moneys in his custody, and that the specific cash is to remain the property of the district.

In the case before us, it is admitted that certain money has been paid into the county treasury. We feel constrained to hold that this has been done in accordance with the provisions of the act, and that this money, having been legally placed in the county treasury, must be considered as remaining there until it has been legally withdrawn in accordance with the terms of the act. While a county treasurer may and must keep track of the various funds in his custody, when money is placed in the county treasury under the provisions of this act, particular bills and coins may not be earmarked as those belonging to the district. If a county treasurer feels compelled to accede to the demands of a robber that money be handed over to him, we think that such a treasurer may neither elect which particular fund he shall hand over, nor may he say that it was the particular property of such a district as this which was handed over, any more than could a bank charge a similar loss to the account of a particular depositor upon the claim that the money taken actually came from that source.

Not only do we think that such a physical segregation of money as is claimed to have existed here is not authorized by law, but the evidence shows that the amounts collected for this district were not at all times kept by the county treasurer separate and distinct from other funds in his possession. While the treasurer testified that it was his custom to put checks paid in by landowners in this district in this particular leather wallet, he also testified that upon the assessment involved here he received a check from Miller & Lux, Inc., for $21,272.23, that shortly thereafter an agent of a bank came into his office with a bunch of claims against the county, and that he used this check from Miller & Lux to pay these claims, taking back a cashier's check from the bank for $9,000, to cover the difference. He testified that it was his usual custom to use checks received in payment of assessments of this district in clearing county claims with the bank, and that "almost immediately" thereafter he would take a corresponding amount of cash out of the cash drawer and place it in the wallet referred to. He further testified that on the day of this robbery there was $41,000 and some odd dollars on his books to the credit of this water storage district; that all of the money belonging to the district was not in this leather wallet; and that at the time something like $34,000 was in the wallet, while about $7,600 was in the hands of the receiver of a building and loan association. He also testified that at the time of the robbery his deputy had taken this wallet out for the purpose of making change, that it was their custom to put $1 bills as they accumulated in this particular wallet, and that on the occasion in question the deputy was going to take $10 in $1 bills out of this wallet and put them in the county wallet in anticipation of a call for $1 bills from various county offices.

In view of the evidence that this district, on the date in question, had a credit upon the books of the county treasurer and in the fund in that treasury created by assessments it had made in pursuance of the provisions of this act sufficient to cover the warrant drawn, that the warrant was drawn in the manner provided by the act, and in view of the stipulation that there were sufficient funds in the treasury of the county at that time to pay the amount of the warrant, we think the writ applied for should issue.

It is argued with much force that under the Constitution no county can give or loan its credit to or in aid of any person, and that to use county money to reimburse a water storage district for its losses would be a violation of this provision. This argument presupposes that the money stolen from this county treasurer was the particular property of this district, a premise which we cannot accept.

Let a peremptory writ issue as prayed for.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Percy S. King, Judge.

Action by Margarethe Lerner, as administratrix of the estate of Jacob Lerner, deceased, against F. H. Sanderson, Jr., and another, doing business under the fictitious name of the California Land Products Company, and the Tracy-Waldron Fruit Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, the last-named defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

H. A. Frank, of Oakland, for appellant.

Wallace T. Rutherford, of Napa, for respondent.

Mr. Justice R. L. THOMPSON delivered the opinion of the court.

The complaint in this case consists of seven counts which were based upon assigned claims for the price of grapes sold and delivered, together with the value of materials furnished and labor performed. From a judgment which was rendered in favor of the plaintiff and against both defendants, the Tracy-Waldron Fruit Company has appealed.

It is contended the judgment is not supported by the evidence. There is no merit in the appeal.

The appellant is a corporation which is engaged in the business of buying and marketing fruit. The defendants Sanderson and Digardi are copartners doing business under the firm name of California Land Products Company. In 1925, the appellant entered into a written agreement for the season with the defendant partnership for "buying, shipping and handling * * * grapes, from the following California counties, to-wit: Contra Costa, Santa Clara, Napa, Mendocino and Sonoma, to points within or without the State of California."

This contract was executed by the appellant and accepted by the copartnership. It contains the following provisions:

"You (California Land Products Company) to handle the general field work including soliciting of business * * * on a purchase basis * * * to be bought at prices and on such terms as may be mutually agreed upon between us. * * * You are to devote the principal part of your time to this joint venture, * * * but if we reject any grapes offered by you, you are at liberty to purchase the same yourselves or sell them to others for your own account. * * *

"We are to furnish labor, shooks and other necessary material for packing and loading such grapes for shipment. * * * We are to finance payments for such grapes purchased * * * as such payments fall due; also for all necessary items of expense properly chargeable to this joint venture. * * *

⇐For other cases see same topic and KEY NUMBER in all Key Number Digests and Indexes

"Profits or losses resulting from transactions under this joint venture are to be divided equally between us. * * *

"It is understood that this joint venture covers only such cars of grapes as you directly originate and does not cover any other business that may be handled by us in the same general territory or district by purchase, * * * or any business which may be handled by you in other parts of the State of California or which we may have rejected as hereinbefore provided. * * *

"It is understood that shipments under this joint venture are to be made through shipping sheds owned by us or leased by us in the counties aforesaid. * * *"

[1] This contract creates a joint venture for the purchase of grapes during the season ending October 15, 1925, in Napa and the other four counties mentioned in the agreement. In effect, it provides that all the grapes which are purchased by the copartnership in these named counties shall belong exclusively to the joint venture, except such as may be rejected by the appellant. The contract fails to specify conditions or grounds upon which grapes may be rejected. It specifically excludes grapes purchased by the appellant in these named counties and grapes which are purchased by California Land Products Company "in other parts of the state." By necessary implication, all grapes purchased by the copartnership in the named counties, unless they are rejected, belong to the joint venture, and create a liability for the purchase price thereof against both parties to the contract. The rights and liabilities of joint adventurers, as between themselves, are governed by the same principles which apply to a partnership business. Ford & McNamara, Inc., et al. v. Wilson (Cal. App.) 6 P.(2d) 996.

[2] The appellant contends that it is liable only for such grapes as were purchased by the copartnership in Napa county and which were actually delivered to it. It is asserted that the burden of showing that all such grapes were actually delivered to the appellant was upon the plaintiff. The court found they were "delivered to the defendants." It is conceded they were delivered to the California Land Products Company. We are pointed to no evidence indicating they were not actually delivered to the appellant. We are cited to no evidence that the appellant ever rejected any of these grapes. The record clearly shows all the grapes which are involved in this action were purchased by the copartnership in the district which is covered by the contract of joint adventure. The agreement of joint adventure precludes the copartnership from purchasing any grapes for its separate account within the five counties therein mentioned. All grapes purchased in that district were for the benefit of the appellant. A delivery of grapes to the copartnership which were purchased in that district was therefore a delivery to the appellant. A reasonable construction of the contract leaves no other solution of this problem. The findings to the effect that these grapes were delivered to the appellant is amply supported by the evidence.

If any of these grapes were rejected by the appellant, that fact might furnish a defense to the action with respect to the purchase price of such rejected grapes. The burden of proving that defense rested upon the appellant. No such defense was alleged or proved.

The appellant contends it was engaged solely in shipping grapes to Eastern markets, and that its custom was to ship grapes only in small three and a half pound boxes, containing twenty-five pounds of grapes, that many of the grapes were delivered to the California Land Products Company in large lug boxes, and that the judgment wrongfully includes some items of expense for the cost of large lug boxes.

[3] It will be observed, contrary to the alleged custom of the appellant, that the contract which is involved in this suit specifically authorizes the purchase of grapes in the five counties named, for shipment "to points within or without the state." The contract is silent with respect to the character of boxes in which the grapes are to be delivered. The agreement obligates the appellant to pay for "labor, shooks and other necessary material for packing and loading." We are directed to no evidence to indicate that any change is included in the judgment for the cost of large lug boxes. The only item of this nature which we are able to discover by reference to the briefs is 4476 pounds of grapes at $44.76 which were apparently delivered "in big lugs." Nor are we pointed to any evidence that the appellant for any reason rejected fruit which was purchased. It is stated in its brief that 1,733 boxes were shipped on October 3d, "the date after which this appellant received no fruit from any shipper." It is not stated this shipment was refused. No evidence is cited to support such contention. Moreover, the contract authorized the copartnership to purchase grapes during the season of 1925, "or approximately (until) October 15, 1925." The grapes were all purchased within that period. No reason appears why both defendants are not liable therefor.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of William S. Andres, deceased. Margaret Andres, as widow, filed a petition for an allowance for her support and maintenance, opposed by Frank E. Andres, executor. The petition was granted, and the executor appeals.

Affirmed.

Harvey M. Parker and Merriam, Rinehart & Merriam, all of Pasadena, for appellant.

Daniel M. Hunsaker and Lloyd E. Keiser, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J.

Respondent Margaret Andres is the widow of William F. Andres, who died on the 22d day of February, 1931, leaving property in the county of Los Angeles now subject to administration under the will of decedent. Respondent petitioned for an allowance for her support and maintenance, which petition was granted. Contestant, who is executor of the will, and also is an heir at law of decedent, appeals from said order.

Respondent and the decedent, William F. Andres, had lived separate and apart from each other at all times since the year 1905, but never were divorced. Shortly before their separation they entered into an agreement in writing, dated November 17, 1905. In this agreement nothing was said to indicate that the parties intended to live apart from each other. The agreement referred entirely to property and recited that they desired to separate their property interests, "in order that each party may have exclusive control and disposition of all property standing in his or her respective name." Therefore in consideration of the premises and of other good and valuable consideration, and of the sum of $2,350 received by Mrs. Andres "in full satisfaction for this agreement and in full settlement of her community rights now or hereafter acquired by her," she released to her husband, his heirs and assigns forever, "all the right, title and interest, which said party of the first part now has or may hereafter acquire, by operation of law or otherwise, in and to all other property, real, personal and mixed, which said party of the second part now owns or has acquired or which he may hereafter acquire or own, or which may now or hereafter stand in his name, whether the same be community property or otherwise." In similar terms the husband, as party of the second part, in consideration of the agreements therein contained on the part of the party of the first part and of the sum of $1, released all present or future rights in property of the party of the first part, Mrs. Andres.

It is contended by appellant that the said agreement of November 17, 1905, is a complete and final adjustment of all property rights between the spouses, and constitutes a waiver of the respondent's rights to a widow's allowance.

[1] In a very recent case the Supreme Court of California had before it an appeal from an order granting a family allowance to the widow of a decedent, where the objection to the allowance was based upon a claim of waiver by virtue of a contract between husband and wife. The court said: "The sole question presented on the appeal is whether the petitioner waived her right to ask for a family allowance by reason of the above-quoted provision of the property settlement agreement. It is not disputed that the wife may, by her agreement, waive such right. It is well established, however, that in order to bar a family allowance the intention to waive the right must be clear and explicit, and that any uncertainty in the language of the agreement will be resolved in favor of the right. In re Estate of Whitney, 171 Cal. 750, 154 P. 855; In re Estate of Gould, 181 Cal. 11, 183 P. 146." In re Bidigare's Estate (Cal. Sup.) 8 P.(2d) 122, 123. In that case the agreement between the parties had been that "each party hereto is hereby released and absolved from any and all obligations and liabilities for the future acts and duties of the other, and that each of said parties hereby releases the other from any and all liabilities, debts or obligations of any kind or character incurred by the other from and after this date, and from any and all claims and demands, including all claims of either party hereto upon the other for support and maintenance as wife or husband, or otherwise, it being understood that this instrument is intended to settle the rights of the parties hereto in all of said respects." Applying to said contract the rule as stated in the above-quoted language of the court, it was noted that the agreement did not in terms waive or purport to waive any claim as surviving widow. It was in evidence that only two months before the death of Mr. Bidigare an interlocutory decree of divorce had been granted to the wife. Concerning the contract and its effect upon the right of the widow to an allowance for support during the period of administration of the husband's estate the court said: "No provision of the contract suggests that the parties had in contemplation the death of the husband before the entering of the final decree of divorce. The release of claims and demands of one against the other would seem to refer to claims and demands between them as living spouses. The claim of the widow here asserted is against the estate of the decedent and not against him. The words 'or otherwise' should not, we think, be held to extend the waiver to a claim for family allowance, but should be held to refer to the claims mentioned in the clause in which they are found, viz., claims between them as husband and wife. These words used in the agreement, instead of being plain and explicit evidence of waiver, tend to the uncertainty which is not permitted to control in cases of this kind." In re Bidigare's Estate, supra, and In re Minier's Estate (Cal. Sup.) 8 P.(2d) 123, 125, were decided on the same day. In the Minier Case there was a question of right of inheritance by the widow of the decedent Joseph Minier, where prior to his death a certain agreement of separation had been made between the husband and wife. Among other things the agreement provided that "from this time on neither of the said parties shall have or claim anything from the other, and each of said parties does hereby release the other in full of all claims and demands of every nature and kind whatsoever, as well in the past as in the present and future and shall be and remain separate from each other, and in case of any action for divorce being brought by either of said parties against the other, neither of said parties will claim or demand from the other any costs, counsel fees or alimony or any other property, claim or demand of any kind whatsoever." The decision in this case somewhat extensively reviews the prior decisions in this and other states relating to separation agreements or property division agreements between husband and wife, and the effect of such agreements under circumstances like those of the case at bar. Referring particularly to the Minier agreement the court said: "That the parties should so carefully and minutely provide against either party claiming any rights from the other in case of divorce proceedings being instituted, and should omit any reference to any claim either should make against the property of the other in the case of the death of either, under the rule of expressio unius est exclusio alterius, leads strongly to the inference that they did not intend by their agreement to relinquish or in any way affect their inheritable rights." Among the cases thus discussed is the Estate of Davis, 106 Cal. 453, 39 P. 756, 757, concerning which it was pointed out that in the Davis Case the release as contained in the agreement attached to the property of the spouses and extended to all property acquired by them during their lifetime or owned by them at the time of death. In that case the release provided that the wife "hereby does relinquish and surrender forever all claims of any nature she may now or hereafter have against any property that said W. W. Davis may now have or may hereafter in any manner acquire." It also recited that she received the property which, pursuant to the agreement, was conveyed to her, "in full satisfaction of all claims she may have as the wife of said W. W. Davis on any property he now has or may in any manner acquire." In view of this agreement the Supreme Court said: "The obvious purpose was not only to definitely sever the property rights of the parties, but mutually to relinquish and release all inheritable interest of each in the property and estate of the other."

[2-4] Thus the question is squarely presented whether, in the case at bar, the terms of the contract constituted a release of all future property rights, including inheritable interests, as in the case of Estate of Davis, supra, or whether said contract should be construed as reaching no further than did those considered in the Bidigare Case and in the Minier Case. This brings us back to the terms of the release executed between respondent and the decedent. She released to her husband, his heirs and assigns forever, all the right, title, and interest "which said party of the first part now has or may hereafter acquire, by operation of law or otherwise, in and to all other property, real, personal and mixed, which said party of the second part now owns or has acquired or which he may hereafter acquire or own, or which may now or hereafter stand in his name, whether the same be community property or otherwise."

In order to determine the effect of the contract in relation to the present subject of controversy, consideration must be given to the expressed purposes of the agreement when made, as well as to the circumstances under which it was made. In the contract itself, the purpose for making the agreement was stated to be "that each party may have exclusive control and disposition of all property standing in his or her respective name, whether the same be considered community property or otherwise." In the contract nothing was said about any separation or proposed separation between husband and wife. But, at the hearing in this proceeding, there was evidence pursuant to which the court found that, at the time of the death of William F. Andres, he and Mrs. Andres were living separate and apart without her consent and solely by reason of cruel treatment of her by decedent. And since it appears that they separated about six months after the making of said agreement, and after such separation never lived together, it is fairly inferable that the alleged cruel treatment occurred at or before the time of the separation.

Under the circumstances above stated, the trial court was justified in determining that, at the time of the death of the husband, respondent herein continued to be a member of the family of decedent and entitled to receive support as such member. In this respect the case is different from that presented in the Estate of Yoell, 164 Cal. 540, 129 P. 999, wherein it was held that by reason of the fact that the surviving wife had voluntarily and deliberately severed her relationship as a member of the husband's family, she was not entitled to succeed in her application for a family allowance. Another difference may be noted in that in the Estate of Yoell the contract of separation between husband and wife contained an express covenant by which each party surrendered, as against the estate of the other, all claim as surviving husband or wife.

Our conclusion is that, under the contract relied upon by appellant herein, it does not appear that there was any express waiver of the wife's right to support or of her right to a family allowance. There is an absence of any clear and explicit intention of the wife to waive her rights in this respect.

The order is affirmed.

J. M. Walthall, of Modesto, and William H. Devlin, of Sacramento (Devlin & Devlin & Diepenbrock, of Sacramento, of counsel on appeal), for appellant.

P. O. Solon and W. H. Hollander, both of Oakland, for respondents.

Mr. Presiding Justice PRESTON delivered the opinion of the court.

This is an appeal by defendant Southern Pacific Company, a corporation, from a judgment entered against it upon a verdict of a jury in the sum of $25,500. The plaintiffs are two minor children and the widow of Glen Friddle, who was killed on the 21st day of March, 1929, by reason of a collision between an autotruck, which said Glen Friddle, as the sole occupant, was driving, and a passenger train of the appellant. The case was dismissed as to all defendants save appellant Southern Pacific Company. A motion for a new trial was made and denied.

The facts necessary for a correct understanding of the questions involved on this appeal may be thus briefly stated:

Glen Friddle was a young man of the age of twenty-five years and was engaged in the occupation of truck driver. His place of occupation was at or near the town of Crows Landing in Stanislaus county. The Southern Pacific Company operates its lines through the said town, among which trains is the passenger train generally known as "The Owl," being one of the company's fast trains operating between San Francisco and the empire south of Tehachapi. Near Crows Landing is an open country crossing where the main traveled highway intersects the tracks of appellant company. To effect this crossing the highway makes a turn, effecting, upon completion, a right angle to its prior course. Up to the point where the highway turns the general course thereof parallels the track, the outer line of the highway being some sixty-two feet distant from the railway.

Glen Friddle, the deceased, was familiar with the locality and had been, for some months, in the habit of traversing the crossing at least three times a week and always at an early hour in the morning, ranging between 4 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock a. m.

On the morning of the accident Friddle and one Carvelho were proceeding in separate trucks to a slaughterhouse which was located about a mile distant from the crossing. Carvelho was ahead of Friddle as they proceeded along the highway in a northerly direction. Carvelho reached the crossing first. While upon the tracks he looked back to ascertain the whereabouts of Friddle and saw the latter approaching the crossing at a distance of some two hundred yards back. Carvelho testified that, though he was not looking for the train, he nevertheless did see the train approaching at a distance of some five or six hundred yards down the track. It was then 5:30 a. m. and the light condition may be described as twilight. Carvelho could see the lights of the train plainly and could see the engine. As noted, when Carvelho looked to locate Friddle, the latter was some two hundred and fifty yards behind and traveling at a uniform speed approximating thirty-five miles per hour. Carvelho testified that he heard no whistle, bell, or other warning given by the train.

Aside from testimony offered to support the claim of damage the foregoing constituted plaintiffs' case. It was admitted that deceased met his death as a result of the collision between the train and the truck.

Testimony was adduced in behalf of appellant showing that the train was proceeding on its own right of way at a speed of fifty miles per hour. The usual crossing whistle was blown at a point a quarter of a mile distant from the crossing. The engine was equipped with a bell conforming in weight and construction to the legal requirement and the bell was continuously sounded by means of automatic control. Without detailing the evidence, the claim of appellant was that decedent did heedlessly, recklessly, negligently, and without regard for his own safety rush his truck headlong into the path of the train, with the consequent disastrous result.

The appellant advances two main contentions in support of its appeal: First, it contends that there was no negligence shown as against the company or any of its agents or employees; secondly, that even if such negligence can be found from the facts then the negligence of the decedent so far contributed to the result that no recovery can be had.

[1] No claim is urged that the speed of the train was excessive and there is absolutely no evidence on that point. It is true that under certain conditions, into which may enter many varying factors, a speed of fifty miles per hour would be an excessive and dangerous speed. But the mere statement that such a speed was being maintained, with no further evidence as to conditions or surrounding circumstances, furnishes no foundation for any slight inference of negligence.

The only evidence as to surrounding conditions indicates that at the particular place here involved the railway right of way ran through an open country over an area in plain and unobstructed view. It is not the function of the courts to fix the speed or schedule of railroad transportation nor to arbitrarily determine the rate of speed permissible. There is not a word in the record indicating any negligence in the matter of speed.

[2] Indeed, excepting the reliance upon the presumption hereinafter to be noted, the sole act of negligence charged against the appellant is its failure to sound an alarm.

The only testimony on this point offered by the plaintiffs is the testimony of Carvelho to the effect that he heard no whistle, bell or other signal of warning.

The value of negative testimony is relative. That is to say, in determining the effect to be given such testimony, we must take into consideration all of the circumstances surrounding the witness giving such testimony. In the first place, Carvelho testified that he was not looking for the train but happened to see it in looking backwards for Friddle. His attention was at no time specifically or intently directed toward the engine or cars. The train was then some 500 to 600 yards distant, and Carvelho was directly on the track. Estimating the distance roughly to be approximately one-third of a mile, it would take a train traveling at fifty miles per hour just twenty-four seconds to reach the crossing where the collision occurred. In those twenty-four seconds Carvelho, traveling at thirty-five miles per hour, would have reached a point less than four hundred yards from the scene of the collision.

The testimony is without dispute that when the train hit the truck there was a loud explosion, either of gasoline or some other explosive, the noise of which was heard for several blocks around. Carvelho, only some four hundred yards away, did not hear this explosion, nor did he hear anything of the crash. He did not know that anything unusual had happened until he drove on to the agreed meeting place and after a brief wait, surmising from the absence of Friddle that something had happened, returned to the crossing.

These facts tend to render the negative testimony of this witness of little weight, and while it is not our province to scrutinize with extreme nicety of detail any claimed conflict of evidence, yet we are brought fully within the rule announced in Wenban Estate v. Hewlett, 193 Cal., at page 693, 227 P. 723, that evidence may be so nebulous and evanescent as to render it nothing more than a mere pretense of evidence, and therefore it may be said that, as a matter of law, it is not evidence at all and does not contradict or tend to contradict, either directly or by justifiable inference, the positive evidence against it.

The positive evidence of the entire train crew is to the effect that not only was the whistle blown a quarter of a mile from the crossing but also at the point where the truck came into view approaching the track. Further it is the positive evidence of the fireman and engineer on the train that the bell was being constantly sounded.

The evidence of the whistling is likewise adduced by persons resident of the town of Crows Landing and whose attention was being directly attracted thereto. For instance, the night watchman who timed his period of employment by the arrival of the train and also a neighbor who regulated her arising by the whistle of the Owl train. Thus the only claimed evidence of negligence is entirely dispelled.

[3] We next approach the claim of contributory negligence. Under the facts as shown there can be no logical argument presented against this contention.

Railway crossing cases are without number both in this jurisdiction and throughout the entire nation. The subject is carefully, thoroughly and most ably reviewed in the case of Koster v. Southern Pacific Company, 207 Cal. 753, 279 P. 788, and the mere reference thereto will suffice.

The physical facts of the instant case speak for themselves and there can be no doubt that had decedent stopped, looked, and listened, as the law required him to do, he would have been warned at a safe distance from the main track of the approach of the said train and the hazard he would assume in attempting to cross the railroad crossing ahead of the train.

We have an unobstructed crossing with a clear view of the track in both directions. Friddle was operating his truck at a distance of some sixty-two feet from the right of way and running parallel with the train and in the same direction. According to the testimony of plaintiffs the train, approaching at fifty miles per hour, had but one-third of a mile to cover to reach the crossing and said train was clearly visible. Friddle had about one-eighth of a mile to cover to reach the crossing and a turn to make in his journey. He was familiar with the territory and knew that trains did pass over the track at the point of crossing. It is not conceivable that any person, using the ordinary senses, could have failed to observe the approaching train.

As a matter of calculation the situation demonstrates itself. Friddle going thirty-five miles per hour would have reached the crossing, from the point at which Carvelho observed him, in approximately fifteen seconds. The train, from the point observed by Carvelho, would have reached the same point in twenty-four seconds, leaving in the approximation only nine seconds within which to figure out the crossing ahead of the train. With this picture, it would be idle to attempt to show ordinary care or prudence on the part of the deceased. In order to justify the conduct of the unfortunate decedent we would first be compelled to overrule every known California case on railroad crossings.

[4] It may be noted that respondent does not seriously question the existence of negligence upon the part of decedent (passing for the purposes hereof the application of the presumption of due care) but it is the contention of respondents that contributory negligence is entirely out of the case by reason of appellant's failure to affirmatively plead such a defense. This brings us to the pleadings of appellant. Appellant's answer, filed in the court below, is as follows: "That said Glen Friddle met his death by and through his own negligence and that his own negligence was the proximate cause of his death in this that the said Glen Friddle at the time of and for some time prior to said accident had knowledge that the highway crossed the railroad track at the point of the accident and immediately preceding the accident knew that he was approaching a railroad crossing and that notwithstanding said facts said Glen Friddle approached said crossing and attempted to cross said railroad track at said point without stopping, looking or listening and negligently failed to make use of his sense of understanding, sight and hearing at the time said train was approaching and that by reason of the said negligence of said Glen Friddle, he was struck and killed at the time and place in said plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint alleged."

It is difficult to see wherein this pleading is insufficient to present the issue of contributory negligence. It is true that in a discussion between counsel at the trial, counsel for appellant equivocally conceded that contributory negligence was not an issue but this concession was always with the stout insistence that the appellant was guilty of no negligence and that the accident was caused solely through the negligence of decedent. Both counsel in the discussion seemed to be adroitly maneuvering the other into some sort of an admission.

Appellant's counsel and respondents' counsel both were of the impression that in order to advance the defense of contributory negligence it was necessary that defendant first admit its own negligence. This the appellant declined to do. In this appellant was correct. In Sheets v. Southern Pacific, 212 Cal., at page 515, 299 P. 71, the court said: "It is not the law that a plea of contributory negligence is an admission of culpable negligence on the part of the defendant. A defendant may deny that he was guilty of any negligence, and at the same time consistently claim that, even if the jury should find that he has been negligent, the plaintiff would not have sustained any injury if it had not been for his own negligence as the approximate cause." This is exactly what appellant did here.

In Hoffman v. Southern Pacific Company, 84 Cal. App., at pages 346 et seq., 258 P. 397, this question of pleading is elaborately discussed. As a matter of interpretation and construction, the greater always includes the lesser, and where, as here, the defense is made that the negligence of plaintiff was the proximate cause of the injuries, the allegation would include any negligence that contributed to the said injuries.

As stated in the Hoffman Case, it would seem an absurd proceeding to put the defendant at the risk of absolving himself from all negligence before he could advance the defense of contributory negligence.

Here the appellant did plead specifically the facts going to show the negligence of deceased and whether it described this negligence as the sole cause of the accident or the contributing cause could make no difference in the effect of the proven facts. Regardless of the argument between counsel the trial court did instruct the jury upon the doctrine of contributory negligence and did consider such negligence to be an issue in the case.

[5] Lastly respondents earnestly contend that it is the settled law of California that the decedent in the case at bar is presumed to have done everything that a reasonably prudent man would have done under the circumstances for the protection of his own safety and that this presumption, while disputable, is evidence in the case.

Following up this contention it is then urged that, giving the presumption the weight of evidence, a sufficient conflict appears which will preclude the interference of an appellate court. Naturally, reliance is had upon the case of Smellie v. Southern Pacific, 212 Cal. 540, 299 P. 529. However, the Smellie Case sets forth certain clear limitations. In passing, it must be noted that this case went through several hearings and rehearings and must be classed as one most thoroughly considered, and being of such far-embracing nature we must assume that every phase of the problem was carefully analyzed before opinion rendered. With this in mind, we must give to the language used its exact meaning. Two things are definitely announced by the court in that case. Quoting from page 552 of 212 Cal., 299 P. 529, 534: "In the Mar Shee Case [190 Cal. 1, 210 P. 269] it was held that a fact is proved against a party relying on the presumption 'by the uncontradicted testimony of the party himself or of his witnesses, under circumstances which afford no indication that the testimony is the product of mistake or inadvertence; and that, when the fact so proved is wholly irreconcilable with the presumption sought to be invoked, the latter is dispelled and disappears from the case.' This is undoubtedly true, but it does not necessarily follow that the presumption may not be overcome or 'dispelled' as a matter of law by proof of the party against whom the presumption is invoked." Quoting from page 555 of the opinion cited in 212 Cal., 299 P. 529, 535 we find: "When the presumption is invoked by a party, and his evidence is not inconsistent therewith, it is in the case, provided, of course, the evidence sufficiently establishes a sphere or field within which the presumption can operate. Whether it does must, of course, be decided by the trial court as a question of law."

Thus we find one thing definitely decided beyond argument, and that is that the presumption falls in the face of evidence produced by the party relying thereon which is inconsistent therewith. The evidence adduced by plaintiff discloses a man familiar with the locality and the conditions there existing driving a truck at a speed of approximately thirty-five miles per hour. It shows this driver in a position of complete safety on a highway paralleling a railway track upon which is a train approaching a crossing at a speed of fifty miles per hour, which train is at a distance of between two hundred and fifty yards and three hundred and fifty yards directly behind the truck. The location of the highway upon which the truck is being operated is sixty-two feet from the rails. It discloses the driver of the truck, with the train rushing to the crossing, turning from his place of safety directly into the path of the oncoming train. We may then reasonably and seasonably inquire by what process of reasoning can we indulge the presumption that the truck driver exercised due care for his own safety.

Under the law of railroad crossings due care would be measured by certain conduct, namely, that the driver stop, look, and listen before attempting to cross a railroad track. The slightest glance by decedent would have disclosed the danger and the slightest attention would have given him ample warning. The judgment is reversed.

In re GARNETT'S ESTATE.

Civ. 8524.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 27, 1932.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 27, 1932.

Executors and administrators ⇐437(3).

Claim on notes presented against estate on May 6, 1927, and within time mentioned in notice to creditors, held not barred by limitations, although normally action on notes would have been barred on August 16, 1927, which was prior to time claim was allowed by executrix and approved by court (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337, 353).

Claim was not barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 337, since section 353 expressly extends time for bringing an action against deceased person's representative for one year after issuance of letters testamentary, and the purpose thereof was to extend the time within which to present claim and bring action in event of rejection.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

First accounting of Minnie F. Barnard, formerly Minnie F. Garnett, executrix of the estate of James R. Garnett, alias, deceased. From an order allowing a claim of the Bank of Willows, a corporation, the executrix appeals.

Affirmed.

H. L. McAllister, of San Francisco (J. S. Josselyn, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Cross & Brandt, of San Francisco, and Carroll F. Byrd and H. C. Bell, both of Willows, for respondent.

LANDIS, Justice pro tem.

The appeal is by the executrix of the above-entitled estate from that part of an order of the said Superior Court made in connection with the settlement of the first account of the executrix ordering that a certain claim of the Bank of Willows, a corporation, allowed, approved, and filed in said court for the sum of $4,843.77 constitutes a valid and subsisting claim against said estate.

On February 16, 1923, the said deceased made, executed, and delivered to said Bank of Willows, a corporation, two promissory notes, each of said notes made payable six months after date, one note in the principal sum of $3,140 and one in the sum of $2,419, secured by mortgage. On January 19, 1927, the deceased died. On February 17, 1927, Minnie F. Garnett, now Minnie F. Barnard, was duly appointed executrix of the estate of her said deceased husband. On May 6, 1927, said Bank of Willows presented its claim upon said two promissory notes to said executrix, and no further step was taken by said bank. The claim was allowed by the executrix November 3, 1927, and approved by the court and filed December 2, 1927. The notes would normally outlaw August 16, 1927.

Appellant contends that this case involves the following two legal questions, to wit: (1) Did or did not the filing of the alleged claims of the Bank of Willows, with said executrix, on the 6th day of May, 1927, stop the tolling of the statute of limitations (section 337, Code Civ. Proc. of the State of California)? (2) Did the executrix of the said estate of James R. Garnett, deceased, and/or the said court, have sufficient and/or any legal right or authority, to so or at all allow and/or approve the said alleged claim of the Bank of Willows, on the 3d day of November, 1927, and the 2d day of December, 1927, respectively?

Appellant urges and takes the position that normally and under the general statute of limitations the notes would have outlawed August 16, 1927, and contends that, the claim having been filed May 6, 1927, not allowed by the executrix until November 3, 1927, and not approved by the court until December 2, 1927, therefore, since the mere filing of the claim with the executrix did not toll the statute of limitations, the claim was barred by the statute of limitations when allowed by the executrix and approved by the court, and could not have been legally allowed by the executrix or approved by the court because of the provision of section 1499 of the Code of Civil Procedure (now section 708, Probate Code), which in part reads as follows: "No claim which is barred by the statute of limitations shall be allowed or approved by the executor or administrator, or by the judge."

Appellant also contends that, although respondent could have prevented the running of the statute of limitations by filing an action on the claim prior to the expiration of one year, which was February 16, 1928, and suing after the issuance of letters testamentary, it failed to do so.

Respondent concedes that the mere filing of the claim with the executrix would not toll the statute of limitations, and that no outlawed claim could legally be approved by the executrix or the judge, but contends that, because of the provisions of section 353 of the Code of Civil Procedure which in part provides as follows: "If a person against whom an action may be brought dies before the expiration of the time limited for the commencement thereof, and the cause of action survive, an action may be commenced against his representatives, after the expiration of that time, and within one year after the issuing of letters testamentary or of administration," the claim was not barred by the statute of limitations, and that it was not necessary to file an action on the claim prior to February 16, 1928, in order to prevent the running of the statute of limitations.

Respondent further contends that in this case, therefore, respondent had one year from and after February 17, 1927, the date letters testamentary were issued, within which to have its claim allowed and approved, and that the claim, having been allowed by the executrix November 3, 1927, and approved by the court and filed December 2, 1927, which was within the said year, was within the time allowed.

In undertaking to meet this situation and contention of respondent, appellant takes the position that section 353, as above quoted, does not extend the time for the allowance and approval of claims, but only extends the time for bringing an action upon the claim. In other words, in effect the position of appellant appears to be that section 353 does not extend the power of the court to approve the claim within the year, although the claim has been allowed by the executrix, but does extend and give the court a power to award a judgment thereon if action is brought within the year.

This brings us to the point where it becomes necessary to interpret the meaning of the provisions of section 353 of the Code of Civil Procedure, at least to the extent of determining whether it relates exclusively to the commencement of actions or relates to and extends the time for presenting or filing claims against an estate, which would otherwise be barred by the general statute of limitations.

In the case of Wallace v. Gable, 209 Cal. 10, page 12, 285 P. 309, 310, wherein, as against the contention of respondent, that the general statute of limitations is extended by section 353, appellant contended that section 353 relates exclusively to the commencement of actions, and does not relate to or extend the time for presenting or filing claims against an estate, and that the claim was barred under the general statute before the claim was presented, and that presentation of a valid claim is a condition precedent to bringing an action, the court stated that: "Reliance is placed upon the case of Morrow v. Barker, 119 Cal. 65, 51 P. 12. That case holds that no suit may be brought on a claim unless the claim be presented within the time limited by the notice to creditors. In that case, the claim was presented after the time limited in the notice. In the instant case, the claim was presented within the time mentioned in the notice to creditors and the claim and the action were both filed within one year after the appointment of the executors. We think the purpose and meaning of section 353, Code of Civil Procedure, is to extend the time within which to present claim and bring an action in the event of rejection. Since section 353, Code of Civil Procedure, expressly extends the time for bringing an action, a presentation of a claim at any time before action is barred is within time, provided it be filed within the time provided in the notice to creditors. Such was the view of this court, apparently, in the case of Barclay v. Blackinton, 127 Cal. 189, 59 P. 834, 835. In that case, the claim was presented to the administrator within one year after the death of the intestate, but suit was not brought thereon within the year allowed by section 353, Code of Civil Procedure. That year expired on March 2, 1897, and the action was not brought in time. However, the court said: 'After the 2d day of March, 1897, the claim was barred by the statute of limitations, and thereafter neither the administrator nor the court had the power to allow it'—thus assuming that section 353, Code of Civil Procedure, extended the time for filing claim as well as the time for bringing an action."

In this case the claim was presented within the time mentioned in the notice to creditors, and was presented before the action was barred, and, the claim having been allowed by the executrix and approved by the court, there was no necessity to file an action on the claim. It follows that, guided by the above-mentioned rules, it is clear that the executrix had the authority to allow the claim on November 3, 1927, and that the court did not err in approving the claim on December 2, 1927, and subsequently ordering and decreeing that the claim in question constituted a valid and subsisting claim against said estate.

The portion of the order of the trial court appealed from is therefore affirmed.

HURLEY v. HIBERNIA SAVINGS & LOAN SOC. et al.

Civ. 7872.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 26, 1932.

1. Husband and wife ⇨264.

Evidence sustained finding, in wife's action to determine ownership of deceased husband's deposit account, that deposits were made from husband's separate property.

It was clearly established that the original deposit by the deceased husband consisted of his separate funds, and there was evidence that additional deposits were made from proceeds of rentals of flats constituting deceased's separate property, and that aggregate amount of withdrawals from account exceeded total amount of additional deposits.

2. Joint tenancy ⇨3.

Finding that deposits in name of father or son, payable to either or survivor, constituted joint tenancy, held justified in view of entries (St. 1909, p. 90, § 16, as amended by St. 1915, p. 1139; Civ. Code, § 683).

3. Joint tenancy ⇨3.

Whether deposit created joint tenancy must, in absence of written declaration clearly disclosing intention, be determined from attending circumstances.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by Mary Hurley as special administratrix of the estate of Patrick J. Hurley, deceased, against the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society and Daniel Hurley, in which defendant last named filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for last-named defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Thomas R. McGrath and Joseph A. Brown, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Hugh K. McKevitt and Jack M. Howard, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

LANDIS, Justice pro tem.

This is an action to determine the ownership of a deposit of money with the defendant Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, and to declare a constructive trust in said money. Briefly stated, the complaint recites that Patrick Hurley died intestate on the 29th day of October, 1929; that plaintiff, Mary Hurley, was on October 30, 1929, appointed special administratrix; that plaintiff and Patrick J. Hurley were married May 26, 1918, at San Francisco; that on September 18, 1918, Patrick J. Hurley opened an account with the defendant bank with the community earnings and accumulations; that in case of death or need the same should be transferred or withdrawn in her favor; that having confidence in the promise of said Patrick J. Hurley, she permitted him to deposit the community earnings and savings in said bank; that notwithstanding said promise, said Patrick J. Hurley, in bad faith, opened said account in his name and in the name of defendant Daniel Hurley, payable to either or the survivor of them; that the amount involved is $1,697; and that the defendant Daniel Hurley has no right or interest in said moneys; that the amount on deposit at the time of the death of the deceased was $1,350.

The defendant Hibernia Savings & Loan Society answered, in effect taking the position of a mere stakeholder in the matter, and defendant Daniel Hurley, sometimes also known as Daniel F. Hurley, answered denying the allegations concerning the circumstances involved, and by cross-complaint claimed title to the money in question and sought a judgment quieting his title thereto.

Judgment went for defendant Daniel Hurley under his cross-complaint quieting his title to the money in question, and plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

There are some general allegations of fraud and undue influence set forth in the complaint, but at the trial appellant appears to have conceded that, at least in so far as respondent Daniel F. Hurley is concerned, no proof was made justifying such charge. In any event, such allegations derive no direct support from the evidence.

It is conceded by both appellant and respondent that there are but two questions involved: (1) Whether or not the money is separate property or community property; and (2) whether or not the deposit as worded constitutes a joint tenancy.

The evidence shows that Patrick Hurley died intestate October 29, 1929; Mary Hurley was on October 30, 1929, appointed special administratrix; appellant Mary Hurley and decedent were married May 26, 1918. This was a second marriage of both parties, the respondent Daniel Hurley being a son of decedent by a former marriage. The bank account which is the subject of the action was opened at the said Hibernia Bank on September 11, 1918; the first deposit of $700 was made by decedent in the company of his son, the respondent Daniel Hurley. This sum of $700 was withdrawn from an existing account in the Humboldt Bank, the funds of which were owned and deposited there by decedent on February 18, 1918, and prior to decedent's marriage with appellant. The present balance of the account, aggregating the sum of $1,213.96, which is the subject of controversy, is made up of the original deposit of $700, interest credits, and additional deposits made by decedent from time to time in amounts varying from $11 to $75, and from which is deducted withdrawals made by decedent from time to time in the amounts varying from $5 to $300.

The interest items aggregate the sum of $567.96; the deposits other than the original $700 deposit aggregate the sum of $951; and the aggregate amount of the withdrawals, $1,005.

The bank passbook shows the account was opened and carried in the name of Patrick Hurley or Daniel Hurley, a minor aged fourteen years eight months, and payable to either or to the survivor of them.

Daniel F. Hurley testified that at the time the account was opened, he was going away to school, and the morning before he was to leave, his father took him to the Humboldt Bank and withdrew an account in the name of Patrick J. Hurley and took him to the Hibernia Bank and placed it in the name of Patrick Hurley or Daniel F. Hurley; that it was decedent's understanding that if anything happened to him, that money would help respondent up through school, or any time he needed it, it would be there for him.

The book record shows that on August 29, 1923, the balance in the account which then amounted to $1,697.78 was withdrawn by decedent and redeposited by decedent on August 31, 1923. Daniel F. Hurley testified that he knew about said transaction and explained it as follows: He, referring to decedent, was at that time at the home of my uncle; he boarded there in the month of August, 1923; he had family difficulties at home; he was under the impression that his wife would go down to the bank and put an attachment against the money; the check was withdrawn and brought to the home of my uncle; he left it with him and his wife and it was redeposited in the Hibernia Bank.

The evidence shows that all deposits and all withdrawals were made by decedent. None was made by either Daniel F. Hurley or Mary Hurley.

That the original deposit of $700 and the accrued interest thereon were separate funds of decedent was very clearly established. With respect to the additional deposits, appellant relies upon, first, the legal presumption that property in the possession of either the husband or the wife at the time of his or her death is presumed to be community property; and, secondly, contends that such presumption is supported by her testimony, which in effect shows that during the time the additional deposits were made decedent was working, earning money, and was not accounting to her for all his earnings. That is the most that can be said in connection with the evidence relied upon to support the presumption. There is not a word of testimony showing that such earnings or any part thereof found their way into the account in question.

In support and justification of the inference or deduction made by the trial court that it was decedent's separate property, it was shown that decedent was a laboring man and that his earnings contributed not only to his own maintenance, but also to the support of appellant and children of appellant by a former marriage; that during the period of time the additional deposits were made decedent was receiving rentals from flats, conceded to be separate property, and in which flats respondent Daniel Hurley owned an undivided interest through inheritance from his mother, and it was testified by Daniel Hurley that the rental money was collected by decedent and deposited in the account at the Hibernia Bank in the name of his father and himself.

The evidence also shows that the aggregate amount of the withdrawals made from the account by decedent exceeds the total amount of the additional deposits, and also shows that while decedent was very sick and immediately before his death, an attempt was made to have him sign a writing said to be a release of the money in the bank. This he refused to sign.

[1] The question, then, is whether, upon the evidence hereinbefore set forth, a finding by the court that the property in question was the separate property of decedent could be held to be supported by the evidence.

In the case of Freese v. Hibernia Sav., etc., Soc., 139 Cal. 392, 73 P. 172, 173, the court says:

"While the presumption attending the possession of property by either husband or wife is that it is community property, such presumption is a disputable one, and may be controverted by other evidence. Respondents contend that the evidence of plaintiff was not legally sufficient to overcome this presumption. They rely upon expressions of this court in various cases to the effect that the fact that property is separate property of one of the spouses must be affirmatively established 'by clear and decisive proof,' 'by clear and satisfactory evidence,' and 'by clear and convincing evidence.' * * * Ballinger, in his work on Community Property, says, in section 167: 'It is not believed, however, that these terms should be considered as going to the length that their general meaning might import. Certainly it is not required that the proof to destroy this presumption should be any more than sufficient to satisfy the mind of court or jury that its weight is enough to cause a reasonable person, under all the circumstances, to believe in its sufficiency, in order to counterbalance the naked presumption that the property was acquired with the funds of the community. The property is merely considered as the property of the community until the contrary is shown by legal proof, and legal proof would seem to be a preponderance of the testimony under all the facts and circumstances of the particular case.' See, also, 6 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 327.

"Clearly, it was never intended by this court to lay down a rule requiring demonstration in such matters; that is, such a degree of proof as excluding possibility of error, produces absolute certainty. Civ. Code Proc. § 1826. Such proof is never required. * * * We are of the opinion that it is incumbent on the party seeking to overcome the presumption of community property to do no more than to produce such legal evidence as, under all the circumstances of the particular case, would ordinarily produce conviction in an unprejudiced mind, and that in the face of such evidence the naked presumption, unsupported by any testimony, must fall. In considering whether or not such a degree of proof has been attained, we have the right to consider such presumptions and inferences as are authorized by the law of evidence. That a presumption declared by law has its place in such a dispute was acknowledged by this court in Denigan v. San Francisco Savings Union, 127 Cal. 142, 147, 59 P. 390, 78 Am. St. Rep. 35. An inference is simply a deduction which the reason of the judge or jury makes from the facts proved, and, in considering a question of the character here involved, we have the same right to make such reasonable deduction from the facts proved as we have in considering other questions."

There was not a single circumstance shown by the evidence in aid of the presumption of community property, unless it be the circumstance that decedent having had possession of the money he received for his labor he could or might have deposited some of it in the bank. Not a word of evidence that he did, and the apparent inference of the trial court that he did not, is a reasonable deduction from the facts proved.

As before stated, the $700 and interest accrued thereon was very clearly established as separate property, and there is undisputed evidence that the rental money was separate property and was deposited in the account in question. Measured by the foregoing rules, we are unable to hold that the evidence given on the trial was not legally sufficient to support a finding that the property was separate property.

[2, 3] With respect to the question of whether or not the deposit as worded constitutes a joint tenancy, the evidence shows that the account was opened and made in the name of Patrick Hurley, or respondent Daniel Hurley, payable to either or to the survivor of them. The written evidence consists of the following: (1) On the bank book No. 520493 is written, both on the outside cover and on the inside immediately preceding the entries of the deposits, withdrawals, and balance, the following: "Patrick Hurley or Daniel Hurley a minor aged 14 yrs. 8 mos. Payable to either or to the survivor of them. In account with The Hibernia Savings and Loan Society." And (2) on a card retained by the bank, signed by each, Patrick Hurley and Daniel Hurley, there is written above the said signatures of the depositors, the following: "Patrick Hurley or Daniel Hurley A minor, aged 14 yrs. 8 mos. Payable to either or to the survivor of them. I hereby agree to the by-laws and rules of The Hibernia Savings and Loan Society as to all deposits and withdrawals made on this account," and below the signatures is shown identification information such as the residence, birthplace, mother's maiden name, etc. We are not aware of any Code provision or principle of law which would prevent decedent by this transfer of deposits from his sole account to a joint account from giving his son a joint interest or making him the joint owner with him in the latter deposit. Whether he intended to do so or not is the essential element to be considered, and if that clearly appears from the instruments executed by him and his son when he made the deposits in their names, we cannot look beyond those instruments. If it is clear on the question of intent the right of the parties must be determined solely from its consideration. No parol evidence could affect it.

Appellant urges the contention that there was no written agreement; in other words, that the above-mentioned written evidence does not constitute the written agreement required. Considering the above writings, although the bank book is not signed by the depositors and while the card which is signed by them may be but a mutual declaration of the father and the son as to the deposits, the particular question is: Do they clearly disclose an intention on the part of the father when the deposit was made by him to the account of himself and his son, to constitute it and further deposits the joint property of himself and his son? We do not perceive how any other reasonable construction can be given to the instruments than that he did. The written declaration as applying to him says so in express terms. The moneys were his before the deposit account was opened. He declares that as deposited by him it is not his separate property but the joint property of himself and his son. There is no ambiguity or uncertainty about this language. It was undoubtedly intended to and did create a joint interest or ownership in the deposit, and this being the intention, and as the right of survivorship applies to joint interests or ownerships of personal property, it must have been the intention of the deceased Hurley in declaring the deposit to be joint property to have intended that the incident which follows joint ownership should apply to it, and that upon his death his son should take the deposit as survivor. It was unnecessary to accompany the creation of the joint ownership with a declaration respecting survivorship. That follows as a legal incident to the creation of the joint interest and a matter which decedent must be held to have known and intended to effect by the clear creation of the joint interest.

The foregoing principles of law are abundantly supported by the following authorities: Section 16 of the Bank Act (as amended by St. 1915, p. 1139), as said section stood prior to its repeal in 1919 (St. 1919, p. 623, § 3), an excerpt from which read as follows: "When a deposit with a bank shall be made by any person in the names of such depositor and another person or persons, and in form to be paid to either or the survivor or survivors of them, such deposit thereupon and any additions thereto made by either of such persons upon the making thereof, shall become the property of such persons as joint tenants, and the same, together with all interest thereon, shall be held for the exclusive use of the persons so named," etc.; section 683 of the Civil Code; and the following cases: Estate of Gurnsey, 177 Cal. 211, 170 P. 402; Kennedy v. McMurray, 169 Cal. 287, 146 P. 647, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 515; Estate of Harris, 169 Cal. 725, 147 P. 967; Crowley v. Savings Union Bk., etc., Co., 30 Cal. App. 144, 157 P. 516; Crowley v. Savings Union Bank, etc., Co., 30 Cal. App. 535, 159 P. 194; McCarthy v. Holland, 30 Cal. App. 495, 158 P. 1045; and see, also, the cases of Reilly v. Filben, 107 Cal. App. 722, 291 P. 454; Hill v. Badeljy, 107 Cal. App. 598, 290 P. 637; Waters v. Nevis, 31 Cal. App. 511, 160 P. 1081; Halsted v. Central Bank, 36 Cal. App. 500, 172 P. 613. The general character of a joint tenancy account is set forth in the matter of the Estate of Gurnsey, supra, wherein it is held that in such a bank deposit the title does not pass to and vest in the survivor on the death of the cotenant, but rather each tenant is seized of the whole estate from the time of the creation of the account. No change occurs in title on the death of the cotenant, the survivor merely becoming the sole owner of the account of which he was already seized.

In 7 California Jurisprudence, at page 335, we find the following: "Perhaps the most common joint tenancy is that which is created in bank deposits," citing a long list of cases holding that a joint deposit constitutes a joint tenancy.

The cases cited by appellant, among which the case of Denigan v. Hibernia, etc., Society, 127 Cal. 137, 59 P. 389, is the leading case of the line of decisions relied upon, and which case is expressly referred to in the case of Conneally v. San Francisco S. & L. Soc., 70 Cal. App. 180, 232 P. 755, and Kennedy v. McMurray, supra, did not involve deposits with a right of survivorship expressed.

Finally, if it should be held that the written evidence does not measure up to the requirements necessary to constitute a written agreement and it could be said that no written agreement was executed between the parties to the deposit and accompanying its making, presenting the question as to the intention of the depositor in making the deposit in the form he did, whether he intended to make a gift, or create a joint interest in the deposit with right of survivorship, or to establish a trust as to any balance on deposit at his death, we must apply the rule that in the absence of any written instrument clearly disclosing his intention in those respects, such intention was open to inquiry and was to be determined from all the facts and circumstances connected with the deposit. The whole matter would rest in parol and it would be for the court to determine the intention from all the facts and circumstances proved in the case.

In this case, without again reciting the facts, suffice it to say it clearly appears that the facts and circumstances shown by the evidence were ample to support the conclusion of the trial court that the intention of decedent was to create a joint tenancy.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

ALVES v. ALVES.

Civ. 7780.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 24, 1932.

1. Divorce ⇐109.

Husband seeking divorce for desertion, on account of wife's refusal to change domicile, must show he has established new domicile and must show character and suitableness thereof; that he offered it to wife; and that wife unreasonably refused to comply with his selection (Civ. Code, §§ 95, 103).

2. Divorce ⇐133(3).

Evidence which merely showed refusal of wife to leave present home after husband secured work elsewhere held not to show desertion by wife justifying divorce (Civ. Code, §§ 95, 103).

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; H. V. Alvarado, Judge.

Action by Mary Alves against Manuel Alves for divorce, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint. From an interlocutory decree for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

C. W. White, of Hayward, for appellant.

J. E. Rodgers and A. F. Bray, both of Martinez, for respondent.

LANDIS, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff sued defendant for a divorce on the grounds of willful neglect and willful desertion. Defendant answered, and in a cross-complaint charged plaintiff with and sought a divorce from plaintiff upon the ground of willful desertion. The court denied the prayer of plaintiff's complaint and adjudged defendant entitled to a divorce upon the ground of willful desertion. This appeal is by the plaintiff from the interlocutory decree adjudging defendant entitled to the divorce.

In his cross-complaint respondent charges appellant's desertion as follows: "That on or about the 25th day of November, 1928, and more than one year last past, the said cross-defendant, disregarding the solemnity of her marriage vows, wilfully and without cause, deserted and abandoned the cross-complainant and ever since has, and continues so to wilfully and without cause abandon said cross-complainant and to live separate and apart from him, without any sufficient cause or any reason, and against his will and without his consent."

Appellant contends that the said interlocutory decree is not supported by and is contrary to the evidence, and is against law for the following reasons: (1) That there is no evidence showing willful desertion of defendant, by plaintiff; (2) that there was no corroboration of the claim of desertion, as required by section 130 of the Civil Code.

The following are the facts as set forth in respondent's brief, and appear to substantially cover the controlling facts, stated most favorably to respondent, to wit: Defendant testified that he left the then home of plaintiff and defendant at Hayward, because it was costing him too much money to live in town, and he had obtained work in the Bollinger canyon in Contra Costa county from a man named Silveira at the Bettencourt place; that Mrs. Alves stated to him that she would not move out into the country with him anywhere, that she would not leave her family which consisted of her sons and daughter, who were then living in Hayward.

"Q. And will you state to the court the circumstances under which you left? A. Well, the reason I left home, was because I was working up in the Bollinger canyon, for a party by the name of Silveira.

"Q. Is that on what they call the Bettencourt place? A. That is the Bettencourt place, and I couldn't—it was costing me too much money to live in town, and I told the wife that we had to move out of town. I didn't tell her that we were going to move up there. I just mentioned it to her, we had to pull out of town. She told me she wouldn't leave her family to move out in the country with me nowheres, so I just simply walked out. I told her I couldn't make it go in town. * * * We had our family all raised; the youngest girl was getting sixty-five dollars a month, and I couldn't make ends meet, so I just simply told her, 'We have to pull out of town.' 'Well,' she said, 'I wouldn't leave my family to go with you out in the country nowheres.' Of course she had an idea I was offered a house with Mr. Silveira, I was working for. He offered me a house free of charge to live. I never mentioned this to her, but she had an idea; she got it from the outside that I had a house I wanted to live in, and she told me she wouldn't leave the family to go out in the country nowhere, so I just dropped the matter there. * * *

"Q. When was it your wife told you she wouldn't live with you in the country anywhere? A. This was when I was working for this Mr. Silveira. That must have been along about in the month of November sometime. I had just been working there a short while. I had been working there just about a month and then I went home and I handed her thirty-five dollars. I said, 'Here's thirty-five dollars towards paying the house rent'; we were paying thirty-six dollars a month house rent in town, and she threw the money back at me. The youngest boy was with her; he was there. She threw the money back at me, and said, 'Keep the money; I don't want your money.' She said, 'My boys will help me keep up the house.' I said, 'All right.' I took the money and put it back in my pocket. She said I could come home. I felt I wasn't welcome at home; if I couldn't keep my home, I wasn't welcome; if my children had to keep a home for me, I wouldn't go home. I was willing to provide a home for her any place. I am willing to provide a home for her now, providing she moves where I can get employment. I couldn't get employment in Hayward. I haven't any trade; I work at farm work; she refuses to live out in the country with me. I have no way of traveling back and forth to my work; I have no machine. I am willing to provide a home for her now, if she is willing to live wherever I can get employment. * * *

"Q. How do you mean you felt you weren't welcome, in what way? A. Because they had no use for me, none of them. They haven't none of them come to see me since I left home. I think the least they could do, is come and see me, because I always provided for them, the same as any father could a family. * * *

"Q. Did you ever talk to your wife about coming to live with you in the country after that time in November, when she said she wouldn't live with you in the country? A. No, I did not.

"Q. Why not? A. because I knew it was no use.

"The court. Q. Is that because she told you before? A. Because she told me before she wouldn't come and live with me out in the country nowheres. There was no use in fighting with her, to come out, if she didn't want to come out. * * *

"The court. Q. Were your relations with your wife pleasant, at that time? Were you friendly with your wife at that time? A. We weren't on very good speaking terms, because she didn't want to move where I wanted to move. * * * I didn't tell her to come and live in Bollinger canyon. I told her we had to move out of town, because we couldn't make it in town, and she told me she wouldn't leave the family to live with me in the country no place, and the youngest boy said, 'No, you ain't taking mother to the "Styx" nowhere. We're keeping this house.' I said, 'All right, if you are keeping this house, you can go to it, I am out.' * * *

"Q. Was your wife there at the time when he said that? A. She was right there with him.

"Q. Did she make any remark? A.—But she didn't make any remark. * * *

"The court. Q. What kind of a home could you have provided for her in Bollinger canyon? A. There was a nice house in Bollinger canyon."

It is obvious that the decree must find support, if any, in the charge of desertion, under the provisions of section 103 of the Civil Code, whereby it is provided that "the husband may choose any reasonable place * * * of living, and if the wife does not conform thereto, it is desertion."

Briefly reviewing the evidence most favorable to respondent, it is shown that the parties had been living in Hayward about two years, in a rented house; defendant worked out at different places and finally went to work in the Bollinger canyon in Contra Costa county; he would return to the Hayward home first every week, and then every two weeks, and finally stayed away entirely. According to defendant's testimony, on one of the trips home in November he said to his wife, " 'We have to pull out of town.' * * * it was costing me too much money to live in town. * * * I didn't tell her that we were going to move up there [to Bollinger canyon]. I just mentioned it to her, we had to pull out of town. She told me she wouldn't leave her family to move out in the country with me nowheres, so I just simply walked out. I told her I couldn't make it go in town. * * * Of course she had an idea I was offered a house with Mr. Silveira, I was working for. He offered me a house free of charge to live. I never mentioned this to her, but she had an idea; she got it from the outside that I had a house I wanted to live in, and she told me she wouldn't leave the family to go out in the country nowhere, so I just dropped the matter there. * * * After that time in November, when she said she would not live with me in the country, I never talked to her about coming to live in the country, because I knew it was no use."

In the case of Bibb v. Bibb, 39 Cal. App. 406, 409, 179 P. 214, 215, and supported by abundant authorities therein cited, the court says: "Ordinarily the husband may choose the family domicile at pleasure. It is the wife's duty to follow his fortunes—'to go whither he goeth'—and abide in that place where it is most convenient for him to enjoy her society, and where he is able and willing to make provision for her support and that of his family. But his right to determine the family abode does not give him an entirely arbitrary power; it is not without its limitations. He is bound to provide and establish a suitable home for his wife, ere he can insist that she follow him. The law has limited his right to change the family abode. It is so limited that he can only 'choose any reasonable place of living.' Civ. Code, § 103. It is when, and only when, he has so chosen and established the new domicile, and, in good faith has made offer of the new abode to her, and she, without a sufficient cause, has refused to comply with his selection, that a cause of action for desertion arises."

[1, 2] In this case, the most that can be said in support of the wife's desertion is that she informed her husband that she would not follow him. There is no showing that defendant had established a new domicile; not a word of testimony that he had offered to her or requested her to go with him to any particular place. By affirmative evidence he must not only show that he has established a new domicile, but must show its character and its suitableness. Kenniston v. Kenniston, 6 Cal. App. 657, 92 P. 1037. No presumption in that regard can be indulged in his favor.

As said by the court in Bibb v. Bibb, supra: "It is not enough that, prior to his establishing the new domicile, she informs him she will not follow him. For, perchance, he may accede to her wishes and not make the change; or she, perhaps, when the new domicile shall have been actually chosen and established, may exercise a woman's privilege and change her mind. The law does not countenance a divorce for a mere disagreement as to whether a contemplated change shall or shall not be made. Her duty is to follow him if and when he actually moves to a new, but suitable, domicile. Until he moves she cannot follow. Nor is she in default until, having established a new domicile, he has offered it to her and requested her to follow him. Until such offer and request be made, and she [is] thereby informed as to the location and character of the place chosen by the husband, she cannot know whether it is a 'reasonable place of living.'"

And as said by the court in the case of Vosburg v. Vosburg, 136 Cal. 195, 204, 68 P. 694, 697: "* * * she was not guilty of desertion until he had made the choice, offered it to her, and she, without sufficient cause, had refused to comply with his selection." "* * * if it be his intention to visit upon his wife the penalty of her failure to follow him to the new domicile, he should present to her, in plain and unequivocal terms, the alternative of a compliance with his wishes or a surrender of all her conjugal rights. Hardenbergh v. Hardenbergh, 14 Cal. 654. Unless such alternative be so presented to her, it cannot readily be ascertained whether or not she harbors an actual intent to desert him; and the actual intent to desert is as much an essential ingredient of the desertion as is the voluntary separation itself. Civ. Code, § 95; Hardenbergh v. Hardenbergh, supra." Bibb v. Bibb, supra, at page 410 of 39 Cal. App., 179 P. 214, 215.

Defendant failed to present to his wife, clearly and definitely, the alternative of a compliance with his will to move to any particular place, or be deemed guilty of desertion.

Viewing the facts disclosed by the record in the light of these principles of law, we are constrained to hold that the trial court erred in granting a divorce to respondent.

Judgment reversed.

Appeals from Superior Court, Alameda County; John J. Allen, Judge.

Separate actions by John C. Young, as executor of the estate of William D. Young, also known as W. D. Young, deceased, against Emily B. Young, the First National Bank in Oakland, and John G. Shannonhouse, and against John G. Shannonhouse, which were consolidated for trial and tried together. From judgments for defendants, plaintiff appeals, and, by stipulation of the parties, the two appeals were consolidated and heard as one.

Affirmed.

Lawrence W. Young, of Fresno, and Trefts & Young, of San Francisco, for appellant.

George W. Lupton, Jr., of Oakland, for respondents John G. Shannonhouse and First National Bank in Oakland.

Randolph V. Whiting, of San Francisco, for respondent Emily B. Young.

GEORGE H. THOMPSON, Justice pro tem.

In these actions the plaintiff, as the executor of the last will of said William D. Young, deceased, sought to enforce a trust on certain personal property consisting of stocks and bonds alleged by the plaintiff to have been fraudulently and wrongfully taken by the said defendants, thereby depriving the estate of the said personal property. The defendants answered, denying these allegations, and alleging that Emily B. Young, the surviving wife of the decedent and one of the defendants herein, became the owner and legal possessor of these stocks and bonds, and that in regard to them she had done nothing wrongfully or fraudulently. The two actions were consolidated for trial by order of the trial court, and were tried together; and the trial court, finding in favor of the defendants, entered judgments accordingly. A new trial was denied by the court in each case. The plaintiff has appealed from each judgment, and by stipulation of the parties the two appeals have been consolidated and have been heard as one.

William D. Young died on November 14, 1928, at the age of sixty-nine years. For two days prior to his death he had been in a state of coma, and for some months prior to his death his health had been failing, and during that time he had exhibited manifestations of being afflicted with Parkinson's disease, a disease otherwise known as paralysis agitans. On September 12, 1928, he made the will that was admitted to probate, of which the plaintiff John C. Young is the executor.

William D. Young and the defendant Emily B. Young had been married for some thirty-one years, and it would appear that their married life was a happy and harmonious one, and that each entertained the greatest regard and respect for the other, and trusted the other at all times implicitly in all matters. All the property owned and possessed by them at the time of the death of the decedent was acquired by them subsequent to their marriage, and was the acquisition of the marital union. It appears that, by different agreements entered into by them, they sought to cast or transmute certain of their acquired property into a joint interest, in order to avail themselves of the advantages incident to such estate, as has been done quite commonly in California during recent years, illustrations of which appear in the following cases: Estate of Harris, 169 Cal. 725, 147 P. 967; Kennedy v. McMurray, 169 Cal. 287, 146 P. 647, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 515; Booth v. Oakland Bank of Savings, 122 Cal. 19, 54 P. 370; McCarthy v. Holland, 30 Cal. App. 495, 158 P. 1045; Kelly v. Woolsey, 177 Cal. 325, 170 P. 837; Williams v. Savings Bank of Santa Rosa, 33 Cal. App. 655, 166 P. 366; Halsted v. Central Savings Bank, 36 Cal. App. 500, 172 P. 613; Halsted v. Oakland Bank of Savings, 36 Cal. App. 816, 172 P. 614; Conneally v. San Francisco S. & L. Soc., 70 Cal. App. 180, 232 P. 755; Hill v. Badeljy, 107 Cal. App. 598, 290 P. 637; Estate of Gurnsey, 177 Cal. 211, 170 P. 402; McDougald v. Boyd, 172 Cal. 753, 159 P. 168; Estate of Nelson, 104 Cal. App. 613, 286 P. 439; Salles v. Loane, 204 Cal. 55, 266 P. 538.

As to the personal property in controversy —the stocks and bonds, the ownership and possession of which the surviving wife claims she acquired pursuant to and as the legal result of an agreement entered into by her with her said husband and by and with his consent—the question arising now herein is: Are the findings and the judgments of the court that Emily B. Young became such owner sustained by the record? As the facts will have to be weighed and considered in the light of the law of California in effect during the period of time involved, a reference will be made to certain of the sections of the Civil Code deemed applicable:

"The ownership of property by several persons is either: 1. Of joint interests; 2. Of partnership interests; 3. Of interests in common; 4. Of community interest of husband and wife." Section 682.

"A joint interest is one owned by several persons in equal shares, by a title created by a single will or transfer, when expressly declared in the will or transfer to be a joint tenancy, or when granted or devised to executors or trustees as joint tenants." Section 683.

"An interest in common is one owned by several persons, not in joint ownership or partnership." Section 685.

"Every interest created in favor of several persons in their own right is an interest in common, unless acquired by them in partnership, for partnership purposes, or unless declared in its creation to be a joint interest, as provided in section six hundred and eighty-three, or unless acquired as community property." Section 686.

"Community property is property acquired by husband and wife, or either, during marriage, when not acquired as the separate property of either." Section 687.

"Transfer is an act of the parties * * * by which the title to property is conveyed from one living person to another." Section 1039.

"A voluntary transfer is an executed contract, subject to all rules of law concerning contracts in general; except that a consideration is not necessary to its validity." Section 1040.

"A transfer may be made without writing, in every case in which a writing is not expressly required by statute." Section 1052.

"Either husband or wife may enter into any engagement or transaction with the other, or with any other person, respecting property, which either might if unmarried; subject, in transactions between themselves, to the general rules which control the actions of persons occupying the confidential relations with each other, as defined by the title on trusts." Section 158.

"A husband and wife may hold property as joint tenants, tenants in common, or as community property." Section 161.

[1] The foregoing sections of the Civil Code were in effect during the time of the acquisition of the property in controversy and during the time of all dealings had by William D. Young and his wife concerning such property. It is quite clear under the law that any property acquired as the separate property of either (section 687, Civ. Code), or any property made separate property (joint) by a transmutation effected by the husband and wife during the married relation, would not constitute or be community property of the parties at the time of the death of the decedent, for a community estate and a joint tenancy cannot exist at the same time in the same property. Siberell v. Siberell (Cal. Sup.) 7 P.(2d) 1003, 1005.

[2-5] As mentioned heretofore, the property concerning which there is controversy herein is personal property, stocks and bonds. As between the husband and wife the property interest therein was subject to oral contract: a transfer could likewise be made without writing. That a husband and wife, at least as between themselves, may enter into a binding agreement that any certain property shall not thereafter be held as community property, but instead as a joint tenancy, with all the characteristics of such an estate, has long been recognized in California, and, as the law (section 1052, Civ. Code) does not require the execution of a writing to effect a transfer of personal property, it follows that a joint tenancy in personal property may be created by an oral agreement by which the title to the property is transferred to two persons as joint tenants. Estate of Harris, supra; Kennedy v. McMurray, supra. Even to establish a joint tenancy account in a bank under the Bank Act, a formal written agreement between the depositors is not necessary. Section 15a of the Bank Act (added by St. 1921, p. 1367, § 5, as amended) does not require it (Hill v. Badelj, supra, at page 605 of 107 Cal. App., 290 P. 637), and, prior to the enactment of said section 15a, the language of the Bank Act, then section 16, which in this regard was substantially the same as appears in section 15a, did not require it. When a husband and wife by agreement declare that a certain fund or certain money shall thereafter be held by them as a joint tenancy, the effect of such an agreement is, as between them, to create a joint interest or estate in the property to which it relates, and thereafter such property ceases to be community property. Estate of Gurnsey, supra; In re Finley, 103 Cal. App. 694, 284 P. 941. The Civil Code lays down a definition for "joint interest"; and at one time, regardless of the asserted technical essentials of joint tenancy under the common law, designated as a joint tenancy, the relation between the spouses created by a declared homestead (Schuler v. Sav. & L. Soc., 64 Cal. 397, 1 P. 479); the right of survivorship being attached to such relation. Under sections 158 and 159 of the Civil Code, it is now well settled that husband and wife may, as between themselves, enter into any contract respecting property which either might if unmarried. Under this plenary authority, the separate property of each may be converted into community property, and the community property of both may likewise be converted into separate property of both or either. Perkins v. Sunset Tel. & Tel. Co., 155 Cal. 712, 719, 720, 103 P. 190, and cases cited; Siberell v. Siberell, supra, at page 1004 of 7 P.(2d).

[6] The personal property concerning which the plaintiff seeks to enforce a trust comprises: (1) A certificate for 100 shares of Union Oil Associates; (2) the contents of the safe deposit box. The certificate for the 100 shares of Union Oil Associates was at the Crocker National Bank of San Francisco, and the safe deposit box was at the French American Bank in San Francisco. Between November 10, 1928, and the date of her husband's death, November 14, 1928, Mrs. Young took over the foregoing, claiming that she did so with the consent of her husband expressly given by him prior to his decease. As to the certificate for 100 shares of Union Oil Associates at the Crocker National Bank, it appears that in January, 1913, at a time when provisions (section 16) substantially the same as section 15a of the Bank Act made such a deposit the property of the depositors as joint tenants, Mr. and Mrs. Young opened an account with the Crocker National Bank under an agreement, signed by them both, concerning such "Deposit Account" reading as follows: "All moneys now or at any time deposited by us, or either of us, or by any person whomsoever with The Crocker National Bank of San Francisco to the credit of the above account, are and shall be so deposited by us and received by it upon the following terms and conditions of repayment, namely; that the amount thereof shall be paid by The Crocker National Bank of San Francisco to us, or either of us, or to the survivor of us, or to the executors, administrators or assigns, of such survivor, subject to the statute relating to inheritance and succession taxes and all the rules and regulations made pursuant thereto; or upon the written order of any such person so entitled to payment; and without reference to the original ownership of the moneys deposited."

It appears under the evidence that William D. Young in June, 1926—in this transaction as the representative of and the agent of the joint tenancy (Simpson v. Bergmann, etc., et al. (Cal. App.) 13 P.(2d) 531 et seq.), for it does not appear otherwise—purchased from this joint account the 100 shares of Union Oil Associates later evidenced by this certificate; that the certificate though issued to William D. Young was by him indorsed in blank "William D. Young" and left at the bank; no other disposition thereof having been made by him. This certificate was later, in November, 1928, turned over to Mrs. Young by the bank at her request. Under the situation so appearing, embracing as it does the fact that the certificate for the 100 purchased shares was indorsed in blank by Mr. Young, when the presumption is applied that what was done was done in good faith and for the joint tenancy and not in violation of the rights of the parties under their joint tenancy agreement, as we think it must, we can see no basis for holding that a transmutation to community property was accomplished thereby or that there was any intention to accomplish such transmutation. Under the circumstances here presented, the taking of or the issuing of the certificate in the name of William D. Young was but a step necessary to the purchase under the circumstances, and is not entitled to be regarded as otherwise. We do not think that the finding and judgment of the trial court is against the record in this particular.

[7] As to the contents of the safe deposit box, it appears that in May, 1916, Mr. and Mrs. Young rented a safe deposit box at the French American Bank in San Francisco. In a writing then executed by them, there is set forth among other things the following declaration of the parties: "We hereby declare that all the contents of said safe now or hereafter placed therein, are our joint property and that the title and right of ownership thereto and to the whole thereof rests in the survivor of us as his or her separate property." Such was the agreement of the parties. As between themselves, they had the right to make this agreement. It must therefore be considered a binding agreement as between them. It is not necessary to travel outside of the facts of this case, for we have here to deal with only the situation of fact that is presented. Restricted to the facts of this case, it cannot be said that there was any uncertainty involved in the undertaking and agreement of the parties or that the said agreement worked harm to either in any way. They each knew what they were doing and what they wished to accomplish. There is no claim that the personal property was placed in the safe deposit box by any outside party or that outside parties had tampered with this personal property or had had anything to do with the placing of it in this safe deposit box. Admittedly it was placed there by Mr. Young and at a time when there could be no question concerning his ability to realize what he was doing; he was then fully himself, and was aware of just what such act meant under the terms of the agreement just mentioned, and without question he attached to his act the meaning and effect the two parties had contemplated. In the situation presented, we do not perceive anything in the record or in the law applicable thereto that should be held to destroy the effect of this agreement and to nullify what was evidently done in pursuance of and in reliance on its terms.

[8] Under this view, the fact that William D. Young held for John G. Shannonhouse 22 of the 72 shares, the Texas Corporation, evidenced by the certificate, does not help plaintiff, for plaintiff is in no way concerned with any property other than community property. Moreover, the defendant Emily B. Young has not contested the claim of Shannonhouse, but has admitted Shannonhouse's ownership.

The record and the contentions of appellant in connection therewith have been carefully read and considered, but we find no sufficient reason for disturbing the judgments of the trial court. The judgments are affirmed.

WOOD v. WOOD.

Civ. 989.

Reviewing court on appeal upon judgment roll assumes every necessary step was taken to support judgment.

Order awarding support money and counsel fees in separate maintenance action held authorized, where entered after amendment conferring such power on court, though action was commenced before amendment (Civ. Code, § 137, as amended by St. 1927, p. 441, § 2, and by St. 1929, p. 160).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Guerin, Judge.

Action by Lulu G. Wood against Lee C. Wood for separate maintenance. From a judgment awarding maintenance and attorney's fees, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

E. O. Leake, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

S. S. Hahn, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MARKS, J.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of Los Angeles county awarding to respondent $100 per month for her support and maintenance during the period of one year, and the sum of $100 attorney's fees expended by her for the prosecution of the action.

The complaint was filed on the 12th day of August, 1929. The cause was tried on September 24, 1929, and the judgment filed on October 7th of the same year.

Appellant presents but two grounds for reversal of the judgment which are necessary for us to consider on this appeal. He maintains: First, that the portion of the judgment awarding attorney's fees to the respondent, gave her this money as fees for past services of the attorney; and, second, that as the action was commenced on August 12, 1929, and the amendment of that year to section 137 of the Civil Code did not go into effect until the 14th day of August, 1929 (St. 1929, p. 160), the amended portion of the section could not be held effective in so far as this action is concerned.

[1] This is an appeal upon the judgment roll. We must, therefore, assume that every necessary step was taken in the court below to support the judgment. E. E. McCalla Co. v. Sleeper, 105 Cal. App. 562, 288 P. 146. We may therefore assume, in support of the award of attorney's fees, that an order to show cause was duly and regularly issued after August 14, 1929, requiring appellant to show cause why he should not be required to pay a reasonable attorney's fee for the services of respondent's attorney; that this order to show cause was duly set down for hearing and heard; and that upon stipulation of both parties the trial court reserved a decision upon the question of attorney's fees until the trial of the case and the rendition of judgment, and that the portion of the judgment awarding attorney's fees was, in effect, a decision of the trial court upon the order to show cause made after such stipulation and the reservation of such ruling.

[2] The right to award a party support money and counsel fees in a separate maintenance action is based upon the provisions of section 137 of the Civil Code. It is contended by appellant that by an amendment to this section (Stats. 1927, p. 441, § 1), changing the opening words of the fourth sentence of the section from "During the pendency of such action" to "During the pendency of an action for divorce," the trial court was deprived of the right to award respondent support money or attorney's fees as the action was commenced during the time this amendment of 1927 was in effect, and before the amendment of 1929 took effect.

The section was amended in 1929 (Stats. 1929, p. 160), effective August 14, 1929, which restored the language of this part of the section, already quoted, which was changed by the amendment of 1927, and restored to the court, if it was ever taken away, the right to award support money and attorney's fees in a separate maintenance action.

The contention of the appellant has been effectually disposed of by the Supreme Court in the case of McClurg v. McClurg, 212 Cal. 15, 297 P. 27, 28, in which action the defendant husband sought to recover from the plaintiff wife costs and attorney's fees to prosecute an appeal from an order of the trial court, under the provisions of the amendment of 1927 to section 137 of the Civil Code, which became effective July 29, 1927 (Stats. 1927, p. 441). The action was instituted on April 24, 1927, prior to the taking effect of this amendment, which for the first time gave a husband the right to apply for such attorney's fees and costs. The order awarding them to him was made on September 23, 1927. In holding that the amendment was effective in so far as a pending action is concerned, the Supreme Court said:

"The order which the court did make, from which this appeal is taken, was made under the express provisions of section 137 of the Civil Code as amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 441), and by which amendment the terms of the original section were broadened so as to permit a husband to apply for and receive alimony, counsel fees, and costs in an action for divorce.

"The appellant, however, further contends that, since this action was commenced on April 4, 1927, and since section 137 of the Civil Code did not, as to said amendment thereof, become effective until August, 1927, the section as thus amended cannot be given retroactive effect so as to have application to an action commenced prior to the adoption and taking effect of the amendment; and that for this further reason the trial court had no jurisdiction to make the order appealed from herein. This contention is also without merit. The provision of the Civil Code embraced in section 3 thereof, providing that 'no part of it is retroactive, unless expressly so declared,' has been held to have no application to purely procedural matters arising in the course of a litigation commenced before the passage or amendment of a law affecting the procedure in civil actions. 23 Cal. Jur. 632, § 28, and cases cited; Sutherland on Stat. Construction (2d Ed.) § 674; Rice v. Dunlap, 205 Cal. [133], 134, 137, 270 P. 196; Maguire v. Cunningham, 64 Cal. App. 536, 222 P. 838. Whether, however, the said order of the trial court directing the plaintiff to pay to the defendant counsel fees and costs in order to enable him to prosecute his former appeal was a procedural or a substantive order, it was an order made after the statute had become effective permitting the trial court to make such orders in actions pending for divorce, and was not therefore retroactive in character or effect, and was not, therefore, susceptible to the attack made upon it upon this appeal."

The appellant has attempted to appeal from an order of the trial court awarding support money pendente lite to respondent. The clerk's transcript contains a copy of a minute order made on August 29, 1929, whereby the court recited the issuance of an order to show cause and awarded the respondent $100 a month as support money during the pendency of the action. No formal order appears in the record, although it is stated in the brief of respondent that such formal order was made, signed, and entered after that date. The notice of appeal was filed on November 1, 1929. We deem it unnecessary to decide whether the record properly presents this order for review. If it were properly before us, it would have to be affirmed. McClurg v. McClurg, supra.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

Evidence held to support finding that employee received in course of employment accidental injury causing infection of hand.

Certiorari to Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceedings under Workmen's Compensation Act by Peter Serna, claimant, opposed by the Kahn Construction Company, employer, and the Royal Indemnity Company, insurance carrier. From an award of the Industrial Commission, the insurance carrier and the employer bring certiorari.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

Petitioners asked this court to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission rendered in favor of Peter Serna against Kahn Construction Company and its insurance carrier, Royal Indemnity Company. The commission found that Serna had sustained an injury arising out of and in the course of his employment by the Kahn Construction Company, caused by running a steel sliver into his right hand, resulting in infection.

The facts are as follows: On the dates December 22, 23, 26, and 27 of 1930, Serna was employed by the Kahn Construction Company, building contractors, in the capacity of laborer; his duties including that of assisting in the handling of steel plates about sixteen inches square and one or one and one-half inches thick, which were used in the construction of the building. While so engaged, according to the witness Martinez, who was working with him on December 27th, at about a quarter to four in the afternoon Serna said to him in Spanish, "I thought I got a sliver." The witness was asked:

"Did you understand him to say at that time that he got a sliver in his hand? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. That was on the last day that you worked together for the Kahn Construction Company? A. Yes."

The facts further show that on December 29, 1930, Serna entered the employ of Preston Brothers, subcontractors under the general contractor Kahn Construction Company; that while working for Preston Brothers his work consisted in the handling of bricks; that after working a while Serna noticed that the skin on the thumb of his right hand was worn down almost to the flesh; but that there was no wound and that the hand did not bleed. Serna testified that after working for Preston Brothers four hours or thereabouts he had soreness in both the thumb and wrist of his right hand; that he worked the day following, his wrist being still sore; and that it began to swell. Serna then went to his home and stayed there until January 2d, when a doctor was sent for who immediately instructed that Serna be taken to a hospital, where he remained about six weeks, undergoing two operations on his hand while there.

Petitioners' contention is that the evidence does not justify or support the findings of fact, and in particular that the finding of fact that Serna sustained an injury on or about December 26th arising out of and in the course of his employment by Kahn Construction Company, is not supported by any substantial evidence.

Petitioners rely in particular upon a part of Serna's testimony which is as follows:

"Q. Did you have any accident during the four days that you worked for the Kahn Construction Company? A. Accident, you say?

"Q. Yes. A. No, sir.

"Q. Nothing unusual happened to you during this four days? A. No, sir, nothing.

"Q. Did you have any accident during the day that you worked for Preston Brothers on December 29th? A. No, sir; the only thing I noticed was about four or six hours after I started to working, the bricks wore out my thumb tips to almost bleeding. * * *

"Q. Do you recall at this time of anything happening to either hand or either finger or thumb while you were handling these steel plates? A. No, sir.

"Q. You heard Mr. Martinez' testimony? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Do you have any recollection of saying anything like that to him? A. Well, I never say that I got a splinter in there. I never know I got one.

"Q. I am asking you, do you remember of saying anything like that to him? A. No, sir; I did not say nothing like that." (Italics ours.)

In his original application Serna stated that his injury was received by handling bricks, and he so stated to one of the doctors who attended him, and in his testimony stated: "I think it comes from the brick because when I started to work in the brick on the 29th in the morning I had nothing in my hand. I am sure it was in perfect condition; both of my hands were in perfect condition." The referee questioned Martinez very carefully as is shown by the following:

"Did Serna tell you that he got this sliver from one of these pieces of iron? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. One of these pieces that he was handling that minute? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Right then? A. Right then."

Petitioners claim that any effect of this last-quoted testimony falls in the face of the testimony of Serna regarding this incident. It should be noted that Serna was a Mexican and this purported conversation had between Serna and Martinez was in Spanish, and that Dr. Gaulden, while attempting to elicit information from Serna regarding his injury, was put to the necessity of having a Spanish interpreter present. The foreman of the Kahn Construction Company testified that Martinez came to him and told him of the injury to Serna's hand as follows:

"Q. * * * Did you at any time while foreman for the Kahn Construction Company receive notice from anyone on the job that Mr. Serna had received an injury? A. Yes, I did, through another man; Mr. Martinez told me; that is the first I heard. * * *

"Q. Did Mr. Martinez mention to you some injury to Mr. Serna before Mr. Serna left your crew? A. That I could not say exactly. Mr. Serna did not tell me that he had hurt his hand. Mr. Martinez came alone and said to me: 'Mr. Serna has hurt his hand.' Then I ask him how, and all about it. At that time he was working for the Preston Brothers, that is the time Martinez told me, but you see there is a time there between the time they were talking together and the time Martinez came over to me; we just happened to speak about it. * * *

"Q. To your recollection did Mr. Serna ever work for the Kahn Construction Company after Mr. Martinez told you of this alleged injury to Mr. Serna? A. No. He went from under me over to Preston Brothers and that was all that I had with him.

"Q. Then he was working for Preston Brothers at the time Mr. Martinez told you about this? A. As near as I can remember. * * *

"Q. Mr. McFarlane did Mr. Martinez state to you that Mr. Serna had received an injury on the Kahn Construction job, and did Mr. Martinez make that statement to you while Mr. Serna was still working on the Preston job? A. As near as I can remember he did."

It would seem that such an incident as described by Martinez and McFarlane actually did take place but that Serna had forgotten it, and the referee who is the judge of the credibility, manner, and demeanor of the witnesses made this statement in his decision: The applicant, himself, is a Mexican and beyond the fact that he was working and became sick with a badly infected hand, he is not able to give very much light upon either the date of the beginning of infection or as to whether he was working for Preston Brothers or the Kahn Construction Company. Dr. Gaulden testified, in part, as follows:

"He (applicant) told me his hand became sore handling bricks. He could not speak English, and I could not speak in Spanish, and we could not find out much about what had happened.

"Q. Did you question him through an interpreter? A. Yes."

Petitioners rely upon the testimony of Dr. Gaulden to the effect that the infection which originated in the hand is only one of "20 or 30" places where it might have come from, such as the teeth, tonsils, intestinal tract, etc., and that an infection localized in the hand and arm is no indication that the germ causing the infection entered at the hand or arm; that it may have entered from any other part of the body and localized in the hand and arm. But Dr. Gaulden also stated that there might have been an entry of infection without visible evidences as to the point of entry. Dr. Gaulden also agreed with Dr. Jones that the development of symptoms on the same day as an injury would be a mighty short time for either a streptococcic or staphylococcic infection.

On the other hand, the respondent contends that the report of Dr. Jones, together with the testimony of Martinez and McFarlane, justifies the finding of the commission. Dr. Jones says: "He presents no history of having received an injury upon December 26th which is mentioned in the record. If this applicant had received an injury in the nature of a penetrating wound upon the aforementioned date, it could have caused an infection with subsequent cellulitis, which necessitated operation seven days later. The record is somewhat clouded concerning the history of such injury, but the incubation period is correct for the pathology which was found upon January 2, 1931. Upon December 29th and 30th, this applicant was handling bricks, and his finger tips became tender, but he reports no open lesion upon his thumb or fingers as the result of this type of work. In fact, he reports that he wore gloves upon his right hand, the second day that he worked at this occupation. It was the night of December 30th when the thumb and wrist became painful and swollen. An injury due to handling bricks causing a swelling of the thumb and wrist, within a twenty-four-hour period, would have to be a virulent infection. Such an infection extending with such great rapidity would have to have been of a streptococcic type, and undoubtedly would have proven fatal."

Under this condition of the record we find ourselves unable to say that there is no substantial evidence to sustain the finding of the commission. While it is true that the respondent Serna was unable to remember the sliver incident testified to by Martinez and reported by him to McFarlane, nevertheless the scientific testimony, together with common knowledge, supports the conclusion that an infection occurring during the time that Serna was working for Preston Brothers could not in all probability have achieved the mischief manifest in the employee in so short a time. As Dr. Jones testifies, an infection so virulent "undoubtedly would have proven fatal." The incident of the sliver, however, checks with scientific observations and experience, i. e., to again quote the last-named physician, "the incubation period is correct for the pathology which was found upon January 2, 1931."

Award affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Eugene Daney, Jr., Judge.

Action by the Rancho Santa Margarita, a corporation, against the County of San Diego. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Hunsaker & Cosgrove, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MORTON, Justice pro tem.

The assessed valuation of a portion of plaintiff's ranch in San Diego county, as determined by the county assessor, was raised by the board of equalization of the county in July, 1929, after a hearing on the matter of which plaintiff had due notice. The raise in assessed valuation increased plaintiff's taxes $20,479.25. Under written protest as provided in section 3819 of the Political Code, plaintiff paid all of its taxes for the year 1929–30 and brought suit for a refund of $20,479.25. It alleged the action of the board of equalization was illegal and void. Defendant county duly answered, the action was tried without a jury, and judgment was for the plaintiff, from which defendant appeals.

The findings show that Tax Factors, Inc., pursuant to an agreement with the board of supervisors, made a survey and valuation of all real property located within San Diego county and filed with the board a series of schedules showing their appraised values, which schedules included the lands of the plaintiff. That prior to July 1, 1929, the county assessor, in the preparation of his assessment roll for the fiscal year 1929–30, placed a valuation of 40 per cent. of the value fixed by the report of Tax Factors, Inc., on all the real property in the county. That on the 15th of July, 1929, the board of supervisors, sitting as a board of equalization at a regular meeting of which plaintiff had notice, adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas, the lands of the Santa Margarita Rancho y Los Flores, have been valued for the purpose of tax assessment by the Tax Factors, Inc., and

"Whereas, Such valuation was made upon a basis of discounting any available water service or supply possible for the coast lands of reasonable immediate development; and

"Whereas, This board, acting as a board of equalization, has reviewed the lands of said Rancho and made particular inquiry and examination into values at which these lands may be readily sold, and gathered testimony and data showing that the same are greatly undervalued; and

"Whereas, It is the opinion of this board that there is sufficient justification, if the lands were handled with regard to the highest utility, to greatly increase the appraised values of certain land over that figure placed by Tax Factors, Inc.;

"Therefore, Be It Resolved: That that part of the coastal plane within the boundaries of the Santa Margarita Rancho and lying between the San Luis Rey River on the South, the Pacific Ocean on the West, and more particularly described as follows: Sections 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15, 16, 22, Township 11 S., R. 5 W., containing 3260 acres of arable land, within Oceanside school district, as shown on the assessor's books of San Diego County, be raised the sum of $64 per acre, assessed value or a total assessed valuation of $208,640.00.

"That lands lying along the Pacific ocean within the Santa Margarita Rancho, and more particularly described as follows: Sections 18, 19, 20, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, Township 10 S., R. 5 W., and Sections 2, 3, 4, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 23, 24, 25, Township 10 S., R. 6 W., containing 7640 acres arable land within West Fallbrook DeLuz and Libby school districts, as shown on the assessor's books of San Diego County, be raised the sum of $46 per acre assessed value, or a total assessed valuation of $351,440;

"That lands lying along Pacific ocean within the Santa Margarita Rancho, and more particularly described as follows: Sections 19, 29, 30, Township 9 S., R. 6 W., and Sections 13, 14, 15, 22, 23, 24, 25, Township 9 S., R. 7 W., containing 1370 acres arable land, within San Onofre school district, as shown on the assessor's books of San Diego County, be raised the sum of $58.40 per acre, assessed value, or a total assessed valuation of $80,008.

"Be It Further Resolved: That the proper authorized official be and is hereby authorized to make such computations and adjustments as will be necessary to conform to the order as above set forth, and apportion the amounts to the various sections listed as hereinabove set forth, in accordance with the arable lands suitable for subdivision, as they may appear upon the records of the classification of such lands as prepared for this board by Tax Factors, Inc.

"Mr. Hurley: Mr. Chairman, in requesting the Board's representative Mr. Mueller to compile these figures he was also requested and I notice it was left out, that there be an increased valuation on the lands adjoining West Fallbrook, the dry farming land, along the lines at Morra to conform more readily with the lines on the outside of the ranch which we find it does not do, therefore I add to that resolution that the value of ten per cent be placed upon the so-called dry farming lands along that line."

That after some discussion among the members of the board the resolution, with this addition, was unanimously adopted. Following this action, or early in the morning of the 16th of July, 1929, the board of equalization duly and regularly adjourned as a board of equalization for the year 1929. That pursuant to the foregoing resolution the assessment roll was amended on or about July 17, 1929, to show the valuations fixed by the board of equalization on the parcels of land specified therein; that the assessments or valuations so entered on the assessment roll were supplied and furnished to the deputy county assessor making the entries by one Richard W. Miller, a person then in the employ of the board of supervisors. Finding VII further holds: "That there is not in the records of Tax Factors, Inc., nor in any official records of said County of San Diego, any classification sheets or classification plats or other records or data containing any reference to, or indicating the extent or location of, the arable lands in said sections referred to in said resolution of July 15, 1929, or the lands suitable for subdivision purposes whether arable or not. That said Richard W. Miller, in preparing the figures constituting the assessments or valuations so entered on said assessment roll, on, to wit, the said 17th day of July, 1929, by said Gordon R. Sears (a Deputy County Assessor) and appearing in said schedule No. Two (2) of said Exhibit 'A' under said title 'Valuation by Board of Equalization', relied upon the classification plats of the Tax Factors, Inc., and his own knowledge of the location and slopes of said lands, and in ascertaining arable lands suitable for subdivision relied partly upon his individual knowledge, judgment and discretion in determining what lands were arable and what arable lands were suitable for subdivision purposes."

The remaining findings of fact and conclusions of law will be set out verbatim.

"IX. That thereafter, and subsequent to said 17th day of July, 1929, and subsequent to said adjournment of July 15, 1929, of said Board of Equalization for the year 1929, said Board of Supervisors on, to wit, July 22, 1929, without notice to the plaintiff of its intention then and there so to do, and without any notice to the plaintiff, and without the knowledge of the plaintiff, held a meeting and transacted business as a Board of Equalization, and at such meeting passed and adopted, as a Board of Equalization, a resolution reading as follows:

" 'Whereas, on July 15th, 1929, the Board of Supervisors sitting as the Board of Equalization made its resolution raising the assessment of certain lands mentioned therein, and being in the Santa Margarita Rancho y Los Flores, and

" 'Whereas, that portion of the original resolution raising the assessment 10% on those lands adjacent to West Fallbrook, "the Moro" and other places, which were specified by Tax Factors, Inc., as dry farming lands. is incapable of definite ascertainment, and the said lands not being classified by Tax Factors, Inc., as "dry Farming" lands, said portion of the original resolution is hereby rescinded.

" 'Whereas, the resolution as written did not correctly state the intention of this Board, it is, therefore on motion of Supervisor Hurley, seconded by Supervisor Aul ordered that said resolution, be, and the same is hereby corrected, in order to state the true intention of this Board, to read as follows:

" 'Whereas, The lands of the Santa Margarita Rancho y Los Flores, have been assessed for taxation purposes by the County Assessor, and

" 'Whereas, Such assessment was made upon a basis of discounting any available water service or supply possible for the coast lands of reasonable immediate development, and

" 'Whereas, This Board, acting as a Board of Equalization has reviewed the lands of said Rancho and made particular inquiry and examination into values at which these lands may be readily sold, and gathered testimony and data showing that the same are greatly undervalued, and has heard the testimony of the witnesses herein, and having considered the same. It is the opinion of this Board that if the lands were handled with regard to the highest utility, the assessed values of certain land over that figure placed by the County Assessor, should be greatly increased therefore " 'Be It Resolved: That that portion of the coastal plane within the boundaries of the Santa Margarita Rancho lying between the Southeasterly boundary of said Rancho on the South, the Pacific Ocean on the West and the Orange-San Diego County line on the North, and more particularly described as follows: Sections 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15, 16, 22, Twp. 11 South, Range 5 West, containing 3260 acres of arable land, within Oceanside School District, as shown on the Assessor's books of San Diego County, be raised the sum of $64.00 per acre, assessed value, or a total assessed valuation of $208,640.00. That lands lying along the Pacific Ocean within the Santa Margarita Rancho, and more particularly described as follows: Sections 18, 19, 20, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, Twp. 10 South, Range 5 West, and Sections 2, 3, 4, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 23, 24, 25, Twp. 10 South, Range 6 West, containing 7640 acres arable land, within West Fallbrook De Luz and Libby School District, as shown on the Assessor's Books of San Diego County, be raised the sum of $46.00 per acre assessed value, or a total assessed valuation of $351,440.00.

" 'That land lying along the Pacific Ocean within the Santa Margarita Rancho, and more particularly described as follows: Sections 19, 29, 30, Twp. 9 South, Range 6 West, and Sections 13, 14, 15, 22, 23, 24, 25, Twp. 9 South, Range 7 West, containing 1370 acres arable land, within San Onofre School District, as shown on the Assessor's Books of San Diego County, be raised the sum of $58.40 per acre, assessed value, or a total assessed valuation of $80,008.00.

" 'Be It Further Resolved, That the proper authorized official be, and is hereby authorized to make such computations and adjustments as will be necessary to conform to the order as above set forth, and apportion the amounts to the various sections listed as hereinabove set forth, in accordance with the arable lands suitable for subdivision, as they may appear upon the records of the classification of such lands as prepared for this Board by Tax Factors, Inc.'

"X. That subsequent to the adoption of said resolution of July 22, 1929, no alterations were made or entered in said assessment book or assessment roll relating to any parcel of real property of the plaintiff and no change or alteration in said assessment roll or assessment book concerning valuations of any parcel of said real property of the plaintiff was made by the Clerk of the Board of Supervisors of said county or by any other person, upon the authorization of said resolution of said Board of Equalization, other than said alterations made on said 17th day of July, 1929, as herein found, pursuant to said resolution of July 15, 1929.

"XI. That the alterations and changes made in said assessment book or assessment roll of the assessments or assessed valuations of the various parcels of real property of the plaintiff described in said Schedule No. Two (2) of said Exhibit 'A' from the amounts and valuations shown under the heading 'Valuation by Assessor' to the amounts and valuations shown under the heading 'Valuation by Board of Equalization,' made on, to wit, the 17th day of July, 1929, as herein found, are discriminatory, lacking in uniformity, and illegal, and were made pursuant to a systematic, arbitrary, wilful and intentional scheme and method adopted by said Board of Equalization of discriminating against said parcels of real property of the plaintiff and in favor of other real property of like character similarly situated.

"XII. That neither under the terms of said resolution of July 15, 1929, and July 22, 1929, nor of any other act or order of said Board of Equalization for the year 1929, did said Board equalize or attempt to equalize, the valuation of the parcels of real property of the plaintiff, mentioned in said Schedule No. Two (2) of said Exhibit 'A', that is to say, said Board did not compare the individual assessments of said real property of the plaintiff appearing upon said assessment roll with the assessments upon the roll of like property similarly situated and make them equal with each other, but, on the contrary, said Board of Equalization, according and pursuant to a systematic arbitrary, wilful and intentional scheme and method adopted by it to re-assess said properties of plaintiff at greatly increased valuations, and for the purpose of increasing the assessed valuation of the real property of the plaintiff in an amount in excess of Six Hundred Forty Thousand Dollars ($640,000.00), caused certain real properties of the plaintiff to be divided into four groups or zones, three of said groups or zones consisting of real property lying contiguous or adjacent to the Pacific Ocean in said County, and the fourth group or zone lying in the vicinity of the City of Fallbrook in said County.

"That said Board of Equalization, pursuant to said scheme and method, arbitrarily apportioned said sum in excess of Six Hundred Forty Thousand Dollars ($640,000.00) among said four zones or groups as follows:

"1. Against certain real property lying in Zone No. 1, situated within the Oceanside School District in said County, consisting of approximately eleven (11) sections, the sum of approximately Two Hundred Eight Thousand, Six Hundred Dollars ($208,600.00).

"2. Against certain real property lying in Zone No. 2, situated within the West Fallbrook, DeLuz and Libby School Districts in said county, consisting of approximately (20) sections, the sum of Three Hundred Fifty-one Thousand, Four Hundred Dollars ($351,400.00).

"3. Against certain real property lying in zone No. 3, situated within the San Onofre School District, in said county, consisting of approximately ten (10) sections, the sum of Eighty Thousand Dollars ($80,000.00).

"4. Against certain real property in Zone No. 4, situated within the Moro and West Fallbrook School Districts, in said county, consisting of certain parcels of dry farming lands of the plaintiff at no time definitely ascertained or identified by said Board of Equalization, a sum of money incapable of definite ascertainment from the evidence in the case.

"XIII. That before adopting said resolution of July 15, 1929, providing for said increased assessment on said parcels of land of the plaintiff described in said Schedule No. Two (2) of said Exhibit 'A', the said Board of Equalization determined to increase the valuation placed by said Tax Factors, Inc. upon the real properties of the plaintiff described in said Schedule No. One (1) of said Exhibit 'A', and commonly known as the Santa Margarita Rancho, in an amount in excess of One Million, Six Hundred Thousand Dollars ($1,600,000.00) and to increase the assessment placed by the County Assessor upon said real properties of the plaintiff in an amount in excess of Six Hundred Forty Thousand Dollars ($640,000.00).

"XIV. That the amount of taxes levied by the said County of San Diego upon the said assessments of all of said real property described in said Schedule No. One (1) of said Exhibit 'A' is the sum of Fifty-two Thousand, One Hundred Thirty-two and 09/100 Dollars ($52,132.09).

"That the amount of taxes levied by said County of San Diego upon the said assessments appearing in said Schedule No. Two (2) of said Exhibit 'A', under the heading 'Valuation by Board of Equalization' is in the amount of Twenty Thousand, Four Hundred Seventy Nine and 25/100 Dollars ($20,479.25) in excess of the amount of taxes that would have been levied by said County of San Diego, upon the said assessments made by said County Assessor and appearing in said Schedule No. Two (2) of said Exhibit 'A' under the heading 'Valuation by Assessor.'

"That by reason of said changes and alterations made, as herein found, in the assessed valuation of the County Assessor of said properties of the plaintiff described in said Schedule No. Two (2) of said Exhibit 'A' the amount of taxes levied by said county against said properties of the plaintiff was increased in the amount of Twenty Thousand, Four Hundred Seventy Nine and 25/100 dollars ($20,479.25).

"XV. That heretofore, to wit, on or about the 18th day of November, 1929, at a time after said assessment book had been received by the Tax Collector of said county and the taxes upon said properties of the plaintiff had become payable, the plaintiff herein, against whom said property was assessed, claiming that said assessment was void in part, that is to say, that that portion or part of said taxes in the sum of Twenty Thousand, Four Hundred Seventy Nine and 25/100 Dollars ($20,479.25) was void, paid to said Tax Collector of said defendant under protest in writing, specifying that a part of said assessment was void, and indicating said portion claimed to be void and specifying the grounds upon which such claim was founded, said assessment, in the sum of Fifty-two Thousand, One Hundred Thirty-two and 09/100 Dollars ($52,132.09). That contemporaneously with the payment of said sum of Fifty-two Thousand, One Hundred Thirty-two and 09/100 Dollars ($52,132.09), plaintiff filed said protest in writing with said County Tax Collector. That a copy of said 'Payment of Taxes Under Protest' is attached to said complaint, marked 'Exhibit A', and made a part thereof. That reference is hereby made to said protest marked Exhibit 'A' and by such reference, the same is incorporated in these findings and made a part hereof as though in this paragraph fully set forth.

"XVI. That no part of said sum of Twenty Thousand Four Hundred Seventy-Nine and 25/100 Dollars ($20,479.25) has been paid or refunded by said defendant to plaintiff.

"Conclusions of Law.

"From the foregoing facts, the court concludes as a matter of law:

"1. That the resolutions of the Board of Equalization, dated July 15, 1929, and July 22, 1929, are void.

"2. That the plaintiff is entitled to judgment against the defendant in the sum of Twenty Thousand, Four Hundred Seventy-Nine and 25/100 Dollars ($20,479.25).

"3. That the plaintiff is entitled to its costs incurred herein.

"Let Judgment be entered accordingly.

"October 24, 1930."

The theory of plaintiff's case is that the action of the assessor was legal, but that the action of the board of equalization in adopting the resolutions of July 15, 1929, and July 22, 1929, is illegal, because the evidence shows that the board by its action attempted to reassess the property; that they delegated to another person the powers which the board alone is authorized to exercise; that the evidence shows that the plan of the board of equalization was to reassess the property without regard to the assessed value of like lands similarly situated; that they assessed against plaintiff, property not listed on the assessment roll; and that, as stated in respondent's brief, the changes made in the assessor's figures, "pursuant to the direction of the resolutions, result in wholesale discriminations among like properties similarly situated, so considerable (in some instances where the parcels are contiguous) as to shock one's sense of justice and conception of equality and to make the inference irresistible that the discrimination is the result of 'unfairness and oppression, either through design or through such gross error or negligence as to amount to the equivalent of fraud.'"

Defendant contends that neither the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, nor does the evidence prove one. It appears that the Rancho Santa Margarita, up to the time of the assessment in question, had never been accurately surveyed. It had been assessed for many years by arbitrary sections established by "Guesswork." No map of the rancho, arbitrary or otherwise, was in the assessor's office. In the past the owners had acquiesced in this method of assessment and admitted that no owner knew just how many acres there were in the entire rancho. The portion involved here comprised about 17½ miles of land along and adjacent to the Pacific Ocean. The number of acres shown in these fractional sections bordering on the ocean, on the 1929 assessment roll differ from the number of acres shown in these same sections on the map made by Tax Factors, Inc. It is admitted by appellant that "the assessor used the Tax Factors valuation of these fractional sections as found by Tax Factors, but did not correct his roll to show the number of acres in each fractional section as found by the Tax Factors." Consequently some of the fractional sections included in the resolution of July 15, 1929, contain a larger acreage than appears on the assessment roll, as made up by the assessor. It is also admitted that three fractional sections were included in the resolution which were not upon the assessment roll. It is conceded by appellant that inequalities do exist by reason of the raise in assessed valuation of this land, but that such inequalities, when compared to the large quantity of land covered by the resolution of the board of equalization, are insufficient to sustain a charge of fraud against the board and render their action void.

[1, 2] It is a fundamental rule that a tax, to be valid, must be equal as to its burdens and uniform as to its operation. Property must be assessed according to a just and uniform standard of value and the rate must be levied uniformly. In considering the validity of a revenue law it is immaterial whether the inequality or lack of uniformity in the levy is the result of design, accident or inadvertence.

"What the taxpayer is entitled to is the exercise of good faith and fair consideration on the part of the taxing power in assessing his property, at the same rate and on the same basis of valuation as that applied to other property of like character and similarly situated. Inequality of taxation is produced as surely by inequality of valuation as by inequality of the rate of tax." Birch v. County of Orange, 186 Cal. 736, 741, 200 P. 647, 649.

Referring to the last paragraph of the resolution of the board of equalization of July 15, 1929, we find: "That the proper authorized official be and is hereby authorized to make such computations and adjustments as will be necessary to conform to the order as above set forth, and apportion the amounts to the various sections listed as hereinabove set forth in accordance with the arable lands suitable for subdivision, as they may appear upon the records of the classification of such lands as prepared for this Board by Tax Factors, Inc." Appellant urges that this reference only required certain mathematical calculations for the clerk to make the changes ordered on the assessment roll because all the evidence and records were before the board of equalization at the hearing. Respondent contends that the board of equalization did not determine the amount to which the assessment would be increased in each of the 40 sections affected, but delegated this power to one Richard W. Miller to exercise his own judgment and discretion respecting the amount of arable lands and the amounts suitable for subdivision purposes in each of the sections concerned. Mr. Miller was a civil engineer employed by the board of supervisors as their agent on the contract of Tax Factors, Inc., to see that the specifications covering the work were properly executed. He had also been made a deputy county assessor. He testified that he made the computations referred to in the last paragraph of the resolution of July 15, 1929, not at the request of the county clerk or any deputy county clerk, but pursuant to this resolution which he had assisted in preparing. How he made these computations and arrived at the figures which he entered on the assessment roll therefore becomes material. Referring to his testimony we find he only used the classification plats of Tax Factors, Inc. On these plats the soil types were shown but no reference was made to arable lands or lands suitable for subdivision purposes. As to the first paragraph of the resolution dealing with definite sections (Zone

1) he testified that although section 6, township 11 south, range 5 west, was not included in the assessment roll, he did apportion a part of the increase of $208,640.00 covering Zone 1 to this section. Taking up next the third paragraph dealing with definite sections (Zone 3), he stated that although sections 22 and 25, township 9 south, range 7 west, were not shown on the assessment roll, yet they were included in the apportioning of the increased assessed valuation amounting to $80,008 for this zone. His testimony as to the second paragraph of the resolution dealing with definite sections (Zone 2) shows that in figuring the increase in valuation as to section 29, township 10 south, range 5 west, he figured on 640 acres at $46 an acre when the assessment roll shows for this section 629 acres. For section 30, township 10 south, range 5 west, the assessment roll shows 576.7 acres and he figured the increase of $46 per acre on 590 acres. For section 31, township 10 south, range 5 west, the roll shows 195 acres and the increase of $46 per acre he figured on 251 acres. For section 4, the roll shows 148½ acres and the increase was figured on 210 acres. For section 10 the roll shows 191.75 acres and the increase of $46 per acre was figured on 320 acres. Section 14, the roll shows 268 acres and the increase was figured on 365 acres. Section 24, the roll shows 250.5 acres and the increase was figured on 490 acres. Section 23, the roll shows 3.6 acres and the increase was figured on 22 acres. In Zone 1, there was 72 acres in section 9 of township 11 south, range 5 west, known as the Tidal Marsh, and he figured the $64 per acre increase on the 72 acres because he felt it was suitable for subdivision purposes. In section 13—9—7 (Zone 3), although it was listed as containing 252 acres of arable land on the plat, yet he figured the increase of $58.40 per acre on only 68 acres because he felt only the lands adjacent to the coast line were to be included, i. e., only those lands which he felt were subject to the "coast influence." Quoting his testimony:

"Q. In other words, in determining what lands you would place this additional valuation upon, you considered whether they were located close to the coast, or far from the coast, or whether they would be affected by what you call the 'coast influence'? A. Yes."

As to section 14—9—7 (Zone 3), 439 acres were shown as arable lands and the increase was figured on only 289 acres for the same reason as before. Other examples of where he was called upon to exercise his own judgment and discretion were as follows:

"Q. Isn't it a fact you included 41 acres of non-tillable washout? A. It might be that I did; I couldn't say. I may have just lumped the whole section, not discounting these little areas in there.

"Q. So that in that section it would look as tho you assessed non-tillable washouts at $46 an acre, plus the 80 cents, that they were uniformly assessed at thruout the county? A. It probably would; yes, sir. * * *

"Q. Would you kindly examine that classification plat and state how many acres in Section 3, Township 10 South, Range 6 West, according to the classification plat, have a soil type classification? A. 315.

"Q. Now, will you please turn to Exhibit No. 4, copy of your pencil notations, and state how many acres in that particular section you increased in assessed value at the rate of $46 an acre? A. 382.

"Q. So that there were 67 acres in this section, that had no soil type classification, that were increased in assessed valuation, were there not? A. Apparently so, yes.

"Q. And that would be 67 acres of 'Rough Stony Land' or 'Rough Broken Land,' would it not? A. Yes; it would be this 'Rough Broken Land.' * * *

"Q. Now will you please state the number of acres in that section that, according to the Tax Factors' classification plat, were given a soil type classification? A. If I have added them up correctly, there are 479.

"Q. Now, if you will please turn to Exhibit No. 4, copy of your pencil notations, and state how many acres in that section were increased by you $46 per acre, pursuant to the directions of the resolution? A. 570.

"Q. So that would be approximately 90—between 90 and 95—let us say 90—acres that were increased, that had no soil type classification, would it not? A. 91; 90 or 91 acres.

"Q. Then, in that instance, you placed a valuation of an additional $46 on about 90 acres of 'Rough Broken Land' in this particular section, did you not? A. Apparently.

"Q. Why did you do that, Mr. Miller? A. I couldn't say. It may have been an error."

The appraised value placed by Tax Factors, Inc., on nontillable washouts throughout the county was $2 an acre so that the assessed valuation fixed by the county assessor of 40 per cent. thereof would be 80 cents an acre. Rough broken land was appraised by Tax Factors, Inc., at $5 an acre, which would therefore have a uniform assessed valuation throughout the county of $2 an acre. Irregularities also appear as to sand dunes, creek lands, and a lagoon, all uniformly assessed throughout the county at $2 an acre, which were assessed at a rate of $48 an acre.

The evidence therefore conclusively shows that the assessed valuation of portions of the land in question was increased by Richard W. Miller, relying upon the classification plats of Tax Factors, Inc., and his individual knowledge, judgment, and discretion as to arable lands and lands suitable for subdivision purposes, through the action of the board of equalization in referring the matter to him by their resolution of July 15, 1929. Furthermore the method followed of increasing the assessed valuation by a certain amount per acre without regard to value of land nullified the equalization as between the sections.

[3, 4] Taxation of real property is a very serious matter, and a fair, just, and uniform method must be followed in raising or lowering the assessed valuation of lands in a county. We feel that the evidence in this action supports finding XI of the trial court that the valuations fixed through the resolution of the board of equalization were "discriminatory, lacking in uniformity and illegal." A portion of the resolution of July 15, 1929, to wit, Zone 4, was rescinded by the resolution of July 22, 1929, because of being too indefinite and not capable of identification. After reviewing all of the evidence, we must concede that there was evidence to justify the trial court in concluding that the board of equalization had agreed upon some definite system or plan to raise the assessed valuation of respondent's land by a definite amount per acre. Without question, the method employed does not display an attempt to equalize and make uniform the assessed valuations of these lands with like property similarly situated. No matter what the evidence may have been before the board of equalization, we have before us the method adopted upon which to base the increase of the assessed valuation. Officials may act honestly and in good faith, and yet where their method of increasing assessed valuations shows serious discriminations and a lack of uniformity, their action will be deemed equivalent to fraud.

"* * * While it was not claimed that there was an actual fraud or corrupt intent on the part of the officials making and sustaining the assessment in question, there was, nevertheless, such a violation of plain duty on the part of such officials as to constitute 'fraud' or 'something equivalent to fraud,' within the meaning of those terms as used in the decisions relative to the review of the action of assessing officers, entirely regardless of the motive actuating them in the matter of such an assessment." Mahoney v. City of San Diego, 198 Cal. 388, at 397, 245 P. 189, 193.

Under the aforegoing statement of the law we therefore hold that the evidence sustains the finding of the trial court that the action of the board of equalization resulted in inequalities of taxation constituting "fraud" or "something equivalent to fraud," as those terms have been used in the decisions relating to the action of assessing officers and boards of equalization.

The judgment is affirmed.

Allegation that no notice of probate proceedings was given to plaintiffs, or any of them, held to authorize inferences that order admitting will to probate and order granting decree of final distribution were made on proper notices (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1303, 1304, 1633).

This was so, since, in support of judgment, it was required to be presumed that notice of time and place of hearing was given in accordance with provisions of Code of Civil Procedure (see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1303, 1304, 1633), and the allegation did not negative the presumption that, in absence of plaintiffs' allegations to contrary, each notice was duly given in manner and at time provided by law.

Allegations of children of testatrix' deceased daughter seeking to establish interest in testatrix' estate held not to state case of extrinsic fraud in proceedings for probate of will which omitted such children.

Complaint alleged that shortly after the death of testatrix one of the defendants stated to plaintiffs who were children of daughter predeceasing testatrix that testatrix left will, wherein she had devised all of her property to her living children; that such defendant represented to plaintiffs that under the law of California, plaintiffs were entitled to none of the estate; and that as a result of such statement plaintiffs were led to believe that they could take nothing from testatrix' estate and did nothing about the matter until more than two years after will was admitted to probate and over a year after decree of final distribution was granted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by Doris Abels and others against Anna Frey and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Augustin Donovan and James R. Agee, both of Oakland, for appellants.

Snook, Snook & Chase, of Oakland, for respondents.

LAMBERSON, Justice pro tem.

The appellants have taken this appeal from a judgment against them as plaintiffs, following an order of the trial court sustaining a demurrer of the respondent Elizabeth Vanier, and a separate demurrer of the other respondents to the second amended complaint of appellants, entered after the latter had declined to avail themselves of the order of the court granting them leave to amend their complaint, if so advised.

The second amended complaint sets forth in substance that one Catherine Leveroni died May 22, 1927, and was a resident of Alameda county at the time of her death; that she left a will dated February 5, 1927, in which she named her daughter, Ursula Mangini, executrix of her will; that the will was admitted to probate on June 13, 1927, and by it the testatrix gave all of her property to six children, including Ursula Mangini, who has since deceased to be by them taken share and share alike; that Catherine Leveroni had, in all, seven children, one of whom, Rose Leveroni, who was not named in the will, died about August 15, 1921; that six children survived her, one of whom, Richard Leveroni, died about May 15, 1926, leaving two children, William Leveroni and George Leveroni, who are minors and represented herein by guardians ad litem; that shortly after the death of Catherine Leveroni, defendant Elizabeth Vanier stated to plaintiffs that Catherine Leveroni left a will by which she left all of her property and estate to the five living children of said deceased, share and share alike; that plaintiffs thereupon asked said defendant "if plaintiffs or the mother of plaintiffs" were mentioned or provided for in said will; that defendant answered in the negative; that plaintiffs thereupon asked said defendant why this had not been done; "that said defendant answered that she and her living brothers and sisters had employed one of the best lawyers in the city of Oakland, State of California, to prepare and draw said will, that said lawyer had thereupon prepared said will and had brought the same to the bedside of said Catherine Leveroni where is was signed and executed by her and that the law of the State of California at that time provided that a dead child of a decedent did not need to be mentioned or provided for in the will of said decedent; said defendant further stated that the law of said state formerly required that something had to be left by a parent to a dead child even though it was only the sum of one dollar but that said law had been changed and now provided as aforesaid and that the law now was that under the circumstances as aforesaid stated the plaintiffs were entitled to none of said estate; that as a result of these said statements plaintiffs were led to believe and did believe that they could take nothing from the estate of said Catherine Leveroni; that in reliance upon said statements so made as to the law plaintiffs did nothing further at that time; that said statement of the law as aforesaid was not correct but in truth and in fact said law provided at all times since the year 1872 that a testator's child or issue of a deceased child of the testator should be mentioned or provided for in the will of said testator and that in the absence thereof such child or such issue of a deceased child took that share of the testator's estate to which he, she or they would have been entitled had no will been left by said testator. That plaintiffs received no advice of any kind concerning the above save and except from defendant Elizabeth Vanier, as aforesaid, until the time and in the manner hereinafter in this paragraph alleged: That on the 8th day of July, 1929, plaintiffs consulted the attorneys who are the attorneys for the plaintiffs in this action concerning their rights in and to the estate of a deceased aunt." That on August 16, 1929, plaintiffs employed attorneys, who commenced this action on September 18, 1929; that no notice of the probate proceedings was ever given plaintiffs or any of them; that the petition for letters testamentary omitted all mention of said plaintiffs; that no paper or pleading on file in said probate proceedings ever mentioned the plaintiffs, and none of them were ever mentioned, or ever appeared in said proceedings held therein, and the court was never informed of the existence of the plaintiffs, or any of them, or of the "deceased mother of the plaintiffs" (the complaint undoubtedly referring to Rose Leveroni, who was the greatgrandmother of the minors represented in this action); that on May 4, 1928, the respondent executrix filed a petition for final distribution, and on May 14, 1928, the court granted such petition and distributed to each of the six children named therein, an undivided one-sixth of the property, which was all real property; that none of said property has changed hands or ownership since the distribution, except as a change has been occasioned by the death of Ursula Leveroni, and also excepting a deed of trust executed by the respondents to certain banking and trust corporations named as defendants.

The second amended complaint further alleges that plaintiffs are entitled to a share of the estate in accordance with the laws of succession of California; that they have no adequate remedy at law; and ask that the court declare the interest of each in and to the real property described in the complaint, and to the rents, issues, and profits thereon, which have been enjoyed by the respondents since the distribution of said property to them. The complaint does not set up the final decree of distribution.

The demurrers are upon the ground that the amended pleadings do not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in favor of any of the plaintiffs, and that the minors, greatgrandchildren of Catherine Leveroni, are improperly joined as parties to the action; it being contended that they are not issue of Catherine Leveroni within the meaning of section 1307 of the Civil Code.

[1] The amended complaint does not allege affirmatively that the various notices provided for by law were not given as required by statute, and the allegation that no notice was ever given to the plaintiffs or any of them does not negative the presumption that in the absence of plaintiffs' allegations to the contrary, each notice was duly given in the manner and at the time provided by law. The inferences are, from the pleadings, that the order admitting the will to probate, and the order granting the decree of final distribution, were made upon proper notice. In support of the judgment, it must be presumed that the notice of the time and place of hearing was given in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure (see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1303, 1304, 1633). Clavey v. Loney, 80 Cal. App. 20, 251 P. 232; Estate of Davis, 151 Cal. 318, 86 P. 183, 90 P. 711, 121 Am. St. Rep. 105; Hanley v. Hanley, 114 Cal. 690, 46 P. 736.

The presumption being that proper notice has been given when there is no allegation to the contrary, it is the duty of the person notified to make inquiry as to the proceedings pending. Langdon v. Blackburn, 109 Cal. 19, 41 P. 814. In Miller v. Pitman, 180 Cal. 540, 182 P. 50, 51, the court said: "The law does not require personal notice to be given of the presentation and pendency of a petition for final distribution, and, the complaint in the present case failing to allege that the notice required by law was not given, it will be presumed that such notice was given." (Citing cases.)

[2, 3] The jurisdiction of the probate court is a jurisdiction in rem, the res being the estate of the decedent which is to be administered and distributed with regard to the rights of cerditors, devisees, legatees, and all the world. Warren v. Ellis, 39 Cal. App. 542, 179 P. 544; Nicholson v. Leatham, 28 Cal. App. 597, 153 P. 965, 155 P. 98. By giving the notice prescribed by the statute, the entire world is called before the court, and the court acquires jurisdiction over all persons for the purpose of determining their rights to any portion of the estate, and every person who may assert any right or interest therein is required to present his claim to the court for its determination. Whether he appears and presents his claim, or fails to appear, the action of the court is equally conclusive upon him, " 'subject only to be[ing] reversed, set aside, or modified on appeal.' " The decree is as binding upon him if he fails to appear and present his claim, as if his claim, after presentation, had been disallowed by the court. William Hill Company v. Lawler, 116 Cal. 359, 48 P. 323; Mulcahey v. Dow, 131 Cal. 73, 63 P. 158; Hanley v. Hanley, supra.

[4, 5] In a proceeding admitting a will to probate, the judgment is final and conclusive after the expiration of six months from the time it was admitted to probate, except as to minors and lunatics, and such an order may not be attacked upon the ground that intrinsic fraud was practiced on the court in procuring the probate of the will. San Diego Trust & Savings Bank v. Heustis (Cal. App.) 10 P.(2d) 158; Tracy v. Muir, 151 Cal. 363, 90 P. 832, 834, 121 Am. St. Rep. 117. The same rule applies to the decree of distribution. Smith v. Vandepeer, 3 Cal. App. 300, 85 P. 136. The stability of titles, judgments, and decrees requires a strict adherence to the principles underlying the provisions of section 1908 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Lynch v. Rooney, 112 Cal. 279, 44 P. 565.

In Estate of Davis, supra, page 323 of 151 Cal., 86 P. 183, 184, 90 P. 711, 121 Am. St. Rep. 105, the court said: "But the procedure of this state contemplates, in the administration of the estates of deceased persons, a series of different proceedings, each of which is, as to the matters embraced within its purview, separate. And an adjudication as to each step in this series is intended to be final in its nature, and not subject to review in a subsequent stage of the administration of the estate."

A person who is interested in the estate of a deceased person, who has had the notice required by law, becomes in point of law an actor in the proceedings, and is bound by the result. Estate of Allen, 176 Cal. 632, 169 P. 364; Nicholson v. Leatham, supra.

[6] It is fundamental that a judgment or decree of a court of competent jurisdiction can be set aside for fraud only where the fraud alleged is shown to be extrinsic or collateral to the matter which was tried and determined by such court, as opposed to intrinsic or direct fraud practiced in the presentation of the proceedings coming before the court. Rountree v. Montague, 30 Cal. App. 170, 157 P. 623. As types of extrinsic fraud, the courts of appellate jurisdiction of this state have adopted the classic definition, found in United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61, 65, 25 L. Ed. 93, in which the Supreme Court of the United States said: "But there is an admitted exception to this general rule in cases where, by reason of something done by the successful party to a suit, there was in fact no adversary trial or decision of the issue in the case. Where the unsuccessful party has been prevented from exhibiting fully his case, by fraud or deception practiced on him by his opponent, as by keeping him away from court, a false promise of a compromise; or where the defendant never had knowledge of the suit, being kept in ignorance by the acts of the plaintiff; or where an attorney fraudulently or without authority assumes to represent a party and connives at his defeat; or where the attorney regularly employed corruptly sells out his client's interest to the other side,—these, and similar cases which show that there has never been a real contest in the trial or hearing of the case, are reasons for which a new suit may be sustained to set aside and annul the former judgment or decree, and open the case for a new and a fair hearing." See Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 129, 25 P. 970, 27 P. 537, 13 L. R. A. 336, 25 Am. St. Rep. 159; Langdon v. Blackburn, supra; Nicholson v. Leatham, supra; Rountree v. Montague, supra; McGavin v. San Francisco P. O. A. Soc., 34 Cal. App. 168, 167 P. 182. The gravamen of the rule thus expressed lies in the fact that "the unsuccessful party has been prevented from exhibiting fully his case." Bacon v. Bacon, 150 Cal. 477, 89 P. 317, 322.

The acts alleged to constitute intrinsic fraud must be such as operate to prevent the heir from appearing in the probate court, and thus contesting the proceedings then before the court, and exhibiting in its entirety his case against the action sought for being taken, whether it be the probate of a will, or a petition for final distribution; otherwise a court of equity is without jurisdiction to afford relief. Nicholson v. Leatham, supra.

[7] In the light of the authorities cited, we do not find that the allegations of the second amended complaint in the instant case state a case of extrinsic fraud against any of the respondents. The complaint alleges that shortly after the death of Catherine Leveroni, the defendant Elizabeth Vanier stated to plaintiffs that the deceased left a will; that she had devised all of her property to the living children of the deceased; that the will did not mention the "mother" of plaintiffs; that in response to the question why plaintiffs' "mother" had not been mentioned, Elizabeth Vanier told them that the living brothers and sisters had employed one of the best lawyers in Oakland to prepare and draw a will; that such lawyer thereupon prepared a will and took it to Catherine Leveroni for execution; then follow allegations as to what Elizabeth Vanier said about the laws of California relating to the omission of a child and all issue of a deceased child from the provisions of a will; also alleging that plaintiffs relied on said statements and did nothing about the matter until they consulted attorneys on July 8, 1929, more than two years after the will was admitted to probate, and over a year after the decree of final distribution was granted.

It is clear that plaintiffs knew of the death of their grandmother, and that she left an estate and a will from which they were omitted, and that they thought they had some interest in the estate, or should have been remembered. The fact that Elizabeth Vanier told them they had not been mentioned in the will and her statements as to the law, which may have been simply incorrect or willfully false, should have put them on inquiry. The facts alleged in the complaint do not disclose a condition embraced within the definition of extrinsic fraud accepted by the courts of California. The statements of Elizabeth Vanier were but conclusions on her part as to the law, and not a misstatement or concealment of any fact which operated to prevent the appellants from making inquiry in due time, or from having a trial of their cases before the court. There is no allegation that Elizabeth Vanier knew that the appellants were entitled to share in the estate, or that she knew her statements of the law were incorrect. There is no showing in the complaint that appellants were at any time absent from the county where the probate proceedings were had, or in a position where they could not obtain advice as to their legal rights; nor is there a showing that any information in regard to the death of the decedent, the execution of the will or the terms thereof, or of the property embraced in the estate, was suppressed by any of the respondents, and particularly by the respondents other than Elizabeth Vanier. There is no allegation or showing that the other respondents connived or conspired with Elizabeth Vanier to suppress information or that they, by themselves, or through her, gave any false information to appellants, or conspired with Elizabeth Vanier, or caused her to make any of the statements ascribed to her in the amended complaint; further, there is no allegation that appellants were induced or persuaded by any of the respondents to refrain from appearing in the proceedings.

In the case of Langdon v. Blackburn, supra, it was alleged, in a complaint to enforce a trust, that certain heirs at law had conspired to defraud the plaintiff, who was a sister of a decedent who had omitted to mention her in his will, and had sent the plaintiff's son to her to inform his mother that her entire interest in the estate of her brother was only a small sum, which she accepted as her share of the estate. It was held that the complaint was subject to demurrer, because it did not show extrinsic fraud in the absence of a showing that the son said to his mother anything about the terms of the will, or the probate thereof, or advised her or suggested that it was not necessary for her to be present at the hearing of the petition for the probate of the will, or to employ counsel to represent her, or to make any inquiries about the will or the estate.

In Tracy v. Muir, supra, the court said: "It is further to be observed that the amended complaint is destitute of allegation of any act on the part of any of the alleged conspirators, the effect of which could have been to prevent the plaintiff from appearing in the probate court at any time within one year after the probate, and contesting the will upon all or any of the grounds specified in the statute, including the very ground upon which she here bases her claim, viz., that the will had never been executed by the deceased, but was a forgery. * * * This rule we take to be absolute, at least in every case where there has been no breach of duty arising from a fiduciary relation on the part of those securing the probate of the will, no such extraneous fraud as operates to prevent the heir from appearing in the probate court and there contesting the will and exhibiting fully his case against the same, and no lack of actual knowledge of the pendency of the probate proceeding operating to deprive the heir of an opportunity to so appear in the probate court and make his contest." To the same effect are McGavin v. San Francisco P. O. A. Soc., supra; Mulcahey v. Dow, supra; Nicholson v. Leatham, supra.

Our conclusion, in view of the foregoing authorities cited, must be that the appellants had due notice of the proceedings in the estate of their grandmother, or greatgrandmother, and that they did not use due diligence in ascertaining what their rights were in reference thereto. The principle underlying the law as to the charging and showing of extrinsic fraud is that there must be some end to litigation. The second amended complaint is deficient for the reason that it does not state a condition of facts or fraudulent acts sufficient to authorize a court of equity to grant the relief prayed for, and the demurrer was properly sustained upon the ground that the amended complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against defendants, or any of them.

The conclusion which we have expressed being decisive of the matter before us, we desire to express no opinion as to the other questions presented in the arguments of counsel for appellants and respondents, or as to the other grounds which form the basis for the demurrer. The guardians of the respective minors, who are appellants herein, should take such action as they may be advised.

The judgment is affirmed.

McINTYRE v. SAME (two cases).

Civ. 4598–4600.

I. Insurance ⇐435.

Liability policy covered accident occurring while truck was being driven by insured owner substituting for hired driver named in policy.

Facts disclosed that one of authorized drivers of truck named in liability policy, while making delivery of load of turkeys, became ill, and thereafter one of insured partners took charge of truck and while driving truck accident occurred. The policy provided that, if any of drivers named therein was a hired chauffeur, "it is agreed that the policy is extended to cover while such automobiles are being driven by any one employed as a substitute." Insurer's contention that word "employed," as used in policy, meant hired substitute, or some one other than named assured, could not be sustained, since, though word "employ" usually imports relation of master and servant, this is not universal rule, and idea of compensation is not necessarily involved, but in present tense it is applied to persons engaged in doing something, and in the past tense it is applied to persons engaged in the performance of work or duties, either busy or occupied at work.

Appeals from Superior Court, Solano County; William T. O'Donnell, Judge.

Separate actions by Gene Antichi and another, by W. J. McIntyre, and by Laura McIntyre, against the New York Indemnity Company, which actions were consolidated. From judgments for plaintiffs, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Hadsell, Sweet & Ingalls and Lewis N. Mitchell, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Charles W. Haswell, of San Francisco, F. F. Marshall, of Dixon, and W. U. Goodman, of Fairfield, for respondents.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem., delivered the opinion of the court.

These cases were consolidated for trial and have been consolidated for hearing on appeal.

All three of the suits were upon a policy of insurance issued to Gene Antichi and A. E. Mallett, partners doing business under the name of Sacramento-Corning Freight Line and against the New York Indemnity Company.

One suit was brought by the said Antichi and Mallett for $1,000 attorney fees expended in defending actions brought by W. J. McIntyre and Laura McIntyre against them. The suit of Laura McIntyre is to recover the sum of $7,733.30 and $29.50 costs based upon a judgment in her favor in an action for damages for personal injuries against said Antichi and Mallett. The suit of W. J. McIntyre is for consequential damages resulting from the injuries to his wife Laura McIntyre based upon a judgment for $2,500 against the said Antichi and Mallett. Plaintiffs had judgments in all of these cases, and from these judgments defendant appeals.

The policy of insurance upon which the actions are founded was issued on June 20, 1928. The accident which gave rise to these actions occurred on February 13, 1929. The said policy contained the following provision:

"In consideration of the reduced premium rates at which this policy is written and of the statement made by the assured that he does not own more automobiles than those described in the policy and that there will not be a greater number of persons who operate such automobiles than those named in the endorsement without previous notice to the Company and payment of proper additional premium therefor, it is agreed that without previous notice to the company and payment of additional premium this policy covers the operation of the automobiles described only while such automobiles are being personally driven by Emmet Harden, Claude Strawn and R. C. McEwen or by any person when accompanied by such named drivers.

"If any of the named drivers is a hired chauffeur it is agreed that the policy is extended to cover while such automobiles are being driven by anyone employed as his substitute by reason of such chauffeur's illness or leave of absence, and by anyone employed as his successor. Notice of such successor or substitute shall be furnished the company within ten days of employment of such successor or substitute."

Emmet Harden, using one of the trucks covered by the policy and carrying a load of turkeys consigned to San Francisco, left Corning at 11 o'clock p. m. on the 12th of February, 1929, and arrived at Davis at 8 o'clock a. m. on the morning of February 13, 1929. When he arrived at Davis he telephoned Mallett that on the trip from Corning he had blown out a gasket and asked that a driver be sent to Davis. Thereupon both Mallett and Antichi went to Davis, and after the truck was repaired, Harden complaining of not feeling well, and not feeling able to drive the truck to San Francisco, Antichi took charge of the truck and drove it, and on his way to San Francisco the accident happened which caused these suits.

[1] Appellant contends that this accident was not covered by the terms of the policy; that the words, under the heading of More

Automobiles and Drivers, "if any of the named drivers is a hired chauffeur, it is agreed that the policy is extended to cover while such automobiles are being driven by anyone employed as a substitute," means a hired substitute, or some one other than the named assured.

The case of McCluskey v. Cromwell, 11 N. Y. 593, relied on by appellant to sustain his contention, is not in point. In that case the general contractor gave a bond conditioned that he would pay every laborer employed by him. The plaintiff's workers were employed by an independent contractor and the court very properly held the general contractor was not liable.

The dissenting opinion of Judge Ruggles in that case very clearly defines the word "employed" wherein he said: "A man hired to labor is employed, but a man may be employed in a work who is not hired. Materials are employed for building locks, but they are not hired; and a man who does his own work or the work of another is employed in it, although he receives no wages."

Nor is the case of Cooper v. Industrial Accident Commission et al., 177 Cal. 685, 171 P. 684, cited by appellant, in point here. In that case the widow claimed damages for the death of her husband, who was a member of a partnership engaged in mining. The accident occurred while he was engaged in business for the partnership, and it was held that the husband was not an employee of the partnership within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act (St. 1913, p. 284), although there was evidence that he had been employed by the partnership at a fixed wage.

In the instant case Antichi was not employed by the partnership of which he was a member to drive the said truck, but merely took over its operation owing to the illness of Harden.

The word "employ" is used in divers significations. Although it usually imports the relation of master and servant, or of employer and employee, this is not the universal rule, and the idea of compensation is not necessarily involved in the term. In the present tense it is applied to persons engaged in doing something. In the past tense it is applied to persons engaged in the performance of work or duties, either busy or occupied at work. 20 Cor. Jur. 1228, 1229. To engage is one of the meanings of "employ." Black's Law Dictionary, 430.

[2] The word "employed" may mean either busy or occupied at work or may mean intrusted with the management of affairs. 3 Words and Phrases, First Series, 2377. The rule is well settled that where there is an ambiguity in the policy caused by the insurer, the policy will be given an interpretation most favorable to the insured. Swift v. Zurich Gen. Acc. & L. Ins. Co., 112 Cal. App. 709, 297 P. 578; Ogburn v. Travelers Ins. Co., 207 Cal. 50, 276 P. 1004. See, also Goorberg v. Western Assurance Co., 150 Cal. 510, 89 P. 130, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 876, 119 Am. St. Rep. 246, 11 Ann. Cas. 801.

This policy was drawn by the insurer. It caused the uncertainty or ambiguity to exist, and it is not urged that any additional hazard was incurred by the substitution of Antichi for Harden.

We are of the opinion that the policy covered such substitution.

[3] Appellant next contends that the judgment in favor of respondent W. J. McIntyre should be reversed. This contention is founded upon the claim that damages suffered by the husband for injuries to his wife, that is to say, consequential damages, are not covered by the policy. The policy contains the following provision: "Indemnity provided by this policy applies only to the item below for which a premium charge is made. Legal liability for bodily injuries or death, one person $10,000.00. One accident $10,000.00."

In compliance with the act of the Legislature approved May 21, 1919 (Stats. 1919, p. 776), the following provision is also contained in said policy: "Bankruptcy or insolvency of the assured shall not relieve the company of any legal obligation hereunder. If any person or his legal representatives shall obtain final judgment against the assured because of such injuries, and execution thereon is returned unsatisfied by reason of bankruptcy, insolvency or any other cause, or if such judgment is not satisfied within thirty days after it is rendered, then such person or his legal representatives may proceed against the company to recover the amount of such judgment, either at law or equity, but not exceeding the limit of this policy applicable thereto."

Appellant cites the case of New Amsterdam Casualty Co. v. Nadler et al., 115 Ohio St. 472, 154 N. E. 736, decided by the Supreme Court of Ohio in support of this contention. In that case the court held that the husband could not recover consequential damages for an injury to his wife, under a policy which covered bodily injuries to a person; that it could not reasonably be held to include the kind of loss suffered by the husband. And in the case of Price v. National Surety Co., 221 App. Div. 56, 222 N. Y. S. 437, also cited by appellant, the court held that the terms "injury to person" or "injury to persons" refer to direct bodily damage to the person upon whom the injury was inflicted and did not include injury to another in loss as a consequence of such bodily injury. Appellant also cites cases from other states holding substantially the same doctrine.

But in none of the cases were the terms fixing the liability of the indemnity company similar to those contained in the policy in the instant case.

This policy provides indemnity to the assured to the extent of $10,000 against legal liability for bodily injuries. This judgment of W. J. McIntyre was for hospital bills, medical attention, and loss of services incurred by him by reason of the bodily injuries sustained by his wife in the said accident. Had the policy provided only for damages arising from bodily injuries, the authorities cited by appellant would be controlling; but it goes much farther than that and indemnifies the assured against all legal liability arising from bodily injuries. There can be no question but that the judgment of W. J. McIntyre was a legal liability against the assured growing out of the bodily injury suffered by the wife. Such being the case, the said judgment for consequential damages was covered by the policy.

[4] The final contention of appellant is that the decision of the trial court is in contravention of the Constitution of the United States and of this state, in that appellant did not have its day in court in defending against the said action brought by the McIntyres against Antichi and Mallett. Inasmuch as it admitted that appellant refused to defend the said cases after being called upon so to do, we see no merit in this contention.

Nor is there any merit in the claim that by an act of the Legislature material, or any, alterations were made in the policy. If appellant refers to the act of 1919, it is sufficient to say that this act was in force a number of years before this policy was issued.

The judgments are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action by Alfred Fuhrman against the American National Building & Loan Association and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Thomas E. Hayden, Edward A. O'Brien, and Sullivan, Roche, Johnson & Barry, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

H. W. Hutton, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LAMBERSON, Justice pro tem.

The respondent brought action against the appellant, American National Building & Loan Association, a corporation, and the other appellants as directors thereof, to recover the sum of $2,500, being the amount of a first payment made by respondent on a subscription for 100 shares of the "guarantee capital stock" of the appellant corporation, and prayed for the cancellation of the subscription agreement upon the ground that he had been induced by fraudulent representations of the appellants and their agents to sign the subscription agreement. Judgment was entered in favor of respondent for the sum of $2,500, with interest thereon at the legal rate from June 4, 1929, and it was decreed that the subscription agreement be canceled and surrendered to the respondent.

The defendant corporation was organized as a building and loan corporation under the laws of California, on February 28, 1929, with an authorized "guarantee capital stock" of $5,000,000 divided into 50,000 shares of the par value of $100 each. For the purposes of the organization, there were seven directors, to each of whom there were ostensibly allotted 10 shares of the capital stock, none of which, however, were ever issued or paid for, or have been outstanding at any time. It is admitted in appellants' brief that three of the seven so-called original incorporators were merely dummy directors, in the sense that their names were used as a matter of convenience in incorporating the company, "as indeed were the names of the other four directors, in so far as their subscription to ten shares each of the capital stock of said corporation were concerned." The last four, however, did thereafter subscribe for shares of stock in the company at $125 per share.

On March 8, 1929, the defendant corporation entered into an agreement with one V. M. Price, who was neither a director nor one of the original incorporators, wherein it was recited that the original incorporators of the appellant corporation had theretofore subscribed for 70 shares of the guarantee capital stock, thereby leaving in the treasury, unsold and not subscribed for, 49,930 shares; that the board of directors had offered said 49,930 shares for sale, and the said V. M. Price had offered the sum of $105 per share for the same, which offer had been accepted by the board. It was then agreed that the corporation sold, and the said Price bought, said shares of stock, the seller to issue certificates therefor at any time prior to March 8, 1939, for lots of one share or more, upon the payment of the purchase price of $105 per share, no dividends to accrue until such purchase price for each share had been paid, and no interest to be paid by the buyer. It appears that Price thereafter began a selling and advertising campaign, in the course of which there appeared a double page advertisement in the San Francisco Examiner, and a large advertisement in the San Francisco Chronicle, in the name of the defendant corporation, Price's name not being mentioned therein. In the Examiner advertisement appear, among others, the following representations: "Subscriptions for a limited amount of the guarantee capital can be made through any of our State agency offices listed herewith or at the main San Francisco office by mail or wire. In view of the fact that guarantee capital has been tightly held by a few of the original incorporators and directors, the management believes that this opportunity for public participation is a forward step in the policy of building and loan finance, in that it allows a large number of small investors to enjoy initial opportunity with the incorporators, instead of a limited privilege to make interest deposits or purchase investment certificates. Guarantee capital will participate in earnings." The Examiner advertisement also set forth a list of ten directors, among whom one J. C. Berendsen, a businessman of San Francisco, was named. In the Chronicle advertisement, the statement was repeated that Berendsen was a director, and this was accompanied by a laudatory recital of his experience in the business affairs of San Francisco, together with his photograph, all of which was published without his knowledge or consent.

Within a few days after the publication of these advertisements, respondent was visited by representatives of the appellant corporation or its sales agent, and was furnished with literature apparently issued and distributed in the name of such appellant, in which the following statement was made: "A substantial part of the original authorized issue has been subscribed for and the offering, herewith, is presented as an opportunity to the public to participate by direct investment in the guarantee capital, instead of being confined to interest on deposit monies." The representation was also made in the Examiner advertisement that the Crocker First Federal Trust Company was the registrar of the defendant corporation, and that Anglo-California Trust Company was the transfer agent. The advertisements did not state the number of shares into which the capital stock was divided, or their par value, but stated that shares of appellant corporation would be available at $125 per share.

On May 23, 1929, in response to invitations from representatives of appellants or their sales agent, respondent visited the offices of the appellant corporation where he was handed an envelope which contained copies of the advertisements published in the Examiner and Chronicle, and was told by the person who gave them to him that the two advertisements contained all of the facts regarding the company. He had previously been asked to subscribe for stock, and was again solicited on May 23. After looking around the offices, examining the subscription book which was shown to him, and talking with one of the persons there who was described as a director and chief counsel of the corporation, he signed the subscription agreement for the purchase of 100 shares at a price of $125 per share, and at that time gave to the agents of appellants a check for $2,500 drawn in favor of the corporation as an initial payment on his subscription, final payment to be made July 2, 1929. It later developed that, of the amount paid by respondent, $2,000 was immediately paid to Price as his commission on the entire sale, the $500 remaining with the corporation. Up to and including May 21, 1929, a total of 1,573 shares had been subscribed for, and during the following week subcriptions for an additional 436 shares had been offered. Respondent alleges that about June 3 he discovered the falsity of the statements which had been made to him, and learned for the first time of the contract with Price, and that about June 4 he gave notice of rescission to the appellant corporation, and about June 5, in a letter addressed to one Thomas E. Hayden, who had been represented to respondent as a director and chief counsel of appellant corporation, stated in detail his reasons for believing that fraud had been practiced upon him in securing his subscription. The complaint alleges that, for the purpose of inducing the general public to subscribe for and purchase the guarantee capital stock of the defendant corporation, said corporation and the other defendants named, who were directors thereof, caused the advertisements hereinbefore mentioned to be published, and other advertisements to be sent through the mail and distributed to the public, setting forth, among other things, the matters hereinbefore stated, and that each and all of the representations so made and published were known by defendants to be fraudulent; that in truth and in fact, subscribers for stock at $125 per share did not and could not enjoy initial opportunity with the incorporators who paid only $100 per share; that seven of the incorporators had subscribed for only 10 shares each, leaving a balance of 49,930 shares in the treasury of the corporation; that on March 8 V. M. Price bought the balance of the stock for $105 per share without any interest on the agreed purchase price, and has ever since such time been the sole owner thereof; that the representations were not actually believed by defendants to be true; that such false representations were made with intent that they should be acted on by respondent; and that he relied on each of such representations, and has been damaged in the sum of $2,500.

The court found that between May 17 and May 23, inclusive, 1929, the defendants, their agents and servants, solicited plaintiff to subscribe for and purchase shares of the guarantee capital stock of appellant corporation, and did deliver certain advertising matter, and by verbal statements represented and stated to plaintiff the matters which have been heretofore outlined; that such statements and representations were false and untrue, in that subscribers for stock at $125 per share did not enjoy initial opportunity with the incorporators, because said incorporators paid nothing for their subscribed stock; that on March 8, 1929, the corporation entered into the sales contract with V. M. Price, hereinbefore mentioned; that, at the time of plaintiff's subscription, no substantial part, or more than a small fraction, of the original authorized stock had been subscribed; that Crocker First Federal Trust Company was not the registrar of defendant corporation; that Anglo-California Trust Company was not the transfer agent; that J. C. Berendsen was not a director, and never had been a director; that all matters and things so stated and represented to plaintiff to be true were material and substantial particulars in respect of the said corporation, in the conduct and supervision of its business and financial affairs; that said statements were, at the times they were made, known by defendants to be untrue, and were made with intent to deceive and induce plaintiff to purchase stock of appellant corporation; that plaintiff was ignorant of their falsity, relied thereon, and was deceived thereby; that, except for such representations, plaintiff would not have subscribed for any of said shares, and would not have paid said sum of $2,500 therefor; that plaintiff discovered the fraudulent nature of the representations about June 4, 1929, and immediately rescinded his subscription; that by reason of the false representations made by defendants, and the immediate recission by plaintiff, the subscription became void and of no effect.

Between May 13 and May 24, 1929, the Crocker First Federal Trust Company, Anglo-California Trust Company, and J. C. Berendsen, respectively, notified appellant corporation in writing that they declined to act in the capacity described in the advertising matter, and the Anglo-California Trust Company requested appellant corporation to refrain from using its name in any advertising matter.

Appellants urge that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the findings of the court, and, as their first specification, object to the finding that subscribers for stock at $125 per share did not enjoy initial opportunity with the incorporators, and urge that it is contrary to the purpose and intent intended to be conveyed in the advertising matter, which was, according to appellants' argument, to draw the public's attention to the distinction existing between the former and usual practice of original incorporators of building and loan associations in tightly holding for themselves the guarantee capital stock and offering to the public only the limited privilege of making interest deposits, or purchasing investment certificates. While the statements contained in the advertising material of the company, aside from the newspaper advertisements, bear the construction claimed by appellants, the matter contained in the Examiner advertisement clearly claims the merit for the stock selling plan of the appellants, which the findings have attributed to such advertising matter, and it could easily have been inferred from the advertising material that every subscriber would be on an equal footing, both as to themselves and to the original incorporators. The corporation was apparently, at the time the subscription was signed by respondent, not actively engaged in a building and loan business, and the only purpose of the advertising and of the selling campaign was to attract investors who desired to purchase shares of the stock of the corporation, and thereby furnish a working capital for the corporation.

The next serious objection is that in which appellants take issue with the finding that no substantial part, or more than a small fraction, of the original authorized issue of stock had been subscribed. Up to May 21, 1929, a total of only 1,573 shares, or a trifle over 3 per cent. of the total issue of stock, had been subscribed. During the following week, 436 shares had been added, making a total on May 28th of 2,009 shares. When the advertising matter was first presented to respondent, less than 1,573 shares had been subscribed, and the advertising matter was not changed, nor were the representations altered at the time respondent finally made his first payment on May 23d. The word "substantial" as used in the findings is a relative term, the meaning of which is to be gauged by all the circumstances surrounding the transaction in reference to which the expression has been used. It imports a considerable amount or value in opposition to that which is inconsequential or small. We find support for the finding of the court in the fact that this representation was contained in the first advertising matter distributed by the corporation, at which time little or no stock of the corporation had been subscribed, and an examination of all of the advertising literature received in evidence indicates that the sales agents of the corporation intended to indulge in exaggeration if they found it necessary for their purpose, regardless of what the need for accurate information on the part of the prospective investor might be.

[1, 2] A representation as to the amount of capital stock subscribed or paid in is a representation as to a material matter. 14 Cor. Jur. 606. The question of whether or not the use of the word "substantial" constituted a misrepresentation of a material matter, being a question of fact for the trial court, in the light of the circumstances surrounding the entire transaction, and the conclusion of the court having support in the evidence, we cannot say that, as a matter of law, there was no evidence to support the finding.

[3-5] The next objection is that the evidence does not support the findings that the representations as to the Crocker First Federal Trust Company acting as registrar of the defendant corporation, that the Anglo-California Trust Company was the transfer agent, and that J. C. Berendsen was a director, were false and untrue, and were made with intent to deceive respondent. The fact that the representations were made is not questioned, but appellants contend they were not made with any intent to defraud, or with knowledge of their falsity, and that they were not, under the circumstances, representations as to material matters. Each of the appointments or positions specified was tendered to the respective corporations and person named, but each of them had sent to the corporation a written refusal to accept such appointment before the 23d day of May, 1929. An examination of the entire record discloses that the appellants or their agents, in their anxiety to make an impression on the public, and to present as imposing an array of influential connections as possible, were either active in or permitted advertising and publicity matter to be published and circulated, which contained the various statements cited as misrepresentations, which were untrue, or which the appellants did not know to be true, and that there is sufficient evidence to support the conclusion of the trial court that they constituted misrepresentations of existing facts upon which the respondent relied in signing a subscription agreement to purchase stock of the appellant corporation, and in making the initial payment for the same, even though we may charitably indulge in the presumption that the directors were innocent of a desire to participate in any fraud, and that some of the representations were in the nature of mere matters of opinion or of extravagant sales talk. Any false statement by the authorized agents of a corporation in regard to the past or present status of the corporate enterprise, or material matters connected therewith, whereby subscriptions are obtained, is a fraudulent representation, and a false statement that certain individuals are officers or directors is a false representation. Vulcan Fire Ins. Co. v. Jorgensen, 33 Cal. App. 763, 166 P. 835. In an action for fraudulent representations, if the finding is sustained by the evidence as to one material fraudulent representation, it is sufficient. Beeman v. Richardson, 185 Cal. 280, 196 P. 774.

Section 1572 of the Civil Code provides in part as follows: "Actual fraud, within the meaning of this chapter, consists in any of the following acts, committed by a party to the contract, or with his connivance, with intent to deceive another party thereto, or to induce him to enter into the contract: 1. The suggestion, as a fact, of that which is not true, by one who does not believe it to be true; 2. The positive assertion, in a manner not warranted by the information of the person making it, of that which is not true, though he believes it to be true."

[6, 7] In McMahon v. Grimes, 206 Cal. 526, the court quoted, at page 535, 275 P. 440, 443, from other authorities, as follows: "'If a party asserts that as true which he does not know to be true, it is a false representation. If he intends simply to state his belief upon information, then he should state it in that precise form, so as to apprise the other party of the true grounds upon which his statement is made. A party will always be held to make good his statement in the form in which he makes it. If he states a thing as true in general terms without qualification, then he is presumed to do so upon his own knowledge or at his peril, and must make good his assertion.'" A person subscribing for capital stock in a corporation is justified in relying upon representations concerning existing facts not within his knowledge, or his means of knowledge, but within the knowledge of the party making the representations (Hogberg v. Landfield, 99 Cal. App. 360, 278 P. 907), and, where a corporation is represented by sales agents who make actionable misrepresentations in securing sales of stock of the corporation, the corporation is chargeable with such misrepresentations. Dox v. R. E. Lomax Company, 29 Cal. App. 718, 156 P. 874.

[8-10] Directors of a corporation who have put forth, or have permitted to be put forth in the name of the corporation, false and fraudulent statements, either in equivocal language or positive affirmations, in making up their prospectus, circulars, or other advertising matter, whereby members of the public are induced to purchase its shares of stock, make themselves liable to persons thereby deceived and defrauded jointly with the corporation itself. 14a Cor. Jur. 184. Hidden or equivocal meanings, which the average person could not discern, do not mitigate the offense of allowing false or deceptive statements to be made; the true test of liability or responsibility in the case of the directors being the impression created by the prospectus or the advertising literature as a whole, and whether or not all of the material, taken together, constitutes a false representation. Churchill v. St. George Development Co., 174 App. Div. 1, 160 N. Y. S. 357; Bystrom v. Villard, 175 App. Div. 433, 162 N. Y. S. 100.

The safety and security of the investing public require that no material misstatement or concealment of any material fact should be permitted. Morgan v. Skiddy et al., 62 N. Y. 319.

The tendency of the courts is to hold promoters and directors of corporations to a strict accountability for the accuracy of their representations which are made with a view of inducing strangers to the enterprise to invest therein, and to refuse to extend immunity for false statements because they might believe them to be true, if, in fact, they were false. Bystrom v. Villard, supra.

A review of the evidence in the instant case does not indicate a suggestion that any leniency should have been granted to the appellants because they may have believed that the corporations named respectively as registrar and transfer agent, or the individual named as a director, would eventually accept the invitation of the directors to become connected with their organization in the capacities specified in the advertising matter of the corporation. Respondent had the right to rely on the statements contained in the various pieces of advertising matter given to him and the representations made in the name of the corporation which bore upon the soundness, stability, and good standing of the corporation, and its connections in the business world, which connections the promoters were apparently anxious to form; and respondent was entitled to believe that the inferences which he drew from the advertising material and statements in regard to the acquisition by the corporation of a substantial working capital, as well as the inference that the entire sum paid by him for each share was actually to become a part of the capital of the corporation, were correct. No misrepresentation as to the manner in which the stock was issued or as to the method of organization should be countenanced.

Objection has been made by appellants that respondent did not actually rely on the statements contained in the advertisements and set forth in the complaint, but that he made his subscription in reliance entirely upon the fact that one Thomas E. Hayden was a director and chief counsel of the corporation, and that said Thomas E. Hayden assured respondent that everything concerning the affairs of the corporation was being thoroughly and honestly conducted, and that he himself had subscribed for 100 shares of the stock in the corporation. This contention has for its chief support the testimony of Hayden and the sales agents who approached respondent in regard to making a subscription for stock. The testimony of Hayden was equivocal and evasive, and it is difficult to believe that Hayden, as one of the original incorporators, could have been ignorant in any way of the facts regarding the Price contract, or of the statements which were being promulgated by the agents of the corporation. The testimony of these witnesses did nothing more than to raise a conflict in the evidence which was resolved in favor of the respondent, and the findings of the court are supported so amply that they cannot be disturbed by this court.

[11] The further contention is made that there is no showing that the fraud in this case, if any, produced any injury to respondent, and that damages, accordingly, cannot be recovered therefor. In an action upon a false representation, which formed the basis for a subscription to the capital stock of a corporation, where the circumstances are such as to entitle the subscriber to rescind, it is not necessary to allege or prove pecuniary damages. Vulcan Fire Ins. Co. v. Jorgensen, supra. Respondent was entitled to rescind and to recover whatever he had paid or delivered to the corporation in the course of the fraudulent transaction.

For the reasons stated, the trial court properly denied appellants' motion for a new trial, and we are of the opinion that the judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

[1] In what is designated herein "Clerk's Transcript on Appeal," there is set forth what purports to be a copy of each of the following, viz: (1) Complaint; (2) amendment to complaint; (3) answer; (4) amendment to answer; (5) forms of special verdicts and stipulation concerning the submission of such verdicts; (6) findings of fact and conclusions of law, filed March 13, 1928; (7) judgment, dated and filed March 13, 1928; (8) clerk's certificate, dated March 13, 1928, to judgment (that it is a true copy of judgment rendered in the action and entered in Volume 30, Judgment Book of said court, at page 468, and further that the papers annexed constitute the judgment roll in said action); (9) notice of intention to move for new trial, dated March 14, 1928, and filed March 15, 1928; (10) minute order of court, dated May 7, 1928, retaxing costs on defendant's motion to tax costs, also minute order denying defendant's motion for new trial after hearing had thereon; (11) notice of appeal, dated May 7, 1928, from judgment rendered on March 13, 1928, in favor of county of Contra Costa and against defendant, Cowell Portland Cement Company, and from the whole thereof; (12) notice to prepare transcript. There is, however, no authentication of the said designated clerk's transcript; the clerk having failed to certify it. The reporter's transcript was duly certified and authenticated by the trial judge under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure. The latter, however, embraces only and is restricted to the testimony and proceedings at the trial which began on January 5, 1928, and ended on January 19, 1928. It is of course well understood that the clerk alone may authenticate the judgment roll and the notice of appeal. Nevertheless, we will treat the said designated transcript as a proper transcript on appeal from said judgment under notice of appeal appearing therein, and will proceed as if the clerk had duly certified and authenticated it as to all matters so appearing in said designated transcript as above mentioned.

It will thus appear that the defendant has appealed from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action that was brought by the plaintiff against the defendant under section 2322a et seq. of the Political Code for judgment and decree that the amount of the expense incurred by the plaintiff in 1927 in eradicating, controlling, and destroying squirrels constituting a public nuisance, and the amount of penalties by operation of law attached thereto, be adjudged and decreed a lien in favor of plaintiff against the described premises of the defendant, and that the said premises be sold to satisfy the amount of the lien together with costs, etc. It will also be noted that the judgment appealed from was made and entered March 13, 1928, and that the appeal is from that judgment alone so then made and entered.

[2] The first contention of defendant and appellant is that section 2322a of the Political Code—under the authority of which section the action was brought—is unconstitutional in that it causes a lien to attach without due process of law or, as otherwise stated, without any hearing or opportunity for hearing having theretofore been given. In this regard, we understand the proposition particularly contended for is that the order of procedure is material and that before the expense of the abatement entry could in any way even initiate a lienable right on the part of the plaintiff, a hearing or an opportunity for a hearing concerning the existence of the facts which under the statute would support a lien is a prerequisite and that under the Constitution, in the absence of such preliminary step, i. e., that such hearing first be had or that such opportunity for hearing first be given, there could be no initiation of any lienable right. But when statutes are measured or construed with reference to constitutional limitations, we do not think that such controlling importance is attached to the mere method of procedure or to the order of the procedure set forth in the statute. The statute is measured and construed in its entirety, and unless when so considered it is violative of constitutional rights, it is not unconstitutional. Illustrations of this rule are many. People v. Hickman, 204 Cal. 470, 268 P. 909, 270 P. 1117; Capital Traction Company v. Hof, 174 U. S. 1, 19 S. Ct. 580, 43 L. Ed. 873.

[3-6] Section 2322a of the Political Code is referable to the police power. The police power is universally considered "to justify the destruction or abatement * * * of whatever may be regarded as a public nuisance. * * " Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 14 S. Ct. 499, 500, 38 L. Ed. 385. " * * Every property owner * * * is also bound so to use and enjoy his own as not to interfere with the general welfare of the community in which he lives. It is the enforcement of this * * * duty which pertains to the police power of the state so far as the exercise of that power affects private property. Whatever restraints the legislature imposes upon the use and enjoyment of property within the reason and principle of this duty, the owner must submit to, and for any inconvenience or loss which he sustains thereby he is without remedy. It is a regulation and not a taking, an exercise of police power and not of eminent domain." 1 Lewis on Eminent Domain (3d Ed.) § 6. "* * * Statutes providing for the summary destruction of vegetation infected with contagious pests, without any preliminary judicial inquiry and without compensating the owner for the resulting loss, are perfectly constitutional so long as they themselves define what constitutes a nuisance, and there is a right to a subsequent judicial review of the action of the administrative officer." 1 R. C. L. p. 790. Said section 2322a as it read in 1927, the year when the county incurred the expenses involved herein, invested the horticultural commissioner with full authority to enter premises within his jurisdiction and to inspect the same or any part thereof, and if such premises were found infected or infested with animal pests injurious to fruits, plants, vegetables, trees, or vines, in writing to "notify the record owner or owners, or person or persons in charge or in possession of the said premises * * * that the same are infected or infested with said * * * animal pests * * * and require such person or persons, to eradicate or destroy or to control to the satisfaction of the said commissioner the said * * * animal pests * * * within a certain time to be therein specified"; provided how such notice should be made by the commissioner and recorded with the county recorder (subdivisions 1 and 2); expressly declared, "Any and all premises * * * infected or infested with * * * animal pests * * * to be a public nuisance" (subdivision 5); provided that "Whenever any such nuisance shall exist at any place within a county, and the proper notice thereof shall have been served as hereinbefore provided and such nuisance shall not have been abated within the time specified in such notice, it shall be the duty of the said commissioner to cause said nuisance to be at once abated by eradicating or by controlling, or by destroying said * * * animal pests * * *"; and that the expense thereof shall be a county charge and the board of supervisors shall allow and pay the same; that "any and all sums so paid from the date of payment shall be and become a lien on the property and premises from which said nuisance has been removed or abated"; that "notice of such lien shall be filed and recorded * * * within thirty days after the right to the said lien has accrued and a copy of said notice of lien shall be mailed to" certain mentioned persons; that "if said sum secured by such lien be not repaid to said county within eighty days from the filing of said notice of lien," certain penalties shall be added; and that "an action to foreclose said lien shall be commenced within ninety days after the filing and recording of said notice of lien * * *" Subdivisions 6 and 7.

It will be noticed from an inspection of the provisions of the section just mentioned that the validity of any lien claimed thereunder is dependent upon the existence of a number of facts constituting a premise upon which the right of lien is based, viz., the existence as a fact of the alleged public nuisance, the service of a reasonable notice on the owner to abate, etc., the failure of the owner to abate, etc., within the reasonable time so specified, the abatement thereafter performed by the county, the expense thereof, etc., all of which enumerated facts must be legally established against the owner in a suit wherein the owner is a party defendant before such lien may be declared to be legally enforcible against his property. "* * * The lien in question here could not be enforced until after a judicial investigation and determination by a court." County of Los Angeles v. Spencer, 126 Cal. 670, 673, 59 P. 202, 203, 77 Am. St. Rep. 217. In support of its contention in this respect, the appellant has cited particularly Hutson v. Woodbridge Protection District, 79 Cal. 90, 16 P. 549, 551, 21 P. 435; but in that case it is expressly stated by the Supreme Court in the opinion that: "The assessment is by the terms of the act made an absolute lien on his property without any provision or opportunity allowed him to show its illegality or unconstitutionality. * * * The act is unconstitutional."

[7] The act we have now under consideration is not open to any such criticism, for it provides in terms that, before the alleged lien may be enforced against the property, the owner shall have his day in court, in a suit wherein he is given full opportunity to show the true facts and the illegality of the proceedings if such illegality exists, and to present all defenses which he may desire. As all property is held subject to the exercise of the police power of the state and as the abatement of a nuisance is an exercise of the police power, it would seem under the situation here presented—the defendant having been duly notified and required to abate the nuisance, the defendant's casting upon the county the work of so abating through failure to respond to and comply with said requirement, the assumption and discharge of said service by the county as to said property which the defendant should have performed—that the equitable consideration of benefit conferred and service rendered, regarded as a necessary basis for a statutory lien, is unquestionably here present, the issues on the trial having been decided in favor of plaintiff. The lien given by the statute is but for an indebtedness due the county, and the collection of that indebtedness by means of the enforcement of a lien therefor as prescribed by the statute is not obnoxious to any constitutional inhibition. County of Los Angeles v. Spencer, supra; County of Riverside v. Butcher, 133 Cal. 324, 65 P. 745; Odd Fellows' Cem. Ass'n v. San Francisco, 140 Cal. 226, 230, 73 P. 987; California Reduction Co. v. Sanitary Works, 199 U. S. 306, 26 S. Ct. 100, 50 L. Ed. 204; Reclamation Dist. No. 108 v. Evans, 61 Cal. 104; Hagar v. Reclamation District No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 4 S. Ct. 663, 28 L. Ed. 569; In re Madera Irrigation Dist., 92 Cal. 296, 323, 28 P. 272, 279, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106. Within the purview of the controlling principles of this case, it may be properly said—as was said in the case last mentioned—defendant's property is not taken from it without process of law if it "is allowed a hearing at any time before the lien * * * becomes final."

[8] It is contended that the board of supervisors did not determine to proceed with the eradication work under the alternative method provided by section 2322a of the Political Code. Unquestionably it is the law that the board must determine in advance the method of procedure that is to be followed. County of San Benito v. Wapple, 188 Cal. 423, 205 P. 673; County of Riverside v. Title Ins., etc., Co., 202 Cal. 233, 238, 259 P. 759; Id., 252 P. 776, opinion in App. Ct. However, from an examination of the evidence bearing on this point, we think that there is substantial support for the finding of the court reading as follows: "V. That prior to the 27th day of April, 1927, the Board of Supervisors of the County of Contra Costa, State of California, had selected and determined, and did select and determine, to adopt the method and procedure provided in section 2322a of the Political Code as the method and system to be used in said County of Contra Costa, for the extermination of ground squirrels therein and had authorized and directed and did authorize and direct the said horticultural commissioner of the said County of Contra Costa, to take action and institute such proceeding under the provisions of section 2322a of the Political Code as might be necessary to eradicate and control ground squirrels on any land in the said county that was infested with ground squirrels."

[9] It is also contended that the county in this work employed persons not certificated as required by subdivision 8 of section 2322a of the Political Code (as said section read in 1927), which section provided that no person shall be permitted to engage for hire in the business of eradicating or controlling plant diseases, insect or animal pests, or noxious weeds injurious to the plant industry of the state "who has not first secured a certificate" in the manner therein provided; and also provided that the horticultural commissioner shall have the power and authority to issue certificates to all persons whom he shall find to be duly qualified for engaging in such work. But in this case it was the county that was engaged in the work with which we are concerned, and obviously the county was under no necessity to secure a certificate or to secure a certificate for its agents or employees in the work. The county was not engaged for hire in any such business, but was doing the work as a governmental function and as an exercise of the police power of the state. Manifestly, the purpose of subdivision 8 was to require proper qualification on the part of persons who as a business engaged in and undertook the eradication of pests for the public generally, and to insure such proper qualification on the part of such persons—required them to submit to examination and to be certificated—for the protection of the public against incompetent and unqualified persons. The said subdivision does not expressly or by any necessary implication require that the horticultural commissioner shall certificate himself or any of his deputies or agents, or that any agent of the county shall be so certificated, and, such being the case, the statute must be construed as not binding on the state and its agents. Balthasar v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 187 Cal. 302, 202 P. 37, 19 A. L. R. 452; Ruperich v. Baehr, 142 Cal. 190, 75 P. 782; Marin Municipal Water Dist. v. Chenu, 188 Cal. 734, 207 P. 251.

The appellant contends that the horticultural commissioner was unfair, arbitrary, and unreasonable; but, as against this contention the court found the horticultural commissioner was not "arbitrary, capricious or unreasonable," and we think the finding of the court is supported by the evidence.

[10] As to appellant's contention that it is charged with the estimated rather than the actual expense of the work, and that several parcels are attempted to be included in one claim of lien, we think the county satisfactorily showed that it had expended on behalf of the appellant the amount allowed by the court, and that as the described premises was but one farm operated as one unit, the objection is not good. Warren v. Hopkins, 110 Cal. 506, 42 P. 986.

[11-15] It appears that one of the defenses of the appellant at the trial was that the horticultural commissioner had extended the time within which the work of eradicating and controlling the squirrels by appellant on appellant's property was required to be done, and that despite such extension and while the further period so given was unexpired, the horticultural commissioner entered with his men and commenced the work of extermination on the property. In such connection the court instructed as follows: "Question 4: Did the Horticultural Commissioner extend the time for defendant to eradicate, destroy or control squirrels on the premises described in the complaint? I instruct you that the affirmative of that issue would be upon the defendant, that is to say if you were to find that the time was extended, that that would have to be established by the defendant by this preponderance of evidence."

It is shown by the reporter's transcript that the plaintiff had introduced in evidence as Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 2, the written notice to abate nuisance, dated April 27, 1927, with proof of service on that date. That written notice so given on April 27, 1927, contained the following language: "You are hereby required to eradicate, destroy, or control the said rodents (ground squirrels) to the satisfaction of the Horticultural Commissioner within ten days after the service on you of this notice." The question of whether or not such extension had been given was submitted to the jury as question 4 of the six questions that were submitted to the jury. The instruction above quoted was given by the court in connection with said question 4.

The plaintiff's case was based upon the fact that on April 27, 1927, said written notice so requiring eradication, etc., within ten days was served on the defendant (see paragraph of the complaint). Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 2 was put in as evidence of such fact. The claim of the defendant was that that notice of ten days had been extended. Appellant contends that it was error for the court to so instruct the jury, in that the law placed the burden upon the plaintiff of proving its case by a preponderance of the evidence. That a plaintiff must so prove his case is of course always true, but said defense of "extension" of time so attempted by the defendant was an affirmative defense and was no part of plaintiff's case. Question 4, so submitting to the jury the question, "Did the Horticultural Commissioner extend the time," etc. (italics ours), was, under stipulation of the parties, submitted to the jury. The defendant therefore must have used the words "extend" and "time" advisedly. Extend what? What time? Obviously, the question had reference to plaintiff's proof, Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 2, service of notice of April 27, 1927, and the ten-day limitation in that notice. Plaintiff had to establish that it had given the ten-day notice alleged in the complaint. As against such evidence, any defense on the part of defendant that the plaintiff had canceled its ten-day notice by extending the time, or by any other act destructive of the ten-day limitation in the notice, would have to be established by the defendant. Under such a situation, there was nothing misleading or incorrect in the instruction. Objection is also made to the language of the court used when submitting to the jury question 5: "Was defendant making a reasonable effort to eradicate, destroy or control ground squirrels on the premises described in the complaint at the time the men employed by the Horticultural Commissioner on behalf of the County of Contra Costa commenced eradication work on said premises?" We have considered the instruction in the light of the objection made, but we are of the opinion that it is not fairly susceptible of the construction attached by appellant. It must be remembered that the question submitted was whether the defendant was making a reasonable effort to eradicate, etc. In the court's endeavor to show that the law is reasonable, and that what it requires is reasonable and fair action, we see nothing that would naturally give the jury the idea that the defendant had taken an arbitrary position. The foreclosure of a lien being in equity, the jury, if made use of, serves only in an advisory capacity, and it is on the findings, etc., of the court that integrity of the judgment depends. The court is not bound by the action of the jury, but is free to diregard its conclusions if they do not appear to be sustained by the evidence, or are otherwise unsatisfactory to it. In such view, error in instruction to an advisory jury is not regarded as controlling, for the judgment and decree are the action of the court and not of the jury. However, in this case the six questions submitted to the jury were answered in accordance with the allegations of plaintiff's complaint. The court found in favor of the plaintiff, and we find that the judgment and decree of the court are supported by the evidence.

[16, 17] Finally, the appellant objects to certain items of costs. As already mentioned, it appears that the judgment (which carried costs) was made and entered March 13, 1928, and that on May 7, 1928, on a motion of defendant to retax, the court struck out various items from the cost bill and ordered "that plaintiff's costs herein be and the same are hereby taxed in the sum of $507.60." From that order so retaxing costs and fixing them at $507.60, we do not find that any appeal was taken. No notice of appeal from the said order appears in the record. Neither does there appear in the record any copy of the motion upon which said order was based, or any copy of any paper or anything else made use of in connection with the hearing of said motion, or in connection with the order made thereon, or at all. Other than the setting forth of the court's order of May 7, 1928, so retaxing said costs as mentioned, the record (both clerk's and reporter's) is absolutely silent. There is nothing presented that could be regarded as operative in such connection, either as a bill of exceptions or other statement on appeal. Of course, in that the judgment of March 13, 1928, awarded costs to the plaintiff, the authority of the court so to charge the costs against the defendant would be a question that could be raised upon appeal from the judgment, for such part of the judgment so awarding costs is as much a part of the judgment subject to review on appeal from the judgment as any other part of it. White v. Gaffney, 1 Cal. App. 715, 82 P. 1088, and cases cited therein. Under the findings of court on the issues presented, any contention that the judgment should not properly carry costs would be untenable, and we do not understand that the appellant makes any such contention. The contention of appellant appears to be that the order of May 7, 1928, retaxing the costs and fixing them at a total of $507.60, was based on a computation of mileage for witnesses not warranted in law. But it is now settled that an order on a motion to retax a cost bill, made after the rendition and entry of final judgment, is appealable as a special order after final judgment. 7 Cal. Jur. § 38, p. 298; Elledge v. Superior Court of Lassen County, 131 Cal. 279, 63 P. 360; Crane v. Forth, 95 Cal. 88, 30 P. 193; Empire Co. v. Bonanza Co., 67 Cal. 406, 7 P. 810; Dooly v. Norton, 41 Cal. 439; Hennessy v. Superior Court, 194 Cal. 368, 228 P. 862; Markart v. Zeimer, 74 Cal. App. 152, 239 P. 856; Schallert-Ganahl L. Co. v. Neal, 94 Cal. 192, 29 P. 622; Quitzow v. Perrin, 120 Cal. 255, 52 P. 632; Spelling New Trial and Appellate Practice, vol. 2, § 519, pp. 1086–1089; Hayne New Trial and Appeal, vol. 2, §§ 196, 197, pp. 1001, 1016.

[18] In that no appeal appears to have been taken from said order of May 7, 1928, retaxing and fixing said costs as a total at $507.60, the said order being an order made after final judgment, we know of no authority that would now permit us to consider the objections raised by the appellant against any of the items that may have entered into said computation. It is manifest that said judgment and decree of the trial court should not be disturbed.

The judgment is affirmed.

FEIG v. BANK OF ITALY NAT. TRUST & SAVINGS ASS'N et al.*

Civ. 8567.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 28, 1932.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 28, 1932. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Nov. 25, 1932.

1. Divorce ⇐168.
Where original records of divorce suit were destroyed, and husband raised no question respecting regularity of order restoring record, he could not collaterally attack original decree by showing summons was not served (St. 1906, Ex. Sess., p. 73, § 2).

2. Divorce ⇐172.
Husband could not claim property accumulated by himself and deceased wife between time of divorce and second marriage, and standing in wife's name, was community property, on ground he in good faith believed he was married then, where evidence established divorce.

3. Money received ⇐1.
Some one must have received for plaintiff money which plaintiff claims in order to raise implied promise to pay money over.

4. Executors and administrators ⇐451(2).
In action against persons who were executors for money had and received, nonsuit was properly granted as to money in bank not received.

5. Husband and wife ⇐49½(5).
Without pleading fraud, mistake, or similar ground, husband may not dispute effect of deed of gift to wife.

6. Ejectment ⇐9(1).
In ejectment action, legal title prevails.

7. Evidence ⇐390(1).
In ejectment action, plaintiff could not vary, by oral testimony, effect of deed of gift or quitclaim deed.

8. Joint adventures ⇐5(1).
Equity is ordinarily appropriate tribunal for enforcement of rights arising out of joint venture.

9. Ejectment ⇐13.
In ejectment equitable title is not sufficient as basis for plaintiff's claim.

10. Action ⇐53(1).
It is settled policy of law to prevent splitting causes of action.

11. Husband and wife ⇐273(12).
Where husband, claiming equitable title to real property in deceased wife's name and money in bank in names of trustees for deceased, accumulated as result of joint venture between time of divorce and remarriage, sued executors, husband's remedy, if any, was in equity.

12. Equity ⇐51(1).
Multiplicity of suits is ground for equity jurisdiction, and doctrine may be invoked where important part of demand is exclusively of equitable nature.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Action by Joseph Feig against the Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association and another, individually and as executors of the last will and testament of Mindell Feig, deceased, and others. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Reisner & Deming, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Leo R. Friedman and James J. Harrington, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

ANDERSON, Justice pro tem.

The plaintiff, Joseph Feig, appeals from a judgment of nonsuit, and complains of the trial court's sustaining certain objections to the introduction of certain evidence. The trial was by a jury.

Plaintiff is the surviving husband of Mindell Feig, who died on July 12, 1929. Defendants, Bank of Italy and Dawson Mayer, are the executors of the last will of the deceased. At the time of the death on July 12, 1929, there was a deposit of $1,165.45 with the Anglo-California Trust Company. This deposit stood in decedent's maiden name. There was also the sum of $7,500 on deposit in the of Bank of Italy. This stood in the names of plaintiff, Joseph Feig, and defendant Dawson Mayer, as trustees for Mindell Feig, the decedent. There were also two pieces of improved real property standing in the name of the decedent at the time of her death. One tract was acquired in 1905, and it may be referred to as the first tract. The other tract, acquired in 1909, may be referred to as the second tract.

The complaint is in three counts. The first count is for money had and received by defendants for the use of the plaintiff; the demand being for the sum of $8,600. The second count charges that the plaintiff deposited with the defendant Bank of Italy the sum of $7,500, payable upon demand. The third count is in ejectment, for possession of the two tracts of real property. Defendants are sued both individually and as executors of the will of Mindell Feig. There was no demurrer for misjoinder. The answer of defendants admitted their qualification as executors. Otherwise the allegations of the complaint were denied, except that it was affirmatively alleged that the plaintiff's sole interest in the estate of the decedent was what was left to him under her will.

The only testimony offered was that of the plaintiff and his witnesses. At the close of the testimony, a nonsuit was granted. The trial court ruled that, if the plaintiff was, under the proof offered, entitled to any relief, he should file a suit in equity. And such is respondents' position here. Having arrived at this conclusion, the trial court sustained various objections to the testimony offered by plaintiff. We next set forth a statement of the evidence, including in part quotations therefrom, and of the rulings on objections to testimony.

Plaintiff testified that he and the decedent, Mindell Feig, were married on March 23, 1889, and that the parties were without property at the time of the marriage. There was evidence that the parties were divorced on May 18, 1890, by a decree of the Superior Court in San Francisco; the decree being obtained by decedent. The record of this divorce had been burned. An order, dated March 20, 1912, restoring the record was received in evidence. It showed decedent obtained a divorce from defendant for willful failure to provide. The plaintiff testified positively that he was never served in the divorce action, and that he had no notice of the proceeding which restored the divorce record; that from the time of the first marriage on March 23, 1889, to the date of the death of his wife on July 12, 1929, they lived together continuously as husband and wife. The plaintiff and the decedent were again married on March 11, 1921, and plaintiff offered an explanation of that act. Plaintiff's counsel claimed plaintiff was not very intelligent, and that plaintiff was entitled to consideration on that ground. In any event, we are powerless to declare plaintiff's testimony was untrue or to say it represented cunning disguised as innocence. There was no cross-examination at all, and there was some corroboration of plaintiff's somewhat remarkable story.

From the direct statements in his testimony and from the circumstances, it may be inferred that plaintiff worked and earned money almost continuously during the period of the union referred to, and that as a result money accumulated and went into bank accounts in decedent's name, and thence into the purchase of real property in the decedent's name; that beyond her management of the property the decedent's contribution to the entire estate created was limited to $500, and the earnings of decedent during a period of two or three years in which she was engaged as a vaudeville actress.

On April 17, 1905, the first tract of real property mentioned in the complaint was deeded to the decedent by a third party through an ordinary grant deed. The purchase price came from a bank deposit, and there was testimony tending to show this deposit resulted from plaintiff's earnings. This was a corner lot located at Golden Gate avenue and Scott street, San Francisco, Cal. On April 24, 1905, the plaintiff executed to decedent a gift deed covering this property. On April 21, 1909, the second tract of real property involved herein was likewise deeded to the decedent by a third party through a grant deed. In this deed decedent was described as "Mindell Feig (wife of Joseph Feig)." On March 18, 1912, the plaintiff made a quitclaim deed to the decedent. This deed covered both tracts, even though the first tract had been embraced in the deed of gift. The trial court sustained an objection to questions put to plaintiff as to the source of the purchase price of the second tract.

More in detail, the plaintiff testified that he was working for the Standard Oil Company at the time of his marriage; that thereafter he was a bartender until 1919, and that he was later employed at other work; that the decedent was a vaudeville actress for two or three years after the first marriage, and thereafter had no employment other than that of housewife; that the only separation between the parties was for nine months during the Spanish American war; that he had never been served with papers, and did not know of the divorce proceeding; that about 1921 his wife advised him that there was some record indicating a divorce, and that it was agreed that they would remarry, this occurring March 11, 1921; that during the entire married life of the parties the plaintiff had worked and that decedent received all of his earnings; that he and his wife had from time to time talked about their property and its ownership; that a conversation occurred before the deed of gift was made in 1905; that his wife took care of the money which he earned; that she would consult with him when she "made a deal" or "anything came up"; that a piece of property was being purchased, and that it was said, "We will buy this piece out here"; that they talked about handling money; that he said, "You take the money and bank it and handle it to the best of your ability because if I handle it there wouldn't be nothing there"; that she said "all right, she would do the handling of the money"; that at the time of the wife's death they had the two pieces of real property referred to in the complaint; that the income from the Golden Gate avenue property was about $75 a month; that "five or six years ago" his wife gave him a blank check, saying: "Joe, here is this check; if anything happens you can get this money quick, because the book is in the trunk, the bank book"; that Mr. Mayer, defendant, had this book, and that Mr. Mayer came to him and told him that cash was needed; that Mr. Mayer filled the check in with his (Mayer's) name, and that the money was then taken to the Bank of Italy "and put it trust in both our names and I had no chance at all with it, he had his name on the check. He got a cashier's check for it, but he never let me get my hand on it"; that Mr. Mayer became one of the executors; that he (Mayer) was in some measure active in the affairs of the decedent; that he lived at the home of the plaintiff and decedent, and that plaintiff furnished his board; that the money used to purchase the first tract, the corner property on Golden Gate avenue, was drawn from the bank by the decedent; that the decedent received $500 from her mother's estate, and no other separate estate; that various pieces of real property had been acquired and disposed of; that these properties had stood in the wife's name; that there was a conversation in regard to holding property in his wife's name; that he "just told her to go right along the way she was because she could handle it much better than I could and I always wanted her to do the handling of it." "She said she could handle it better than I could and I thought so myself. That is all the conversation; we never had much conversation about those things."

"Q. Was anything said as to whose property it was? A. * * * that it was mine and hers; she was saving up for a rainy day.

"Q. That the property was yours and hers; she was saving up for a rainy day? A. For both of us.

"Q. How often did she say that—how many times? A. I couldn't say how many times she said it, maybe once a year. We talked it over, that is all * * * if she wanted to make a deal she would come and consult with me about it."

Specifically, with respect to the first tract of real property, which was acquired in 1905, the testimony was: "Q. Do you remember what conversation, if any, you had in regard to that deed? A. Well, she thought she, we, could make a sale, see, and she says 'now you better turn that over so I can handle it' and I agreed with her."

At this stage, further testimony of the plaintiff, offered for the purpose of explaining the four deeds involved, was rejected by the court.

The plaintiff further testified that neither he nor his wife acquired any property after August 6, 1923, excepting that he (the plaintiff) received $175 out of his brother's estate; that all of the expenses of the household after said date came from the plaintiff's salary and from money in the bank, and that the plaintiff's earnings were not sufficient for all of the household expenses; that he had a conversation with his wife about the divorce; and that he had answered that they were not divorced and that he had stated that he had no papers served upon him, and the wife had suggested that to prevent others from being her sole heirs they should remarry. As indicated, the second ceremony occurred in 1921.

William J. Corlett testified that he knew of the plaintiff's employment for several years between 1914 and 1920, and that certain wages of plaintiff earned in this period were turned over to the decedent.

Mary McKay testified that she lived with the plaintiff and his deceased wife during the years from 1910 to 1917; that she knew the parties prior to 1906; that while she knew them they lived together as husband and wife; that she was present when the deed of gift referred to in the evidence was signed, and that she had talked with the decedent in regard to property, and that the decedent had said "the corner house, one was to be mine, and the other was to be dad's." She answered a question as follows: "Q. You said you had a conversation with regard to community property. What did she say about that? A. She said it was the accumulations of their money and her ability in investing it and it belonged to both of them." The witness next testified that she received sums of money from the plaintiff and that she deposited them in the bank in the name of Mrs. Feig; that these sums were earnings of the plaintiff; that the amounts varied from $75 to $100; that Mrs. Feig did not do any work while she lived with the parties; that they were getting rents from one house and living in the other—the big house; that the rent was about $60 monthly; that the rental was collected by Mrs. Feig and deposited in the bank; that Mrs. Feig always treated Mr. Feig as her husband.

Objection was sustained to questions as to whether plaintiff intended to give to his wife any of the real or personal property which was turned over, as to whether the second tract of real property was acquired from the earnings of himself and wife after marriage, as to the intention and purpose of the deeds referred to and the arrangement under which the deeds were made, and as to whether plaintiff had a conversation with his wife with reference to how the property should be held—"how the property acquired by you and your wife during the marriage should be held." The questions related to the personal property as well as the real property.

[1] Plaintiff's first contention is that he is entitled to have the evidence weighed and judged on the theory that he was the decedent's husband between the date of the divorce on May 18, 1890, and the remarriage of March 11, 1921. As has been stated, the record of the divorce decree claimed to have been obtained by Mrs. Feig in 1890 had been burned. The substance of the divorce record was restored by an order dated March 20, 1912, obtained in a proceeding instituted by Mrs. Feig under the last sentence of section 2 of the Burnt Record Act (St. 1906, Ex. Sess., p. 73). The first sentence of section 2 of said act provides for restoring the substance of the record in a suit where a certified copy cannot be had. Section 1 of the act covers the case when a certified copy exists. If there is no certified copy, the act states in terms notice of the hearing shall be fixed by court order. The last sentence of section 2 of said act reads: "The judgment, decree, order, document, record, paper, process, or file in all cases where the proceeding is in rem, including probate, guardianship and insolvency proceedings, may be supplied in like manner upon like notice to all persons who have appeared therein, and notice by publication or postings to all persons who have not appeared for not less than ten days, as the court may order, and the same when restored shall have the same effect upon all persons who have been personally served with notice of such application as the original, and as to all other persons the same shall be prima facie evidence of the contents of such original." The order restoring the substance of the divorce record recited that due notice had been given of that proceeding, but the "judgment roll" in the proceeding showed that the only notice ordered by the court was a notice by posting for ten days in three public places. That is what the act contemplated, and it cannot be presumed that additional notice was given. Respondents' position seems to be that the recital of due notice in the order is conclusive. But the sentence quoted provides in terms that a party may show that he was not given personal notice of the proceeding. This reverses the ordinary rule with respect to collateral attack where a judgment or order recites or impliedly establishes all necessary notice. 15 Cal. Jur. pp. 56 and 60. The plaintiff was also permitted to answer that he was not served with summons in the divorce action. The latter evidence was not admissible to impeach collaterally the first record if it did exist. The act merely accorded plaintiff the privilege of showing there was no original record, notwithstanding the making of the order restoring the record. The rule against collateral attack applies to a record, the substance of which is proved. Seaboard National Bank v. Ackerman, 16 Cal. App. 55, 116 P. 91. Plaintiff seemingly makes no contention that the original decree did not exist, and he directs the court to no evidence which shows that it did not exist. No question is raised by appellant as to the regularity of the order restoring the record. The attack on the original decree made by an attempted showing that summons was not served in the divorce action is collateral.

It results that plaintiff was not in a position to claim that, in the important period between May 18, 1890, and March 11, 1921, community property was accumulated by himself and Mrs. Feig. The real property was acquired in this period. And the evidence failed to show whether any of the money in the bank was accumulated in the period between March 11, 1921, and August 17, 1923. The plaintiff testified that there were no accumulations after the latter date.

[2] The plaintiff further claims that, regardless of whether the parties were married between the time of a divorce in 1890 and a second marriage at 1921, the facts are such as to show the plaintiff acted in good faith in believing he was married to the decedent, and that the cases apply wherein the courts have divided between the parties property accumulated during such a union. But essential to such a case is good faith, and if it is established that there was a divorce decree, it cannot be collaterally avoided indirectly by plaintiff's contending he believed he was married. Flanagan v. Capital National Bank of Sacramento (Cal. Sup.) 3 P.(2d) 307. And generally relief in such cases is by an action in equity.

[3, 4] It is conceded that the evidence failed to show the defendants ever received the money on deposit with the Anglo California Trust Company, and that the nonsuit was properly granted as to that. It is essential that some person shall have received for plaintiff the money which plaintiff claims in order to raise the implied promise to pay the money over. Papeschi v. La Cava, 93 Cal. App. 209, 211, 269 P. 731; Minor v. Baldridge, 123 Cal. 187, 189, 55 P. 783. Where persons who are executors are sued for money of a third party had and received, they are not sued for particular property held by them as executors. The liability is individual upon an implied promise to pay, and the claim would not be a claim against the estate, for it is not based upon a presented claim. Golden Gate Undertaking Co. v. Taylor, 168 Cal. 94, 141 P. 922, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1152, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 742. As to money, the case then concerns only the money on deposit with the Bank of Italy.

There was substantial evidence of an agreement as to common interest of plaintiff and decedent in the real and personal property involved. The evidence did not, as matter of law, show that an illicit relation between the plaintiff and decedent was a substantial element of the agreement referred to. The demand is not like a demand for housekeeping services made by a woman who has been a party to an illicit union. But in such cases, notwithstanding the union is illicit, effect may be given to an express contract to compensate for services rendered which are of a kind ordinarily paid for. Emmerson v. Botkin, 26 Okl. 218, 109 P. 531, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 786, 138 Am. St. Rep. 953; 13 Cor. Jur. p. 461. If the case consisted of a single demand for money, arising from a trust executed by the decedent, there would be merit in the contention that an action at law would lie for the money. Thus the facts may be such as to make a remedy at law an appropriate remedy where a principal sues to recover on account of personal property or money received by an agent. There may be no necessity for an accounting. 2 Cor. Jur. pp. 886 to 888; Sharpleigh H. Co. v. Knippenberg, 133 Cal. 308, 65 P. 621. Moreover, where the fund involved is a trust fund, and the sole question is as to the share therein of the plaintiff, assumpsit may be the proper remedy. 21 Cor. Jur. pp. 56 and 57. An equitable title to money will support an action for money had and received. 17 Cal. Jur. p. 603. See, also, Seches v. Bard (Cal. Sup.) 8 P.(2d) 835. Had there been evidence of partnership, the plaintiff, as surviving partner, could have sued at law for possession of partnership property because the surviving partner is entitled to possession as against the estate of a deceased partner. The fact that title stood in decedent would not, if there was a partnership, affect the question. Bastjan v. Bastjan (Cal. Sup.) 12 P.(2d) 627. But there was not a particle of testimony that plaintiff had any agency to act for decedent with respect to any interest she claimed in the property involved, and such authorization is vital to the existence of a partnership.

[5-7] By his deliberate acts plaintiff placed title to the real property in the decedent. In aid of the third count of the complaint, appellant contends that, if the evidence established plaintiff was the decedent's husband through the period of the union of the parties, plaintiff's oral testimony should have been admitted for the purpose of showing the intent and purpose of the deeds received in evidence. And many cases are cited by both parties relating to the rules of evidence bearing on the extent to which oral testimony may be offered by the husband to vary the effect of deeds of grant running to a wife from a third person or running from the husband to the wife. Assuming plaintiff was the husband of decedent during the period when the deeds were made, it is, of course, settled that without a pleading of fraud, mistake, or similar ground the husband may not dispute the effect of a deed of gift made by him to his wife. Miller v. Brode, 186 Cal. 409, 411, 199 P. 531; Dale v. Dale, 87 Cal. App. 359, 262 P. 339; Donze v. Donze, 88 Cal. App. 769, 264 P. 294. There was no such pleading here. Appellant contends that a deed from husband to wife other than a gift deed is open to explanation in the same manner in which a grant deed made to the wife by a third person may be explained. See Gilmour v. North Pasadena Land & Water Co., 178 Cal. 6, 171 P. 1066; 31 Cor. Jur. p. 63; Carter v. McQuade, 83 Cal. 274, 278, 23 P. 348; Alferitz v. Arrivillaga, 143 Cal. 646, 77 P. 657, and Estate of Klumpke, 167 Cal. 415, 139 P. 1062. But plaintiff did not show he was the decedent's husband when the deeds to the real property involved were made. He offered no proof to dispute the showing made by the order restoring the divorce decree. While oral testimony may be offered to show a resulting trust where one's money is used in buying real property in the name of another, this principle does not aid plaintiff in this form of an action—an action in ejectment, wherein the legal title prevails. 9 Cal. Jur. p. 983. By a deed of gift in one case, and a quitclaim deed in the other case, he placed the acquired titles in decedent to any extent they were not already there. The suit is not an equity action for the recalling of title to real property from an agent or trustee, nor is it in the form for the enforcement of a constructive trust as where title to real property is taken by one sustaining a confidential relation to the grantor and a valid reason for recalling the title exists. Lauricella v. Lauricella, 161 Cal. 61, 118 P. 430. Plaintiff was not, in support of the third count of the complaint, entitled to vary, by oral testimony, the effect of the deed of gift or the quitclaim deed.

[8-12] Respondents urge that the only theory which the evidence supports in the slightest degree is that decedent acted as trustee for plaintiff or for the plaintiff and decedent, and that to enforce this trust requires a suit in equity. However, a court of law may enforce an equitable right to a money demand where there is nothing to suggest that an accounting is necessary to charge the shares therein, or that a discovery is necessary, or that a lien is to be enforced, or that some other additional equity must be dealt with in connection with the obligation. If the issue is merely as to what the agreement was as to shares of parties in an obligation arising from the receipt of trust funds, an action at law may lie. While viewing the money apart from the realty, there is not under the evidence exactly that "additional equity" which would make the money demand enforceable only in equity, the court cannot blind itself to the true nature of the plaintiff's entire case and ignore the fact that plaintiff in this very action is seeking the return of the whole or a part of the legal title to the realty. If the claim was confined merely to an obligation claimed to be due from a bank and to the settlement of a right thereto in accordance with the terms of an oral agreement under which the decedent held title to an interest in plaintiff's property as trustee, there would be no insuperable objection to oral testimony showing that income had been derived from real property which had been deeded to the decedent as trustee. A person who assumes a relation of confidence and trust towards another and thereby receives a conveyance of real property may not invoke the rule against oral testimony in aid of repudiation of the trust under which he has taken title or under which he has received the income thereof. 22 Cor. Jur., pp. 1259 and 1260; Nolan v. Nolan, 155 Cal. 476, 101 P. 520, 132 Am. St. Rep. 99, 17 Ann. Cas. 1056. Here death has closed the trust, if any, upon which plaintiff seeks to base his claim. The law does not favor litigation by piecemeal. Real property is involved. In an action in ejectment, the equitable title is not sufficient as a basis for plaintiff's claim. If plaintiff's testimony or his offered testimony is true, a court of equity only can grant relief as to the real property or complete relief. The evidence offered and that tendered related to the whole of the real property as well as to moneys deposited. Defendants are sued individually and as executors, and plaintiff is seeking to have determined any claim of the estate of decedent to possession of the real property. There is no pretense that there was anything except a joint venture involving all accumulations of the parties whether in the form of real property or personal property. The demand is, from a legal point of view, an entire and indivisible demand. Equity is ordinarily the appropriate tribunal for the enforcement of rights arising out of a joint venture. Garr v. Redman, 6 Cal. 574. The real property is the subject of the third count of the complaint. It is the settled policy of the law to prevent splitting causes of action. 1 Cal. Jur. pp. 369 and 370; 1 Cor. Jur. p. 1106. Clearly the title to the real property cannot be recalled except by an action in equity. Plaintiff makes no claim that he renounces any claim to the real property. On the contrary, upon this appeal, he asks for a construction of the opinions of the Supreme Court and of the District Courts of Appeal which deal with the admissibility of oral testimony for the purpose of varying the apparent effect of the various deeds which he and third persons made to the decedent, and he invokes the cases relating to a de facto marriage to show that the real property and the money should be divided. The trial court properly treated the plaintiff's demand as entire and indivisible, and it properly ruled that plaintiff's remedy was, if he was entitled to relief, in equity. The plaintiff had no right, while continuing to assert an equitable ownership in the real property to claim the right to sue for money had and received, in effect telling the court that the same evidence was to be used in an equity action to recover the real property or an interest therein. His claim is that the trust is closed, and the circumstance that money received in trust has gone into an account should not constitute an excuse for making two cases out of the claim, when obviously a court of equity, in one action, could determine the whole case. Mann v. Higgins, 83 Cal. 66, 23 P. 206. That an action for money had and received might also lie may be no objection to a suit to charge one as trustee. 10 Cal. Jur. p. 468. Multiplicity of suits is in itself a ground for equity jurisdiction, and the doctrine may be readily invoked where an important part of the demand is exclusively of an equitable nature.

The trial court hesitated about granting the motion for a nonsuit as to the second count. Upon the meager evidence before the court in relation to the agreement or intention under which the money was deposited in the Bank in Italy in the names of the plaintiff and defendant Mayer as trustees for decedent, it would have been error to rule that any title or interest which the plaintiff had in this money was divested by the creation of a valid and effective trust exclusively for the benefit of the decedent. On the other hand, there was no clear or substantial evidence that the decedent did, through the transaction of signing the blank check by means of which the money had been withdrawn from another account, intend or accomplish any gift or transfer of any interest in this money to plaintiff. Plaintiff seems to have yielded to certain activities of the defendant Mayer which were exercised in behalf of decedent. He referred to Mayer as having intruded himself into decedent's affairs over some period prior to her death, and as having acted as her secretary. There was nothing to show decedent disavowed the act of Mayer in preventing the money, which was realized when the signed check was filled and cashed, from passing into plaintiff's control. The record wholly fails to show that decedent knew what plaintiff and Mayer did in fact do. The record fails to show that, if decedent intended plaintiff should have any cash on hand in the event of her death, adequate measures were taken to accomplish this. There is nothing to show that plaintiff's actual interest in the funds deposited with the Bank of Italy was made greater by the deposit which he and Mayer made in that bank.

The judgment of nonsuit appealed from is affirmed.

JUCHERT et al. v. TENENT.

Civ. 8597.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Franklin K. Swart, Judge.

Action by Gertrude J. Juchert and another against Tony F. Tenent. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. On motion for an affirmance of the judgment.

Motion granted.

J. E. McCurdy, of San Mateo, for appellant.

Glensor, Clewe, Schofield & Van Dine, of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, P. J.

[1, 2] The respondents moved for an affirmance of the judgment on the grounds that the appeal was taken for delay only, and that the questions upon which the decision depends are so unsubstantial as not to need further argument. (Section 3, rule V, Supreme Court.)

The appellant's brief presents but two points—that the trial judge erred in refusing to give a proposed instruction, and that the verdict is excessive. The proposed instruction singled out the plaintiffs and directed the jury to take into consideration that they were interested in the result of the suit. The jury was instructed that as to all witnesses their interest or lack of interest in the suit could be considered, and the rule is uniform that, when this is done, it is error to pick out a particular witness and direct the jury's attention to his interest in the suit when the same test is applicable to other witnesses. 14 R. C. L. pp. 734, 735. No authority to the contrary is cited by the appellant, and hence the point raised is "unsubstantial."

On the issue of damages the appellant concedes that both the medical and lay testimony is conflicting as to the extent and probable permanency of the injuries suffered by Mrs. Juchert. The most that can be said for the point raised by appellant is that in some minds the damages awarded might appear to be unreasonably high; but there is nothing in the record to indicate that the verdict was the result of passion or prejudice, and, because there is some evidence of future pain and suffering, it cannot be said that the award is grossly disproportionate to any compensation reasonably warranted. Davis v. Renton, 113 Cal. App. 561, 563, 298 P. 834, Rohner v. Cross (Cal. App.) 9 P.(2d) 509.

No. 224.

Sept. 24, 1932.

Seamen ⊂=32.

Representative of seaman, who died on voyage, could not recover amount which seaman would have earned as wages for entire voyage if he had lived, but only amount of any unpaid wages earned at time of death (Civ. Code, § 2062; 46 USCA § 541 et seq.).

Vincent W. Hallinan and James Purcell, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco, for respondents.

JOHNSON, P. J.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the municipal court in favor of defendants, entered after a general demurrer to the complaint had been sustained without leave to amend.

The action was instituted by the administratrix of the estate of P. J. Murray, deceased, to recover the sum of approximately $1,040, for which it is contended the defendants became liable as wages by reason of the employment of the decedent in the maritime service of the defendants.

The complaint alleges that on August 13, 1930, a written agreement was made between Murray and the defendants whereby Murray was employed as first assistant engineer on board the steamship Golden Tide, owned and operated by the defendants, for a term of, but not exceeding six calendar months at the rate of $175 per month with board and room. According to the contract, Murray was to serve as first assistant engineer on a voyage from San Francisco to Shanghai, and such other ports and places on the Pacific Ocean as the master might direct, and back to the United States to a final port of discharge on the Pacific Coast. It is further alleged that on August 15, 1930, while at sea en route to Shanghai, Murray was killed in the performance of his duties on board the ship, and that compensation on the basis agreed was paid to the time of death. The administratrix seeks by the action to recover an amount representing the full balance of wages for the remainder of a term of six months. There is neither any averment in the complaint, nor any contention otherwise, that Murray's death was due to any fault on the part of the defendants.

The question involved is whether the representative of the estate of a seaman, who died at sea while in the service of his ship, is entitled to recover the amount which the deceased would have earned as wages for the entire voyage if he had lived, or is entitled only to the amount of any unpaid wages earned to the time of death. While such cases are governed by admiralty law, a study of the few decisions on the subject, all found in the early reports, shows lack of harmony in the rules applied in different jurisdictions, and there is no case in point bearing on shipping conditions of our time.

The earliest reported case in this country is Walton v. The Neptune, 1 Pet. Adm. 142, 29 Fed. Cas. page 142, No. 17,135, decided in 1800 by Judge Peters of the United States District Court of Pennsylvania. In that day, the rule, now obsolete, prevailed that the freight was the mother of wages; and, if through disaster the freight was lost, the wages were lost. Influenced by this consideration and by his interpretation of the laws of Oleron and other ancient regulations printed in the appendix of 1 Peters Adm. Dec., Judge Peters ruled that wages for the full voyage were payable to the heirs of the deceased mariner. His view was that such a rule tended to make the master considerate of his men and gave encouragement to those entering a hazardous and laborious employment. The rule was adhered to by Judge Peters in 1802 in Scott v. The Greenwich, 1 Pet. Adm. 155, 21 Fed. Cas. page 830, No. 12,531, and again in 1806 in Sims v. Jackson, which was affirmed on appeal to the Circuit Court, 1 Pet. Adm. 157, 1 Wash. C. C. 414, 22 Fed. Cas. 183, No. 12,890. In 1839 Judge Hopkinson of the Pennsylvania district applied the rule in Johnson v. Coriolanus, which was also affirmed on appeal, Crabbe 239, 13 Fed. Cas. page 737, No. 7,380.

These cases established the rule for the Third Circuit, but in the United States District Courts of South Carolina and Massachusetts, and in a decision of the United States Circuit Court in Maryland, the representatives of a deceased seaman were held entitled only to wages earned to the time of death.

In Carey v. The Kitty, Bee 255, 5 Fed. Cas. page 59, No. 2,402, which came before the United States District Court of South Carolina in 1808, Judge Bee, after commenting on the Pennsylvania cases, expressed an unwillingness to depart from the uniform practice which had prevailed in his own district, and awarded wages only to the time of death, deeming the medieval marine ordinances, as interpreted by Judge Peters, inapplicable to the changed conditions of his day.

Then in 1809 Judge Davis of the United States District Court of Massachusetts had the question before him in Natterstrom v. The Hazard, Bee 441, 17 Fed. Cas. page 1243, No. 10,055. From his critical analysis of the ancient regulations and study of the old sea laws, he reached the conclusion that their true meaning and intent were that, in case of the sickness of a seaman, there should be no deduction from his wages, and, in case of death, what he had earned up to his decease should go to his heirs. The fundamental difference between Judge Davis and Judge Peters lies in their interpretations of the language of the old regulations and of the commentators upon them.

Speaking of the ancient ordinances, Curtis in his Treatise on the Rights & Duties of Merchant Seamen says (page 63): "Whether wages were given for the whole voyage, or only to the time of the death of the mariner, is a vexed question upon the interpretation of these texts." See, also, pages 290 to 295, and 2 Labatt's Master & Servant 1491. Likewise Maclachlan on Merchant Shipping (7th Ed.), referring to the laws of Oleron which were followed by those of Wisby and the Hanse Towns, says (p. 174): "It is not clear whether the payment there directed is to be understood of a sum proportionate to the time of his service or of the whole sum that would have been earned if he had lived to the end of the voyage." And in Cutter v. Powell, [1795] 6 T. R. 320, 324, and Beale v. Thompson, [1803] 3 B. & P. 405, 427, it seems to be conceded that in England wages would be payable merely to the time of death, in the absence of an express stipulation to the contrary.

The conclusion to which Judge Davis came was in accord, as he states, with the uniform usage in Massachusetts. Such usage on the part of the early colonists is significant, since they grew to be a seafaring folk with an active commerce; and their admiralty court at Boston, which was functioning at least as early as 1740, would have been most likely to follow the British admiralty court, if a different practice had been established there.

The ruling of Judge Davis settled the law in Massachusetts, as appears in Luscomb v. Prince, 12 Mass. 576, 579, decided in the State Court in 1815, and in Hanson v. Rowell, 1 Spr. 117, 11 Fed. Cas. page 472, No. 6,043, where in 1845 Judge Sprague of the United States District Court said: "In case of death, there has been some diversity of opinion and practice, elsewhere, on the question whether wages should be paid to the end of the voyage, or only to the time of the death. In this district, the settled practice is, to allow wages only to the time of the death."

Likewise in 1812 Justice Duval of the United States Supreme Court, sitting in the Circuit Court in Maryland, held in the case of Jones v. Smith, reported in 4 Hall, Law J. 276, Fed. Cas. No. 7,497, that, where certain mariners had died on a voyage from Baltimore to Batavia and thence to Japan, their representatives should receive wages only to the time of their decease.

It is thus quite clear that no universal admiralty rule is established by any of the reported cases on the subject in this country.

In 1872 Congress passed an act in behalf of merchant seamen (17 Stat. c. 322, p. 262), which was substantially in the form of the British Merchant Shipping Act of 1854. This act of Congress was carried into the Revised Statutes as title 53 (section 4501 et seq.);

and with subsequent amendments is now embodied in 46 USCA ch. 18 (section 541 et seq.). While the act, neither in its original nor its present form, makes any provision regarding wages in case of death during the voyage, yet it does contain express regulations concerning the right to wages under other contingencies, of such character as to indicate that payment of wages for the full voyage in case of death was not in the contemplation of Congress.

That act abolished the rule that freight is the mother of wages (section 4525, R. S. U. S. [46 USCA § 592]); and among other things provided that, in case a seaman should be discharged without his fault before one month's wages were earned, he should receive, in addition to the wages earned, a sum equivalent to the wages for one month. Then in 1898, by amendments to sections 4581 and 4583, R. S. U. S. (46 USCA §§ 683 and 685), it was made the duty of the master, discharging a seaman in a foreign port, to provide him with employment on another agreed vessel, or to pay him one month's extra wages, if the discharge was not found by the consul to be due to neglect of duty, incompetency, or injury incurred on the vessel; and a like rule was made applicable on the discharge of a seaman by the consul, after being satisfied of the truth of a complaint that the voyage was continued contrary to agreement, or that the vessel was badly provisioned or unseaworthy, or that the officers were guilty of cruel treatment.

Since the compensation of a seaman wrongfully discharged, or entitled to be discharged because of just grievances, was thus limited, it is not reasonable to conclude that Congress contemplated that wages for the full voyage should be payable in case of death. And inferentially it may be said that in 1882 the United States District Court of Pennsylvania in U. S. v. Tobey, 12 F. 347, treated the rule of Judge Peters as superseded by the enactments of Congress. By sections 4538 and 4539, R. S. U. S. (46 USCA §§ 621 and 622), it was provided that, in case of the death of a seaman on a voyage, his effects should be sold at the mast, and that, upon reaching a port in the United States, the master should pay to the shipping commissioner the proceeds of sale and the balance of wages due to the deceased, less any deductions to be made therefrom.

In the case cited, a seaman had died during a voyage from San Francisco to Queenstown, and a sale of his effects at the mast had produced $49.60. The deceased had received an advance of $75 before sailing, and his earnings at the rate of $25 per month to the time of his death, one month and twenty-one days, amounted to $42.50. As he thus owed the ship $32.50, the master on arrival at Philadelphia deducted this amount from the proceeds of sale of the effects, and tendered to the shipping commissioner the balance of $17.10. No objection was raised to the limitation of wages to the time of death, but the commissioner denied the right of the master to deduct the amount due to the ship from the proceeds of sale; his contention being that deduction of any amount chargeable against the deceased could be made under the statute only from "wages due the deceased." This contention was sustained both by the District Judge and the Judge of the Circuit Court of the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, who held that the entire proceeds of the sale must be paid to the commissioner. If either the commissioner or the judges, who in a matter involving only $32.50 were studiously bent on protecting the rights of seamen, had deemed Judge Peters' rule to be still declaratory of the law as administered in their district, they would assuredly have insisted on payment of wages for the full voyage, less the advance of $75.

In the maritime world, conditions have changed enormously since the beginning of the nineteenth century. Instead of sailing vessels making long voyages, with wages depending on freight money being earned, we now have ships traveling under their own power, with great saving of time and lessening of hazards. And, under contracts with the owners or operators, the seamen are entitled to the agreed wages, regardless of the freight money, and may enforce their claims equally with employees in other occupations.

If it were shown to be the present practice in admiralty to award wages for the entire voyage in case of death in the ship's service, it would be our duty to apply such rule; but we are not acquainted with any jurisdiction in which that view now prevails. It has been the practice in this district to allow the wages of a seaman dying on the voyage only to the time of death. We are of the opinion therefore that, in the absence of the promulgation of any authoritative admiralty rule, we may properly give consideration to the policy favored by this state as expressed in its Civil Code when adopted in 1872 and still retained. In section 2062 there is this provision: "If a mate or seaman dies during the voyage, his personal representatives are entitled to his wages to the time of his death, if he would have been entitled to them had he lived to the end of the voyage."

This recommends itself as the reasonable and just rule under modern conditions, and not only one which better accords with the general principles governing the relations of master and servant, but also one that seems to have won the ascendancy in admiralty practice.

Accordingly we conclude that the demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained, and the judgment in favor of defendants is therefore affirmed.

DEPARTMENT OF NATURAL RESOURCES, DIVISION OF FISH AND GAME v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

S. F. 14637.

Supreme Court of California.

Sept. 27, 1932.

1. Master and servant ⇐405(2).

Evidence sustained finding that claimant appointed to oversee commercial seining operations was employee of fish and game commission as respects right to compensation for injuries (Pol. Code, §§ 373, 373a, as added by St. 1927, p. 237; § 642, as amended by St. 1927, p. 947).

Evidence disclosed that claimant was appointed as inspector or overseer to oversee commercial seining of carp and other rough fish by persons having permit from fish and game commission and to see that all game fish caught in nets were removed from nets before rough fish were either returned to lake or transported to other streams or lakes as directed by commission and that his appointment was made by a volunteer warden at request of deputy warden. Though claimant's wages were paid by persons acting under the permit, such persons had no control over claimant's activities, and final right of removal and right to control him was in commission.

2. Master and servant ⇐361.

Feature determining existence of employer-employee relationship is degree of control exercised by alleged employer over alleged employee.

In weighing the control exercised, it is the right of authoritative control that is important and not mere suggestion as to detail.

3. Fish ⇐11.

Fish and game commission held authorized to employ person to oversee commercial seining operations (Pol. Code, § 642, as amended by St. 1927, p. 947)

4. Master and servant ⇐364.

That salary of employee of fish and game commission employed to oversee commercial seining operations was paid by permittees held not to preclude recovery for injuries as employee of commission (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended).

The rule that the Compensation Act excludes from its operation public officials serving without pay did not apply, since claimant was not serving without pay, but was receiving $6 per day, though such compensation was paid by persons having permit to carry on seining operations under claimant's supervision and inspection, and not by fish and game commission.

In Bank.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Joseph L. Means, claimant, opposed by the Department of Natural Resources of the State of California, Division of Fish and Game, alleged employer. To review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation, alleged employer brings certiorari.

Affirmed.

Eugene D. Bennett and Ralph W. Scott, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

A. I. Townsend, of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

PER CURIAM.

Petitioner, the Department of Natural Resources of the state of California, Division of Fish and Game, seeks by this certiorari proceeding to annul an award of the Industrial Accident Commission, directing petitioner to pay compensation to one Joseph L. Means. The basis of the award is that at the time the injuries complained of were received Means was an employee of petitioner, working in the course and scope of his employment. No question as to the extent of the injuries or the amount of compensation is presented in this proceeding.

Petitioner is a department of the state government (Pol. Code, § 373 [as added by St. 1927, p. 237]) and for the purposes of administration is organized into divisions, one of which is the division of fish and game (Pol. Code, § 373a, as added by St. 1927, p. 237).

The facts giving rise to this controversy are not materially in dispute, and are as follows:

[1] One Mabel Kayser desired to commercially seine Ellis lake, located within the city limits of Marysville, for carp and other commercial or "rough" fish. Her divorced husband, who admittedly at all times was acting as her agent, approached the mayor and members of the city council of Marysville, and secured their consent to seining the lake provided a permit was secured from the division of fish and game. Mr. Kayser thereupon secured from the division of fish and game, through N. B. Scofield, chief of the bureau of commercial fisheries, a permit running to the city manager of Marysville to "use nets for the purpose of removing carp and other rough fish from Ellis lake." The permit expressly provided "that fishermen who may engage in the seining of carp and other rough fish for sale, must first procure a commercial fishermen's license," and it is further provided that a representative of the fish and game commission must be present when seining operations are under way and that the game fish which may be caught are to be taken care of, either by returning them to the water unharmed or by transplanting them under the supervision of the representative of the fish and game commission. It is admitted by petitioner that although this permit was issued to the "City Manager of Marysville" Mabel Kayser was the real party in interest, and that the sole purpose of issuing the permit was to allow the Kaysers to engage in commercial fishing at Ellis lake. Having secured this permit Kayser proceeded to Ellis lake to commence seining operations. Joseph L. Means, applicant herein, appeared at the lake as the "representative of the Fish and Game Commission" referred to in the permit. It is the circumstances surrounding the employment of Means that present the first question to be determined in this proceeding, viz.: Was Means employed by the Kaysers, or was he an employee of the fish and game commission? The Industrial Accident Commission first held that Means was an employee of the Kaysers, but on rehearing found that he was an employee of the fish and game commission. It is the correctness of this last determination that is challenged in this proceeding.

L. W. Dinsdale, deputy fish and game warden of Marysville, testified that he received a telephone call from S. J. Carpenter, captain of the fish and game patrol in that area, informing him that the Kaysers had a permit to seine Ellis lake, and that he, Dinsdale, should designate the representative of the fish and game commission required by the permit. Carpenter went to the lake and examined the Kaysers' permit. He was then called out of town on urgent business, and requested a volunteer warden, one Loehne, to select or designate the overseer. Loehne selected Means, and in accordance with instructions from Dinsdale, informed Means that his duty was to see that all game fish that were caught in the nets were removed from the nets before the rough fish were removed, and then either returned to the lake or transported to other streams or lakes as directed by the fish and game commission. Dinsdale also testified that it was the custom that such overseer should be paid by the commercial fisherman whose activities he was supervising. In the present case, the evidence shows, Kayser agreed to pay Means $6 per day, and in fact paid him that sum up until the time of the injury. Dinsdale also testified that the fishermen had no power to appoint or select such overseer, but that he had sole control over that; that he, through Loehne, gave Means instructions as to what he was to do; that Means' only duty was to see that no game fish were illegally removed; that he was under no duty to assist the fishermen in any other way. Means, as inspector or overseer, was supposed to be on the job whenever Kayser fished, and in this sense Kayser controlled the hours of employment of Means. On the other hand, Kayser could not fish unless and until Means was present. After supervising Kayser's activities at Ellis lake for several days, Means accompanied Kayser on an auto truck on a trip to a nearby lake for the purpose of transporting some of the game fish that had been caught to this other lake. On this trip Means received the injuries which gave rise to this proceeding. Dinsdale testified that it was part of the overseer's duties to take these trips to be sure that the game fish were in fact transported. Kayser testified that except for paying Means' wages, and designating the time for carrying on the fishing activities, he gave Means no orders; that Means got his orders from the warden or his deputy. Dinsdale testified that Means held his appointment as overseer at his, Dinsdale's, pleasure, and that, if Means' work had not been satisfactory, he, Dinsdale, would have removed him. The fish and game commission contends that this evidence shows Means was the employee of the Kaysers. It is pointed out that the Kaysers paid Means his wages and controlled his hours of work. It is contended that Means was present for the benefit of the Kaysers; that Means was merely assisting the Kaysers to perform their duties as required by the permit; that the Kaysers' permit was granted to them for their sole pecuniary gain; that the fish and game commission in no way benefited by having Means present to supervise the Kaysers' fishing activities. We do not think that this interpretation of the evidence is correct. It is obvious that Means' presence was required by the fish and game commission to assist it in performing its duties in reference to the protection of game fish. At the very time he was injured, Means was supervising the transportation of game fish from one lake to another as directed by the commission. The purpose, nature, and object of Means' appointment is repugnant to the contention that Means was employed by the Kaysers, the persons whose activities it was his duty to watch to see that game fish were not illegally removed. The mere fact that the Kaysers paid Means his wages is not determinative of the question as to who was his employer. In County of Los Angeles v. Industrial Accident Commission (Cal. App.) 11 P.(2d) 434, one Calderwood was employed as a deputy marshal of the municipal court of Los Angeles. As such deputy his salary was paid by the county of Los Angeles. In spite of this fact it was held that he was an employee of the city of Los Angeles, and that the city and not the county was liable for compensation. At page 437 of 11 P.(2d) it is stated: "The contention of the city that, from the fact that the Legislature has placed upon the county the burden of the payment of the salaries of the attachés of the municipal court, the county must be deemed the employer of the deceased, is without justification. Although, in most cases where the contract of employment exists between individuals, the source of payment as a rule is one of the indicia of the existence of the relationship, in cases involving governmental functions, this does not always seem to be true." Likewise, in Claremont Country Club v. Industrial Accident Commission, 174 Cal. 395, 163 P. 209, L. R. A. 1918F, 177, this court held that a caddy was an employee of the country club although his wage was paid by the person using him.

[2] The determinative feature in ascertaining whether the employer-employee relationship exists in any given case is the degree of control exercised by the alleged employer over the alleged employee. As was said in Western Metal Supply Co. v. Pillsbury 172 Cal. at page 417, 156 P. 491, 495, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 390: "The real test by which to determine whether a person is acting as the servant of another is to ascertain whether, at the time when the injury was inflicted, he was subject to such person's orders and control and was liable to be discharged by him for disobedience of orders or misconduct." In weighing the control exercised, it is the right of authoritative control that is important and not mere suggestion as to detail. Stacey Bros. Gas Construction Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 197 Cal. 164, 239 P. 1072.

Tested by the rules set forth in these cases it seems clear to us that the Industrial Accident Commission correctly held that Means was employed by the fish and game commission. There can be no doubt that the right of authoritative control rested solely and exclusively with the fish and game commission. It was to assist that commission in protecting game fish that Means was employed—not to assist the Kaysers in removing "rough" fish from Ellis lake. While Means was performing his duties in seeing that game fish were not illegally removed the Kaysers had no control over him whatsoever. No service of any kind was being rendered for the Kaysers—the services were rendered for the benefit of the fish and game commission. In addition to these facts, the evidence shows that the right to discharge Means ultimately and necessarily rested in the commission.

[3] Petitioner also contends that admitting Means was an employee of the commission, the officers of that commission had no authority to employ him. It will be remembered that Means was employed as a result of an order given to Dinsdale by S. J. Carpenter, captain of the fish and game patrol in the Sacramento valley, to appoint some one as the representative of the commission. Section 642 of the Political Code (as amended by St. 1927, p. 947) provides in part:

"It is the duty of the fish and game commissioners: To see that the laws for the protection and preservation of wild animals, wild birds, fishes, mollusks, crustacea and all other forms of aquatic animals and plants are strictly enforced, and for that purpose from time to time to employ such deputies, with or without pay, clerks, assistants and other employees as they may need to discharge in proper manner the duties imposed upon them by law. * * * To employ persons skilled in fish and game breeding to assist them in their duties."

Under this section we think that the fish and game commission has authority to appoint employees to aid it in the performance of its duties in the protection and preservation of fish, and that Means was such an employee.

[4] Petitioner also contends that, since the fish and game commission paid Means no salary, the case comes within the rule enunciated by this court in Department of Natural Resources v. Industrial Accident Commission, 208 Cal. 14, 279 P. 987. In that case Frank Machado was drowned while acting in the capacity of a volunteer deputy of the fish and game commission, serving without pay. It was held that, although Machado was an employee of the commission his dependents were not entitled to compensation for the reason that he was not such an employee as came within the provisions of the Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended). It was held that the Compensation Act excluded from its operation public officials serving without pay. That case can have no application here. In the instant case Means was not serving without pay, but was receiving $6 per day. As we have already pointed out, it is immaterial who paid his wages, the important fact is that he was paid wages. For that reason the Machado Case (Department of Natural Resources v. Industrial Accident Commission), supra, is not in point here.

For the foregoing reasons the award of the Industrial Accident Commission is affirmed.

WASTE, C. J.

This is an appeal from an order vacating a default judgment.

The action is one to recover on a promissory note. Defendant was personally served with summons on October 1, 1927. Purporting to act under subdivision 1 of section 585 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and upon application therefor, the clerk of the court below entered the defendant's default. Such default was premature, having been improperly entered one day prior to the expiration of the period within which an answer or demurrer might have been filed. Judgment upon such premature default was not entered by the clerk until three days later, at which time the defendant's answer had been filed. Approximately two years after the entry of such judgment the defendant moved the trial court to vacate the same. From the order granting the requested relief, the plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

[1-3] There can be no doubt as to the impropriety of the clerk's action in prematurely entering the defendant's default. Subdivision 1, § 585, Code Civ. Proc. In the absence of a default regularly entered, it was also improper for the clerk to enter a formal judgment at a time subsequent to the filing of the defendant's answer. It is well settled that a plaintiff's failure to have the defendant's default regularly entered is an implied grant of further time to the defendant in which to appear in the action. Tregambo v. Comanche Mill & Mining Co., 57 Cal. 501; Reher v. Reed, 166 Cal. 525, 528, 137 P. 263, 264, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 737; Lunnun v. Morris, 7 Cal. App. 710, 95 P. 907; Mitchell v. Banking Corp., 81 Mont. 459, 264 P. 127. In the instant case, the defendant's default never having been regularly entered, his answer filed prior to the clerk's purported entry of the formal judgment must, under the foregoing authorities, be held to have been timely filed, thus precluding the entry of such judgment. This being so, it is essential that we determine the status of said judgment. If it is merely voidable, as contended by the appellant, the vacating order here appealed from must be reversed, for it is elementary that voidable orders and judgments may only be attacked by appeal or by motion made within the six months' period prescribed by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the present case the motion to vacate was not made within that period. If, on the other hand, the default and subsequent judgment are void, the order vacating them must be affirmed, for a judgment which is void upon its face is a dead limb upon the judicial tree which may be lopped off at any time. Such a judgment may be set aside by the court at any time, and it is immaterial how the invalidity is called to its attention. People v. Greene, 74 Cal. 400, 405, 16 P. 197, 5 Am. St. Rep. 448; Wharton v. Harlan, 68 Cal. 422, 425, 9 P. 727; Kelly v. Van Austin, 17 Cal. 564.

[4, 5] Examination of the authorities satisfies us that a judgment entered by the clerk under subdivision 1 of section 585, supra, at a time when the defendant's answer is on file and upon a default prematurely taken, is void and may be set aside at any time. The clerk in entering judgments upon default acts in a mere ministerial capacity. He exercises no judicial functions. The statute authorizes the judgment, and the clerk is only the agent by whom it is written out and placed among the records of the court. The statute is the measure of his authority. In exercising the power conferred, he must conform strictly to the provisions of the statute or his proceedings will be without binding force, and any judgment entered by him will be void. Kelly v. Van Austin, supra; Junkans v. Bergin, 64 Cal. 203, 204, 30 P. 627; Landwehr v. Gillette, 174 Cal. 654, 656, 163 P. 1018. This is well stated in Freeman on Judgments (5th Ed.) 2666, § 1283, wherein the following appears:

"Consequently in some states provision is made by statute for the entry of a default judgment by him [clerk] in such cases without the intervention of the court. But even here, as in the case of his preliminary entry of default, he acts ministerially and is confined strictly to limitations of the statute. * * *

" 'The clerk derives all his powers from the statute, and as they are special, no intendments are to be made in support of his act, but in each case it must appear that what he did was within the authority conferred on him by the statute; and whether the act done by him be considered as purely ministerial or of a mixed nature, partaking of elements both ministerial and judicial, is of no practical importance. The question is, Had he authority to enter the defendant's default and thereupon judgment final against him as the case stood at that time?' If this question is answered in the negative, or in other words, if the clerk had no authority to enter the default, or if, having authority to enter the default, he had no authority to enter judgment thereon, then any judgment entered by him without the direction of the court is void, [citing, among others, many California cases] though there is some authority to the contrary."

Our conclusion that the judgment herein is void and may be set aside at any time finds support in Reher v. Reed, supra. In that case the plaintiff's answer to the cross-complaint, though tardily presented, was nevertheless filed prior to the clerk's purported entry of default and judgment on said cross-complaint. Though the motion to vacate was there made within thirty-five days after the entry of the default and judgment, this court, in affirming the order vacating the judgment, declared: "But it was not necessary to resort to section 473 or to determine whether or not, as an application under that section, the grounds were well stated. The clerk is not authorized to enter a default, unless no answer has been filed 'within the time specified in the summons or such further time as may have been granted.' Code Civ. Proc. § 585. When a party, after the time expressly granted for filing a pleading against him has expired, suffers further time to elapse without taking any action thereon, and in the meantime the pleading is served and filed, he, by such conduct, in effect grants the additional time and the party is not strictly in default. The clerk is not authorized to enter a default for failure to file an answer when such answer is on file at the time such default is attempted to be entered. This was expressly decided in Tregambo v. Comanche Co., 57 Cal. 501. There the time to answer expired on April 21, 1879. A demurrer was mailed to the clerk on April 20th but did not reach him until April 29th. The default was entered by the clerk on May 2d. It was held that the default was not authorized and should have been set aside by the lower court. There is abundance of authority to the same effect in the decisions of other states. * * * It follows that on the face of the record it appeared that the clerk was without authority to enter the default, and consequently without authority to enter the judgment. In such a case the court may set aside the judgment of its own motion at any time, and it is immaterial how the invalidity is called to its attention. * * *"

In announcing our conclusion herein, we are not unmindful of Gray v. Hall, 203 Cal. 306, 265 P. 246, May v. Hatcher, 130 Cal. 627, 63 P. 33, and In re Newman, 75 Cal. 213, 16 P. 887, 7 Am. St. Rep. 146, relied on by the appellant in support of his contention that the judgment here involved is voidable only, and now immune from attack. The cited cases are readily distinguishable from the case at bar. There is a marked difference between a default judgment entered by the court under subdivision 2 of section 585, supra, and one entered by the clerk under the first subdivision of the section. In the cited cases the judgments were entered by the court and not by the clerk. They were cases in which a clerk's judgment was not authorized. Having jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter of the litigation, any impropriety in the court's entry of judgment constituted, at most, but an erroneous exercise of jurisdiction. In such a case there is not an absence of jurisdiction, only an irregular or erroneous exercise of it. Gray v. Hall, supra. A judgment entered by a court under such circumstances is therefore merely voidable, and not void, and can only be attacked by appeal or motion made within six months thereafter. However, where a clerk purports to enter a default and judgment prematurely, or otherwise exceeds the limited power conferred upon him by the statute, there is an entire absence of jurisdiction and his action, as already shown, is a nullity and open to attack at any time.

Spaulding & Co. v. Chapin, 37 Cal. App. 573, 576, 174 P. 334, 335, one of the authorities relied on by the appellant as supporting a contrary conclusion, recognizes that a judgment entered by a clerk in excess of his authority is void. It is there stated: "In support of this position we are reminded that the clerk in entering a judgment acts merely in a ministerial capacity, and, unless he confines himself strictly within the statute, his acts can have no binding force. It is true that the clerk exercises no judicial functions, and that no intendments can be indulged in support of the validity of his acts. The statute directs the judgment. The clerk acts as the agent of the statute. If the law does not authorize the act, the judgment is without authority and is void. If, however, in a case where the authority of the clerk is undoubted and he errs, his act is not void, but only erroneous. His error can be corrected on motion made in time or on appeal." This principle finds expression in Bond v. Pacheco, 30 Cal. 530, 534, 536, also cited by appellant. In that case the clerk in entering a default judgment erred in computing the amount thereof. In declaring the judgment to be voidable only, this court said that "There was simply an error in amount, and not a judgment in a case, or of a character, which the Clerk was not authorized to enter. * * * There is no want of jurisdiction over the subject matter, but only an error in its exercise." Such a case is distinguishable from the one at bar. In the instant case the clerk entered a default and judgment when not authorized by the statute. This constituted an excess of jurisdiction and not an erroneous exercise thereof.

Hallock v. Jaudin, 34 Cal. 167, Christerson v. French, 180 Cal. 523, 182 P. 27, and Jones v. Moers, 91 Cal. App. 65, 266 P. 821, contain nothing suggesting a conclusion other than that herein announced. None of those cases presented circumstances indicating an excess of jurisdiction on the part of the clerk in entering a default and judgment.

The judgment entered in California Casket Co. v. McGinn, 10 Cal. App. 5, 100 P. 1077, 1079, was not invalid on its face, as is the judgment here. At the time the clerk there entered the default and judgment, the affidavit of service of summons then on file indicated that the defendant's time to answer had expired. The judgment being valid on its face, the appellate court in reversing the order vacating it based its decision on the "rule of universal application that a court will not set aside a judgment valid on its face, in a case where it had jurisdiction, except the party desiring to be relieved makes at least an apparent showing of honesty and good faith, by showing that he has a defense to the action on its merits." Moreover, an examination of the opinion in the cited case clearly indicates that the appellate court did not have in mind the distinction between a default judgment entered by the clerk and one entered by the court. This is apparent upon a reading of the opinion wherein repeated reference is made to the entry of judgment by the "court," though the case was of such a nature that the judgment could have been, and probably was, entered by the clerk. Of course, if the judgment was, in fact, entered by the court the case would then fall within the rule announced in Gray v. Hall, supra, and would be of no assistance to the appellant, for reasons already stated. On the other hand, if the judgment was entered by the clerk, the decision should not be held to be binding here, for, as already stated, the appellate court therein failed to recognize or discuss the distinction above pointed out.

The fact that the clerk in entering a default and judgment is, in effect, the agent of and acting for the court, does not alter our conclusion. As already stated, he performs a purely ministerial function. He can only enter judgment upon a default duly and regularly entered. His premature entry of such default and judgment constitutes an excess of the very limited jurisdiction conferred upon him, and is a nullity. The default and judgment here entered were, as already shown, premature and void. Being void, they may properly be set aside by the court at any time, regardless of how the invalidity is brought to its attention; and its jurisdiction and duty to set such a default and judgment aside is not affected by the character of the defendant's answer to the complaint.

It necessarily follows that the order vacating the default and judgment herein must be, and it is hereby, affirmed.

We concur: SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.; TYLER, Justice pro tem.; LANGDON, J.

PRESTON, J. (concurring).

I concur in the conclusion and judgment, but I think this cause serves to make clear the error the court fell into in Gray v. Hall, 203 Cal. 306, 265 P. 246, and that that case should be overruled. The attempt in the present case to distinguish the effect of a judgment prematurely entered by the clerk from one at the same time entered by the court itself does not appeal to me as having any substance in it. Jurisdiction of the same grade is wanting in each instance. My views are expressed at length in a dissenting opinion in the Hall Case, and after further deliberation I adhere to the position there taken. Happily, however, the decision here partially counteracts the injury that may hereafter result from the Hall Case.

PER CURIAM.

Plaintiff, a fireman employed by the city of Los Angeles, was injured in the line of duty by reason of the negligence of defendant's employees operating a street car. He was incapacitated, but under the terms of a city ordinance his full salary of $200 a month was paid. Medical and hospital treatment was also furnished him by the city. Plaintiff made no claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831 as amended), but brought an action for damages against defendant Los Angeles Railway Corporation. The city intervened, seeking a lien upon any judgment for sums paid to plaintiff, and also seeking recovery against defendant for any future liability to plaintiff under the Compensation Act. An offer of settlement was made by defendant and accepted by both plaintiff and intervener. The sum of $3,500 was thereupon deposited in court, and releases executed and delivered to defendant. The trial court then entered judgment in favor of the city in the amount of $778.14, the amount it had already paid to plaintiff, and in favor of plaintiff for the balance. It was provided, however, that the said balance should not be paid to plaintiff until he released the city from any future liability. Plaintiff appealed.

The theory of the city is that upon injury to plaintiff in the course of his employment it incurred liability under the Workmen's Compensation Act, that the continuance of the full salary of plaintiff during the period of his disability constituted in part a payment of compensation under the said act, and that under section 26 thereof, as amended, the city as an employer was entitled to reimbursement for its expenditures out of any recovery from a third party tort-feasor. Plaintiff argues that the city is not entitled to reimbursement because there was, in fact, no payment of compensation as required by the Workmen's Compensation Act; that the payment was by virtue of a city ordinance providing that every officer or member of the fire department injured in the line of duty should receive his full salary while incapacitated. Section 3, subdivision 3, of the Compensation Act (as amended by St. 1919, p. 911), provides that the term "compensation" means "compensation under the act." It therefore follows, according to plaintiff, that such payment cannot be considered as having been made on account of compensation under the act, and that, in order for the city to justify its claim to part of the judgment, it would be necessary for it to show two distinct payments, the full salary under the ordinance and an additional sum as compensation. Language in Jackson v. Wilde, 52 Cal. App. 259, 198 P. 822, tends to support this view, but, since it results in obvious double recovery for the employee, the conclusion may well be questioned.

The problem is essentially one of construction of the ordinance. The payments made by the city should, in plaintiff's opinion, be deemed to be in compliance with the ordinance; and, in intervener's opinion, in fulfillment of the obligation incurred under the Compensation Act. The assumption made by plaintiff is that it must be one or the other, but we see no reason why this should be so. It is true that the ordinance requires the payment of a larger sum than the state law (the full salary instead of a certain percentage thereof), and that, in the absence of the state law, the salary would still have to be paid. But, to the extent of the sum required to be paid as compensation, the payment is just as much a compliance with the state law as with the ordinance, and can be so considered. To take a contrary view would mean that the city, having for a certain period paid the full salary of an employee, who did no work during such period, would in addition be liable to him for a further sum as compensation for his incapacity. Plaintiff suggests that under section 69a the act should be liberally construed in favor of the employee, but nothing in that section nor in the general policy of the law sugests the propriety of a double payment for a single injury, or a larger payment for an incapacitated employee than for one rendering services. The proper and reasonable construction of the ordinance, it seems to us, is that it fulfills the obligations of the city as an employer under the act. That it goes further and provides for a greater amount than the act requires is doubtless justified by the peculiarly hazardous character of the fireman's work.

In the case of private employments, it has been held, in accordance with the practice of the Industrial Accident Commission, that payment of full wages to an injured employee constitutes the giving of compensation, operating, e. g., to toll the statute of limitations on the right to file a claim. London G. & A. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 92 Cal. App. 298, 268 P. 670. Sacramento v. Central Cal. Traction Co., 78 Cal. App. 215, 248 P. 307, takes the same view as to a public employment, and substantially supports the conclusion hereinbefore expressed. There a fireman was injured by collision of the fire truck and a street car operated by defendant, and the city sued, seeking reimbursement for expenditures. The injured employee had received full pay, under the provisions of an ordinance. The court held that the city could recover, regardless of the fact that no formal demand for compensation had been made, and regardless also of the fact that the amounts actually paid were in excess of those required under the act. The court said (page 220 of 78 Cal. App., 248 P. 307, 309): "We deem it immaterial * * * out of what particular fund the payments may have been made or in response to what particular demand the moneys were so paid. * * *" City of Oakland v. Lyckberg, 95 Cal. App. 71, 272 P. 606, following the preceding case, also held that the municipality, having paid the salary of the injured employee, a policeman, was entitled to recover the amount from the third party tort-feasor.

The case of Jackson v. Wilde, supra, states that a fireman is a public officer and that his salary is annexed to his office and payable whether he is rendering services or not, and that therefore this payment cannot be considered compensation. We deem it unnecessary to discuss the conflict of authority on the question whether firemen are "public officers" rather than employees, since such a characterization does not solve the fundamental problem of the proper interpretation of the ordinance and the state law. Regardless of what he may be called, the state law requires payment to a fireman of compensation upon his becoming injured or disabled in the course of his employment; the ordinance of the city of Los Angeles requires payment of his full salary during the period of his incapacity; and, in the absence of an express contrary statement in the ordinance, a reasonable interpretation must be followed. Under this interpretation part of the salary received is to be deemed a performance of the obligation to give compensation. Jackson v. Wilde, supra, in so far as it makes a contrary holding, is overruled.

The judgment is affirmed.

PER CURIAM.

A hearing was granted in this case after decision by the District Court of Appeal, Fourth Appellate District. Upon further consideration of the opinion of Mr. Presiding Justice Barnard, we are satisfied that it correctly determines the issues involved in the appeal, and hereby adopt it as the opinion of this court. It reads as follows:

On April 15, 1921, plaintiffs' assignors entered into a contract with the defendants whereby they agreed to sell them a certain patent covering a wall bed, another patent covering a gas stove on swinging doors, a certain license agreement with another party permitting that party to operate under the first patent, upon the payment of $1 for every wall bed sold, together with any patents that might be issued in any foreign countries upon these same devices. The defendants agreed to pay for these things the sum of $20,000 payable in varying installments on the 1st day of January of each year up to and including the year 1930, it being also agreed that the sellers should place the necessary assignments in escrow in a bank, to be delivered when the final payment was made. Such assignments were placed in escrow as agreed and the payments were made up to and including the one due January 1, 1926. On November 22, 1926, by a decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, the patent on the wall bed first above mentioned was declared invalid, as lacking in novelty. The defendants failed to pay an installment of $2,000, which by the terms of the contract became due on January 1, 1927, and this action was brought for the purpose of compelling payment of the same. Two defenses to this suit were interposed. By answer and cross-complaint it was sought to reform the agreement by inserting one word therein in order to comply with the alleged intention of the parties and, as so reformed, it was claimed that the contract gave to the defendants an option to cease making further payments, and that such option was exercised by their failure to make one of the payments provided for. As a second defense it was alleged that there was a total failure of consideration, in that the first patent referred to had been declared invalid. After trial, the court refused to reform the contract and gave judgment for the plaintiff, from which judgment this appeal has been taken.

The first point raised is that the evidence is not sufficient to support certain findings to the effect that the contract, as written, expressed the true intention of the parties thereto and that it was not the intention of the parties to give to the appellants an option to terminate the agreement by failing to make payments thereunder. The contract contained the following paragraph:

"It is further provided that in the event of a default by the said parties of the second part in the payment of any of the payments hereinabove provided for, then and in that event the said parties of the first part, within thirty (30) days after said default shall have occurred, cancel and terminate this contract, and shall declare any and all moneys theretofore paid hereunder forfeited and shall retain the same as and for liquidated damages, and in full of any and all claims arising or to arise hereunder."

The appellants sought to reform this portion of the instrument by inserting the word "shall" between the word "occurred" and the word "cancel" in this paragraph. It may first be observed that the reformation asked for, if granted, would not have had the effect claimed by the appellants. Wilcoxson v. Stitt, 65 Cal. 596, 4 P. 629, 52 Am. Rep. 310; Burg Bros. v. Bercut, 73 Cal. App. 114, 238 P. 166. However, the court found that the contract as written did not fail to express the true intention of the parties and that the parties did not intend said written agreement to give to the appellants an option to terminate the same by failing to make the payments provided for. The respective parties set forth in their briefs some sixty pages of evidence relating to this subject. It would serve no useful purpose to summarize this evidence here, but it fully appears that while the evidence is conflicting, it is amply sufficient to support the findings attacked. Incidentally, these appellants brought a former action to reform this same contract and to insert another word therein (Holmes v. Anderson, 90 Cal. App. 276, 265 P. 1010), and a question naturally arises as to why a mistake of the importance of the one here claimed was overlooked at that time.

The only other point raised is that the respondents cannot recover in this action for the reason that there was a total failure of consideration because the first patent mentioned was declared invalid. The court found that the consideration had not failed either wholly or in part; that the invalidity of the one patent did not constitute a total or partial failure of consideration; and that such invalidity did not constitute a defense to this action. While we think the finding that there was not a partial failure of consideration is erroneous, this is not material, as the only issue raised by the pleadings and disclosed by the theory upon which the case was tried, is that there was a total failure of consideration. The appellants rely on a number of cases from federal courts which are claimed to establish the rule that the invalidity of a patent sold on deferred payments is such a total failure of consideration as will relieve the purchaser from a further performance of the contract. Conceding, but not deciding, that this is the correct rule, it is not determinative of the case before us, since the contract here in question provides one purchase price, payable in installments, for the purchase of a number of things. In Imperial Livestock, etc., Co. v. Tracy, 208 Cal. 205, 281 P. 50, 54, the court said: "While it is true that the answer pleaded that no consideration passed for execution of the note, yet defendant offered no proof to show that the stock was valueless. On the contrary, the clear inference from the evidence is that it is of considerable value. Under well-settled rules of law, defendant could not keep the stock and resist payment of the note in toto without offering evidence to show that the stock was entirely without value."

While the facts and issues in that case were somewhat different from the one at bar, the principle set forth has an application here. A total failure of consideration was here pleaded and is now relied on. There is here more than an inference that the appellants received something of value. Not only did they have the use for about six years of the patent which was later declared invalid, but it appears that for some time, the extent of which is not shown, they received the royalties on the license agreement with another party which they were to receive under the contract and an assignment of which was placed in escrow in a bank. They further received all of the benefit of the other patent referred to which was never declared invalid. Appellants argue that this second patent had expired by lapse of time before the first patent was declared invalid and, therefore, that they had nothing of value at the time the payment came due on January 1, 1927. This contention is without merit. The contract provided for one purchase price payable in installments, for several things, and even if one of them had been valueless from the beginning, this would not have shown a total failure of consideration. It can neither be told what portion of the purchase price covered either patent nor what portion thereof covered the respective years during which it was contemplated either patent would be in force. Not only was a partial failure of consideration not pleaded, but upon the objection of the appellants the court refused to admit any evidence as to the respective values of what had been received and what had not been received. The appellants may have profited greatly or slightly by the things they actually received under the contract, but, under the pleadings and the evidence, the court could not find as to the respective values nor as to what portion of the consideration had failed. The appellants rely on the following quotation from Gibbs v. Hersman, 73 Cal. App. 732, 239 P. 350, 352: "It is a fundamental rule of contracts that where, from the nature of the contract, it is evident that the parties contracted on the basis of the continued existence of the thing to which it relates, the subsequent perishing or destruction of the thing will excuse the performance. * * *" See, also, La Cumbre G. & C. Club v. Hotel Company, 205 Cal. 422, 271 P. 476.

It neither appears here that all of the things concerning which these parties contracted were subsequently destroyed, nor does it appear from the nature of the contract that the installment payments, which varied in different years, were so differentiated between the things sold or so related to the values to be received during the respective years, as to excuse, in the absence of any other evidence, the payment of any further installment, in the event of the destruction of the utility of one of the things sold.

It may well be that the appellants have suffered a partial failure of consideration, although this was neither pleaded nor presented during the trial of this action. It does not appear, however, that any injustice will result from the judgment appealed from, since three additional installments of the purchase price, amounting to $7,500, have matured since this action was filed. If other suits are filed to recover those installments, by proper pleading and proper presentation of the matter any rights of the appellants can be protected and full justice done.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

MANUEL v. HICKS IRON WORKS et al.

Sac. 4573.

Supreme Court of California.

Sept. 27, 1932.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 27, 1932.

1. Limitation of actions ⇐24(2).

Action for contribution is not founded on written instrument, on which parties were originally liable, and hence is barred two years after plaintiff's payment of amount due (Code Civ. Proc. § 339, subd. 1).

2. Limitation of actions ⇐197(1).

Evidence held not to show that note was extinguished by guarantor's payment thereof, so as to render two-year, instead of four-year, statute of limitations applicable to his action thereon against maker and coguarantors (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337, 339, subd. 1).

The evidence showed that corporate maker of note was in difficulties; that plaintiff's coguarantors requested him to take over note, which he did; that he received assignment of note and claim against deceased guarantor's estate; that corporation subsequently executed chattel mortgage to plaintiff as additional security; and that contemporaneous agreement, reciting that plaintiff purchased note in consideration of coguarantors' guarantee of payment and promise to continue liable with plaintiff for principal, if not paid by corporation, was executed.

3. Guaranty ⇐104.

Estate of deceased guarantor of corporation's note, purchased by coguarantor, held liable on guaranty, irrespective of other guarantors' agreement with purchaser to guarantee interest and continue liable for principal, if not paid by maker.

4. Guaranty ⇐104.

Guarantor of note, whose liability is secondary and on independent contract, may purchase note.

Appeal from Superior Court, Calaveras County; J. A. Smith, Judge.

Action by M. H. Manuel against the Hicks Iron Works, John T. Scott, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants Scott and another appeal.

Affirmed.

Carr & Guiler, Sterling Carr, F. P. Walsh, Charles S. Wheeler, Charles S. Wheeler, Jr., and Walter Slack, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Edw. R. Solinsky, of San Francisco (Charles P. Snyder, of San Andreas, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This is an action by one of several guarantors of a promissory note, against the maker and other guarantors, to recover on the same after payment. On December 17, 1920, defendant Hicks Iron Works executed the note in question, for the sum of $12,881, to Portuguese American Bank of San Francisco, payable on demand. At the same time a guaranty was executed on the back of the note by seven persons: Plaintiff, Manuel, defendants Bandy, Scott, Demarest, Solinsky, and Levy, and P. George Gow, now deceased. On February 25, 1922, the note was assigned to Pacific Securities Corporation, without recourse. It was not paid by the maker. Gow having died on June 8, 1921, a claim was presented against his estate. On December 7, 1922, plaintiff, Manuel, paid the entire amount of the principal and accrued interest, and took an assignment of the note from Pacific Securities Corporation, together with an assignment of the claim against the estate of Gow. On December 12, 1922, defendant maker executed to plaintiff a chattel mortgage upon certain of its property, as additional security; and, on the same day, all of the other guarantors save the deceased, Gow, signed an agreement acknowledging their continued liability on the note.

On December 12, 1924, plaintiff commenced this action against the other living guarantors and Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Co., executor of the estate of Gow, seeking recovery of the principal and interest thereof, together with costs and attorney's fees. By amended complaint foreclosure of the mortgage was sought. A demurrer by defendant Scott was overruled, as was his motion to strike. Several other defendants filed answers. At the trial it appeared that the mortgaged property had no realizable value, and judgment was entered as follows: Against defendant Hicks Iron Works, maker of the note, for $26,211.44, principal and interest, and $1,000 attorney's fees; against the other guarantors and the executor of the estate of Gow, each for one-seventh of the amount of the said judgment. Defendants Scott and Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Company appealed. The maker and the other nonappealing defendants are apparently insolvent.

[1] It is contended by appellants that, when plaintiff paid the note, the obligations represented by it and by the contract of guaranty were extinguished, and that plaintiff's sole remaining right against the other guarantors was upon their implied obligation to contribute in proportion to their liability, under the rule of such cases as Yule v. Bishop, 133 Cal. 574, 62 P. 68, 65 P. 1094; Bailes v. Keck, 200 Cal. 697, 254 P. 573; Id., 200 Cal. 800, 254 P. 577; Marston Co. v. Fisheries Co., 201 Cal. 715, 258 P. 933; Both v. Friedman, 82 Cal. App. 174, 255 P. 222. But the action for contribution is not founded upon an instrument in writing, and the applicable statute of limitations is two years from the date of payment. Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 339, subd. 1; Bray v. Cohn, 7 Cal. App. 124, 93 P. 893. The note was paid by Manuel on December 7, 1922, and this action was brought December 12, 1924. Hence, if this contention of defendants is correct, plaintiff's cause of action is barred.

Plaintiff takes the position, however, that he purchased the note, that no discharge thereof resulted, and that he brings this action on the note as a holder, in which case the statute of limitations is four years (Code Civ. Proc. § 337). Plaintiff concedes that he cannot escape his own obligation as to one-seventh of the amount due, and seeks to recover only this same proportion from the other guarantors.

[2] The parties have discussed at length the question whether the rule of the cases of Yule v. Bishop and others cited above applies to guarantors as well as to joint obligors on the note, such as comakers. Conceding, without deciding, that it would apply in the ordinary case of payment by a guarantor, we are of the opinion that the special circumstances here leave no room for the implication that the note was extinguished by plaintiff's payment. The corporation was in difficulties, and the other guarantors, with the exception of Gow, requested plaintiff to take over the note, which he did. It is clear, moreover, that all of the parties considered the transaction to be a purchase of the same and not a satisfaction and discharge. Three important facts appear in this connection: First, plaintiff received an assignment of the note and of the claim theretofore presented to the estate of Gow; second, the corporation subsequently executed a chattel mortgage to plaintiff as additional security for the note; third, at the time of the giving of the chattel mortgage, an agreement was executed, in which plaintiff was designated as party of the second part, and the other guarantors as parties of the first part. This agreement provides: "The said party of the second part theretofore purchased and acquired the said promissory note expressly upon the promise and agreement upon the part of the parties of the first part that they would execute and deliver this agreement to the party of the second part. * * * The said parties of the first part do hereby promise and guarantee the payment to the party of the second part of the monthly interest upon said promissory note at the time and in the manner as therein specified; and the parties of the first part do further promise, agree and guarantee that as to the principal of the said promissory note in the event that the same, or any part thereof, should not be paid by the said Hicks Iron Works as and when the same shall become due and payable that the said parties of the first part and M. H. Manuel shall together be and shall continue to be jointly and severally liable for the payment of the said entire principal sum, or such part thereof, as shall not be paid by the said Hicks Iron Works."

[3, 4] Taken together, these facts are inconsistent with the view that the note was discharged when Manuel paid it. The record shows positively that the parties understood it to be a purchase. It is objected that the above agreement is not binding upon Gow because he was not living at the time it was signed. However, this suit is not upon the agreement but upon the note and guaranty; and the agreement is relevant only in tending to show that Manuel purchased the note, and, if he did, then the estate of Gow is liable because of the original guaranty, irrespective of the agreement. Nor can we see any sound reason why a guarantor, whose liability is secondary (Bank of Italy v. Symmes (Cal. App.) 5 P.(2d) 956), and on a contract independent of the note itself (Adams v. Wallace, 119 Cal. 67, 51 P. 14; Murphy v. Hellman Com. T. & S. Bank, 43 Cal. App. 579, 185 P. 485), cannot purchase a note. Normally, perhaps, his payment would be construed as a satisfaction thereof, leaving him with only a right to contribution. But the record shows that this is not a normal case, and it fully sustains the conclusion of the lower court that the note was purchased by plaintiff.

The judgment is affirmed.

Mortgage on lease containing option to purchase fee held to cover option as well as lease (Civ. Code, § 2926).

2. Landlord and tenant ⇐81(1).

Option to purchase fee contained in mortgage of leasehold held mortgagable interest (Civ. Code, § 2926).

Such an option covenant in the lease is a real covenant running with the land which passes with a grant of the lease, and therefore, under Civ. Code, § 2926, providing that a mortgage is a lien on everything that would pass by a grant of the property, is subject to the lien of the mortgage.

3. Landlord and tenant ⇐76(2).

Covenant against assignment contained in lease is not violated by giving mortgage on lease.

Such covenant is not violated by giving a mortgage on the lease, since mortgaging a lease does not constitute a technical assignment of the lease, and since only technical assignments are prohibited by covenant against assignment contained in a lease.

4. Landlord and tenant ⇐76(1).

Covenants limiting free alienation of property such as covenants against assignment must be strictly construed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Action by Theodore S. Chapman and others for declaratory relief against the Great Western Gypsum Company and others. From the judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

For prior opinion, see 8 P.(2d) 486.

Neil S. McCarthy, Earl L. Banta, and George J. Stoneman, all of Los Angeles (William A. Barnhill, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellants.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and Henry F. Prince, all of Los Angeles (Herbert F. Sturdy, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

Defendants appeal from a judgment in an action for declaratory relief, decreeing that a certain mortgage held by plaintiffs constitutes a lien on certain described real property prior to any claim of defendants. The facts are not materially in dispute, and are as follows:

In 1922 the Southern California Chemical Company, a California corporation, owned certain real property in the city of Los Angeles. On May 1 of that year the chemical company leased the property in question at a stipulated monthly rental for a period of three years to the Great Western Gypsum Company, an Arizona corporation. The lease contained the following provision:

"The Chemical Company hereby agrees that the Gypsum Company shall have, and does hereby give an option to purchase the herein demised premises at the dates, and for the sums following, to-wit:

"For the sum of $22,000.00 cash if said option is exercised on or before May 1, 1923;

"For the sum of $23,000.00 cash if said option is exercised on or before May 1, 1924; and

"For the sum of $24,000.00 if said option is exercised on or before May 1, 1925."

The lease expressly provided that the lessee should not let the premises nor assign the lease without the written consent of the lessor. Another clause provided that the lease should be binding upon and inure to the benefit of the successors and assigns of the parties, provided that no assignment should be made without the written consent of the lessor. The lease was properly recorded December 7, 1922.

In 1924 the lessee, the Great Western Gypsum Company, executed certain promissory notes in favor of Theodore S. Chapman, H. H. Merrick, E. M. Chapman, T. L. Chapman, J. Gorin, and J. H. Eaton, and simultaneously therewith, on August 5, 1924, executed, as security for said notes, a mortgage upon certain real and personal properties in this state and in the state of Nevada. Among the other properties included within the terms of the mortgage was "all of the right, title and interest of the mortgagor, in and to that certain Indenture of Lease made the first day of May, 1922, by Southern California Chemical Company * * * to the mortgagor herein, granting a leasehold estate with option to purchase that certain lot or parcel of land described as follows: [Here follows a detailed description of the leased premises.]" At the end of the provision containing the list of the properties included within the mortgage appears this clause: "It being the intention of the mortgagor to mortgage to the mortgagees, all of the property of the mortgagor now held by it, of whatsoever nature, real, personal or mixed, and wheresoever situate." This mortgage was properly recorded in Los Angeles county both as a real and chattel mortgage on August 16, 1924.

On August 9, 1924, H. H. Merrick, one of the mortgagees, conveyed and assigned all of his right, title, and interest in and to the mortgage to De Witt-Blair Realty Company. This assignment was properly recorded August 16, 1924.

On February 13, 1925, just a few months before the lease of the gypsum company was to expire, that company assigned, with the written consent of the lessor, all of its interest in and all of its rights under the lease to the De Witt-Blair Realty Company. This assignment was properly recorded on February 13, 1925. The realty company was now one of the mortgagees of the lease, and was also the assignee thereof. The trial court found, and under the circumstances there can be no doubt of the correctness of said finding, that the realty company at the time it accepted the assignment "had notice, actual and constructive, of the said mortgage of August 5, 1924. * * *"

On February 16, 1925, before the option contained in the lease had expired, De Witt-Blair Realty Company exercised the option, and secured from the lessor chemical company a conveyance of the fee. This conveyance was properly recorded April 17, 1925. On February 17, 1925, the realty company, conveyed the property to L. M. Boughton, who in turn, on February 26, 1925, conveyed the property to John T. Martin. The trial court found that neither Boughton nor Martin paid anything of value for the property, and that both had "actual and constructive notice of the said mortgage of August 5, 1924, and of the fact that said mortgage was a lien upon the indenture of lease of May 1, 1922, and upon the option to purchase contained therein."

Based on these facts, the trial court held that the mortgage of August 5, 1924, constituted a lien on both the lease and option; that, when the De Witt-Blair Realty Company with full knowledge of all the facts exercised the option and secured a conveyance of the fee, the mortgage became a lien on the fee title prior to any claim of the realty company; that Boughton and Martin secured no greater rights than were held by the realty company. It is the correctness of the conclusion that the mortgage constitutes a lien on the fee that is challenged on this appeal.

Stripped of all unnecessary facts, the problem involved can be simply stated as follows: An owner of a lease containing an option to purchase the fee mortgages the same to secure a debt. Thereafter the lessee-mortgagor assigns the lease to a third party who has full knowledge of the mortgage. The third party exercises the option and secures a conveyance of the fee. The ultimate legal question to be determined is whether or not under such circumstances the lien of the mortgage attaches to the fee in the hands of the third party or those who take with notice, from the third party.

[1, 2] Before this question can properly be determined it is necessary to determine several preliminary problems, viz.: First, did the mortgage cover the option as well as the lease? Second, was the option a mortgagable interest? Both of these questions must be answered in the affirmative.

We have no doubt of the correctness of the trial court's conclusion that the mortgage did in fact include, and was intended to include, the option as well as the leasehold interest. The language above quoted from the mortgage, both in the clause specifically describing the lease and in the general covering clause, can leave but little doubt that the parties intended to include the option when the lease was mortgaged. Even if this were not the fact, the same result would follow from the proper application of section 2926, Civil Code. That section provides that "a mortgage is a lien upon everything that would pass by a grant of the property." In Blakeman v. Miller, 136 Cal. 138, 68 P. 587, 89 Am. St. Rep. 120, a lessee assigned a lease containing an option to purchase without specifically mentioning the option. The court held that the assignment of the lease carried with it the option to purchase. It therefore follows that, since the option would pass by a grant or assignment of the lease, by virtue of the provisions of section 2926 of the Civil Code, supra, the option became subject to the lien of the mortgage.

Considerable portions of the briefs of counsel are devoted to a discussion of the question as to whether or not an option is an "interest in land." There are apparently two lines of authority on this subject, one holding that before its exercise the owner of an option based on a consideration has an equitable interest in the land; the other line of cases holding that the owner of such an option before its exercise has no interest, equitable or otherwise, in the land. The existence of these two lines of authority was recognized by this court in the case of Smith v. Bangham, 156 Cal. 359, at page 365, 104 P. 689, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 522. We do not find it necessary to decide in this case whether or not an option to purchase real property unconnected with an interest in property such as a lease would give the holder thereof an interest in the land which could be mortgaged, for the reason that we are of the opinion that, when an option to purchase is contained in a lease of the property, such option covenant is a real covenant running with the land. Since this is so, the option covenant, as all other real covenants contained in the lease, would pass by a grant of the lease, and therefore under section 2926 of the Civil Code, supra, such a covenant becomes subject to the lien of the mortgage. That an option covenant contained in a lease is a real covenant running with the land is well settled in this state. In the early case of Laffan v. Naglee, 9 Cal. 662, 70 Am. Dec. 678, the lessees assigned their interest in a lease. The court stated that "the first and most important question arising in this case is whether, by the legal effect of the assignment, the right to purchase the fee of Smith and wife passed to Laffan and Naglee?" On page 678 of 9 Cal., the court answered this question as follows: "As the covenant in reference to this pre-emptive right of purchase constituted an essential part of the lease itself, and, therefore, ran with the land, the several assignments * * * were ample to carry to the assignees, respectively, this right." See, also, Hall v. Center, 40 Cal. 63, and Blakeman v. Miller, supra. These cases establish the proposition that an option in a lease is a covenant running with land, passing to an assignee of the lease, and enforceable in equity against the lessor or his assigns. In Standard Oil Company v. Slye, 164 Cal. 435, 129 P. 589, the court held that a covenant to renew contained in a lease was a covenant running with the land. Such a covenant is not legally distinguishable in nature from a covenant to convey the entire fee. In that case, as in the instant case, the covenant was not made expressly binding on heirs and assigns, but that fact did not prevent this court from holding that the covenant ran.

[3-5] Appellants seek to distinguish these cases on the ground that, although ordinarily an option to purchase constitutes a real covenant running with the land, it cannot be so classified in the instant case, because here the lease contained a stipulation against assignment without the consent of the lessor. It is contended that the mortgage of the lease which apparently was made without the consent of the lessor violated this provision, and that the effect of such a provision is to make the covenant a personal one. We do not believe that either of these conclusions is correct. In the first place, we do not believe that a covenant against assignment contained in a lease is violated by the giving of a mortgage on the lease. It hardly needs citation of authority to the principle that covenants limiting the free alienation of property such as covenants against assignment are barely tolerated and must be strictly construed. Thus it has been held that a covenant against assignment is not violated by an assignment from one cotenant to another. Randol v. Scott, 110 Cal. 590, 42 P. 976. Likewise a covenant against assignment is not violated by a subletting. Cross v. Bouck, 175 Cal. 253, 165 P. 702; Stevinson v. Joy, 164 Cal. 279, 128 P. 751. These cases and many others that might be cited establish the rule that it is only a technical assignment that is prohibited by such a covenant. A mortgage of the lease, of course, does not constitute a technical assignment thereof. In this state a mortgage does not operate to transfer the title to the mortgaged property; it simply creates a lien thereon. The decisions in other states where the lien theory of mortgages prevails clearly hold that a covenant against assignment is not violated by the giving of a mortgage. Riggs v. Pursell, 66 N. Y. 193; Crouse v. Michell, 130 Mich. 347, 90 N. W. 32, 97 Am. St. Rep. 479; Dunlop v. Mulry, 85 App. Div. 498, 83 N. Y. S. 477, 1104; Badger Lumber Co. v. Parker, 85 Kan. 134, 116 P. 242, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 901.

Moreover, even if the mortgage did violate the covenant against assignment, we do not see how that fact could operate so as to make the option covenant a personal one. The assignment of a lease in violation of a covenant against assignment without the consent of the lessor is nevertheless a binding assignment which passes the leasehold estate, and with which runs all covenants touching the land. Such an assignment in violation of the covenant is, however, subject to the option in the lessor to forfeit the lease. The only remedy for the breach of such a covenant would be the exercise by the lessor of his option to forfeit the lease. Buchanan v. Banta, 204 Cal. 73, 266 P. 547; Garcia v. Gunn, 119 Cal. 315, 51 P. 684; Randol v. Tatum, 98 Cal. 390, 33 P. 433; Baker v. Maier & Zobelein Brewery, 140 Cal. 530, 74 P. 22. See, also, Sexton v. Chicago Storage Co., 129 Ill. 318, 21 N. E. 920, 923, 16 Am. St. Rep. 274. It would only serve to unduly extend this opinion to further discuss this phase of the case. From the foregoing discussion we take it that the following two propositions have been fully established.

1. That the mortgage of the lease included the option and constituted a lien thereon. This result follows either because the option was specifically or impliedly included within the mortgage, or because the covenant of option ran with the leasehold interest.

[6] 2. That the option covenant, inasmuch as it does not involve personal trust, confidence, or credit, is a real covenant running with the reversionary interest, and any lien thereon binds the grantees and assigns of the lessor who took with notice of the mortgage.

[7] Now we turn to a discussion of the final and most important question involved, and that is whether or not the lien of the mortgage on the option attached to the fee when the De Witt-Blair Realty Company acquired the fee by exercising the mortgaged option, and had actual, as well as constructive, knowledge of the mortgage held by plaintiffs. It must be remembered that, although the De Witt-Blair Realty Company was not one of the original mortgagees, it became a mortgagee shortly after the execution of the mortgage by virtue of the fact that on August 9, 1924, H. H. Merrick, one of the mortgagees, assigned all of his right, title, and interest in the mortgage to that company. Later that company also became the owner by assignment of the mortgaged lease and option. When the De Witt-Blair Realty Company exercised the option and secured the fee, it had actual as well as constructive knowledge of the existence of the mortgage lien on the option. Under such circumstances we can see no escape from the conclusion that both from the standpoint of law and equity the lien of the mortgage attaches to the fee. No case directly in point seems to have been decided in this state, but we are not without analogies in this state and cases from other jurisdictions. It has twice been held by this court that the lien of a mortgage on a contract to purchase real property attaches to the fee acquired by the completion of the contract of purchase by an assignee of the mortgagor with notice of the mortgage. Benedict v. Peppers, 58 Cal. 618; Tripler v. McDonald Lumber Co., 173 Cal. 144, 159 P. 591. In both of these cases a mortgage was executed on premises when the mortgagor held simply a purchase contract. Thereafter the purchase contract was assigned by the mortgagor to those who took with notice of the mortgage. Such assignees completed the contract and secured the fee. In each instance the lien of the mortgage was held to attach to the fee in the hands of such purchasers. Appellants contend that these cases are not authority on the point under discussion, for the reason that a vendee under a contract to purchase has an "interest in land," while an optionee has not. The phrase "interest in land" is meaningless, unless the total of the rights included therein is defined. It is true that a contract to purchase land is bilateral in the sense that it may be enforced by either party, while an option contract is enforceable only by the holder thereof, and the option holder cannot be compelled to buy. But in both cases the owner of the land has parted with one of the rights incidental to ownership—the right to convey the property to any but the vendee or the optionee. Whether this constitutes bestowing on the optionee an "interest" in the land we deem to be immaterial. We are of the opinion that the two situations are sufficiently analogous, so that the above two cases are some authority for the proposition that, when the assignee of a mortgaged option contained in a lease, with knowledge of the mortgage, exercises the option and secures the fee, the lien of the mortgage attaches to the fee.

In cases from other jurisdictions it has been held that a lien on an option or pre-emptive right attaches to the fee title acquired by the exercise of the mortgaged right, whether such mortgaged right is exercised by the mortgagor or by his assignee with notice. In Boon v. Kent, 42 N. J. Eq. 131, 7 A. 344, 345, one Thompson owned certain riparian lands. These lands carried with them a statutory option or pre-emptive right to require a lease or conveyance by the state of certain adjoining submerged lands. Thompson conveyed the riparian lands to Subers. Subers gave Thompson a mortgage on the riparian lands, which was recorded. Subers then conveyed the riparian lands to D. Kent, who thereupon exercised the option or pre-emptive right, and secured the fee to the submerged lands from the state. D. Kent then conveyed the riparian and submerged lands to E. S. Kent. Boon by various assignments became the holder of the note and mortgage. Boon sought to foreclose the mortgage and to impose the lien thereof on both the riparian and submerged lands. E. S. Kent contended "that the land conveyed by the grant from the state should not be included in, but should be excluded from, the sale of the mortgaged premises under any decree of foreclosure and sale which may be made in this suit; and that the title thereto did not pass by the deed from Thompson to Subers, but was in the state; and he insists that the complainants ought not in equity to have the benefit of the subsequent purchase of the state's title by Daniel H. Kent." The court held, however, that the mortgage was a lien on both the riparian land and on the option or pre-emptive right, and that, upon an exercise of the pre-emptive right by an assignee with notice of the mortgage, the lien of the mortgage attached to the fee.

In Mackenzie v. Building & Loan Association, 28 Canada Supreme Court Rep. 407, Austin and Arthurs leased certain lands to Thompson for a period of twenty-one years with an option to purchase any time within the first ten years. Thompson mortgaged the lease to the Building & Loan Association. Thereafter, by mesne assignments, the lease was transferred to Mackenzie, subject to the mortgage. Mackenzie exercised the option and secured the fee from one Britton who had acquired the interest of the lessors. Under the law of Ontario, where the land was located, the fee owner can collect rents from either the lessee or the mortgagee of the lease. Mackenzie sought by this action to collect rents from the Building & Loan Association on the theory that it was only a mortgagee of the term. The mortgagee contended that the lien on the lease and option attached to and became a lien on the fee when the option was exercised by one with notice of the mortgage. The court affirmed the contention of the mortgagee Building & Loan Association, and held that the mortgage lien on the lease and option became a lien on the fee, prior to any claim of Mackenzie, when the option was exercised by one with notice of the mortgage.

In Harsh v. Sutton, 180 Ill. App. 651, one McDavid, the owner of certain real property, gave to the Glovers an option to buy the property. This option, based upon a consideration, is referred to by the court as a "bond." The Glovers assigned the bond or option to A. W. and Joseph Sutton, who gave back a note and mortgage. This mortgage was recorded. A. W. and Joseph Sutton then assigned the bond or option to Frank Sutton. Frank Sutton exercised the option and secured the fee. Frank then conveyed the fee to Martin and Fleming. In the meantime the mortgage and note had been transferred to Harsh. Harsh sought to foreclose his mortgage on the theory that, although when it was given it amounted to no more than a lien on the bond or option, it became a lien on the fee when the option was exercised. At page 656 the court said:

"Upon the contention that A. W. Sutton and Joseph Sutton had no title at the time they executed the mortgage in question, Frank Glover, who was the original owner of this bond assigned the bond prior to the date of this mortgage to A. W. Sutton and Joseph Sutton, they thereby became the equitable owners of these premises subject to the payment of the amount due McDavid for the balance of the purchase money due him, and the mortgage which they gave at that time became a lien and attached to their equitable interest, whatever it may have been, and if thereafter they had obtained the title from McDavid by the payment of the amount due McDavid and obtained a deed therefor, their mortgage contained [containing] the words mortgage and warrant would have attached to and become a lien on the title which they then acquired, and Frank Sutton who obtained the bond by assignment from them after this mortgage was placed upon record could obtain no greater rights in the premises than they had at the time that it was assigned to him. And by completing the payment of the amount due on the McDavid bond he obtained his title through the specific performance proceeding from McDavid, subject to the mortgage executed by A. W. Sutton and Joseph Sutton; and the contention that A. W. Sutton and Joseph Sutton had no interest in the premises which could be made subject to a mortgage at the time they executed this note and mortgage is not tenable. * * * To permit the assignee of the original bond to secure these premises with this lien of record thereon merely by paying the amount due on the original bond would be inequitable and unjust. The record discloses that the present owners of the premises purchased the same with this mortgage on record and they were required to take notice thereof, and cannot be heard to say that they did not know this mortgage was not paid, the title they took was subject to it, it was their duty to ascertain the rights of the parties therein."

In Bank of Louisville v. Baumeister, 87 Ky. 6, 7 S. W. 170, Mrs. Bullitt, the owner of land, executed to Spalding a lease with option to purchase. Spalding mortgaged the lease and option to one Olds. Spalding thereupon exercised the option, paying part of the purchase price in cash, and gave back a purchase-money mortgage to Mrs. Bullitt to secure the balance. After acquiring the fee subject to the purchase-money mortgage, Spalding mortgaged his interest to the Bank of Louisville, and later gave another mortgage to Baumeister. On foreclosure, all parties being joined, the court decreed the priority of the various liens as follows:

(1) The purchase-money mortgage of Mrs. Bullitt. All parties apparently conceded that this lien was entitled to priority over all the other liens. (2) The lien of Olds on the lease and option became a lien on the fee when the option was exercised. (3) The lien of the Bank of Louisville was declared subject to the lien of Olds. (4) The lien of Baumeister was declared subject to the other three liens. On appeal, the Bank of Louisville contended that Olds had no lien on the fee, for the reason that all he had was a lien on an option. The court held, however, that the lien of Olds on the lease and option became a lien on the fee when the fee was acquired by the exercise of the option by one with knowledge of the mortgage.

In Yellow Chief Coal Company v. Preston, 166 Ky. 669, 179 S. W. 602, the court held that, when the holder of an option which he knows to have been mortgaged exercises it, the lien of the mortgage on the option attaches to the fee. After first stating the rule that a mortgage on land to be acquired in the future is ordinarily void against bona fide purchasers, the court stated (page 602 of 179 S. W.): "But the rule has no application here; for the corporation did have such an estate in the land as could be conveyed by mortgage. It was the owner by assignment of the option contracts, and, as expressly held in the case of Bank of Louisville v. Baumeister, supra, a contract for an option to purchase real estate at an agreed price within a specified time may be sold, assigned, or mortgaged. Section 2341, Kentucky Statutes. When the contract was completed, and the legal title taken, it inured to the benefit of the mortgagees, who are the bondholders in this case." See, also, Shooters Island Shipyard Co. v. Standard Shipbuilding Corp. (C. C. A.) 293 F. 706; Owens v. Hughes, 188 Wis. 215, 205 N. W. 812; Point Breeze Ferry & Imp. Co. v. Bragaw, 47 N. J. Eq. 298, 20 A. 967.

From the reasoning in the above cases it clearly follows that the trial court herein correctly held that the mortgage constituted a lien on the option, and that, when the option was exercised by the De Witt-Blair Realty Company, with actual and constructive knowledge of the mortgage, the interest acquired by the realty company by the exercise of the option became subject to the lien of the mortgage. The transferees of the realty company likewise having actual and constructive knowledge of the mortgage, of course, stand in no better position than the realty company.

The appellants with some confidence rely on the case of Ludy v. Zumwalt, 85 Cal. App. 119, 259 P. 52, as establishing a contrary rule in this state. In that case Zumwalt owned a bare option to purchase certain real property. This option was unconnected with any other interest in the property. While the option was still alive, but before it was exercised, Zumwalt entered into a contract with a canal company to supply the land with water. This contract created a lien on the interest of Zumwalt and was recorded. Zumwalt later exercised the option, acquired the fee, and gave back a purchase-money mortgage to the optioner. Having defaulted on the purchase-money mortgage, the holders thereof sought to foreclose. The canal company contended its lien was prior to that of the purchase-money mortgage. The court found that the purchase-money mortgagee had no actual notice of the contract lien, and held that a bare option was not such an interest in land so that a recorded lien thereon would give constructive notice thereof. Consequently the court properly held that the purchase-money mortgage had priority. On rehearing the appellate court stated, at page 133 of 85 Cal. App., 259 P. 52, 58: "If the Zumwalts, at the time of executing the contract with the appellant, were connected in any way with the record title to the property, then the position of appellant here would be impregnable; but, as stated, it is clear to our minds that at the time mentioned the Zumwalts had no more connection with the title to the property than any other person having no transaction with the owner of the land regarding said property." This quotation clearly indicates the distinction between the Zumwalt Case and the instant case. In the instant case the foregoing discussion has clearly indicated that the respondents were connected with the record title. In the instant case no question of constructive notice is involved. Here the Realty Company had actual as well as constructive notice of the mortgage. In the Zumwalt Case the controversy was between the optioner who held a purchase-money mortgage and the lienholder. In the instant case the controversy is between the optionee and the lienholder. The entire basis of the Zumwalt Case was that, when Zumwalt executed the contract with the canal company, he had no title to the property. By his contract he attempted to create a lien on property which he did not own. This could not serve as constructive notice to the real owners of the property. The case did not hold that the lien of the canal company did not attach to Zumwalt's interest—it merely held that the purchase-money mortgage had priority. For the above reasons the Zumwalt Case is not authority on the question here involved. Whatever was said in that case as to the nature of an option unconnected with a lease or other interest in land can have no application to a case where the option is so connected.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

COWART et al. v. UNION PAVING CO. et al.

L. A. 11053.

Supreme Court of California.

Sept. 23, 1932.

1. Municipal corporations ⇐538.

Court decreeing assessments for completed street improvement void must direct reassessment, though proceedings leading to original assessment were without jurisdiction (St. 1911, p. 746, § 28, as amended by St. 1923, p. 118, § 7).

2. Municipal corporations ⇐407(1).

Statute authorizing reassessment for street improvement is not unconstitutional as setting aside judgment declaring former assessment, for which Legislature had original power to provide, invalid (St. 1911, p. 746, § 28, as amended by St. 1923, p. 118, § 7).

3. Municipal corporations ⇐280(1).

Legislature may provide for municipal street improvement without requiring petition or providing for protest (St. 1911, p. 746, § 28 as amended by St. 1923, p. 118, § 7).

4. Municipal corporations ⇐407(1).

Statutes providing for reassessment, where property owner's consent, required by statute, to improvement is lacking, are constitutional; there being no fundamental obligation to obtain owner's consent or acquiescence (St. 1911, p. 746, § 28, as amended by St. 1923, p. 118, § 7).

5. Municipal corporations ⇐407(1).

Due notice of or hearing in original street improvement proceeding is unnecessary to render reassessment statute valid (St. 1911, p. 746, § 28, as amended by St. 1923, p. 118, § 7).

6. Municipal corporations ⇐514(1).

Remonstrance against proposed municipal improvement or failure to obtain sufficient initial petition does not affect right to reassessment (St. 1911, p. 746, § 28 as amended by St. 1923, p. 118, § 7).

7. Constitutional law ⇐68(4).

All questions respecting reassessment for street improvement, except that of due notice, are solely legislative; reassessment being independent proceeding resting on taxing power (St. 1911, p. 746, § 28, as amended by St. 1923. p. 118, § 7).

8. Municipal corporations ⇐514(2).

Phrase "any cause" in act providing for reassessment, where improvement assessment is void or unenforceable for any cause, includes jurisdictional defects (St. 1911, p. 746, § 28, as amended by St. 1923, p. 118, § 7).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Any," see Words and Phrases.]

9. Constitutional law ⇐68(4).

Exercise of taxing power can be limited only by Constitution, and court cannot inquire into policy of tax or limit Legislature's authority, exercised within such limitations.

10. Municipal corporations ⇐514(1).

Essentials of jurisdiction to order reassessment for municipal improvement are making of public improvement, imposition of or attempt to impose assessment, and nonpayment thereof (St. 1911, p. 746, § 28, as amended by St. 1923, p. 118, § 7).

11. Municipal corporations ⇐514(1).

Legislature has power to legalize and enforce moral obligation of property owners, benefited by municipal improvement, to pay therefor, and equitable right against their property, by providing for reassessment, where original assessment is void (St. 1911, p. 746, § 28, as amended by St. 1923, p. 118, § 7).

12. Constitutional law ⇐42.

Objections that reassessment act is unconstitutional and that original improvement proceedings were not conducted fairly because of departure from statutory requirements are unavailable to owners of property reassessed after performance of work (St. 1911, p. 746, § 28, as amended by St. 1923, p. 118, § 7).

13. Municipal corporations ⇐514(11).

Reassessment for municipal improvement is not limited to lands originally assessed, but may include benefited lands in enlarged district (St. 1911, p. 746, § 28, as amended by St. 1923, p. 118, § 7).

City may assess railroad property, used as part of railroad's general system, for street improvements in district wherein located by same method as in assessing other lands in district.

TYLER, Justice pro tem.

This action was brought to enjoin defendants from proceeding to collect assessments levied under proceedings instituted under the Improvement Act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730), and from issuing any bonds under the Improvement Bond Act of 1915 (St. 1915, p. 1441).

The work was done under a district plan, and was fully and properly completed, and the expense thereof was placed against an assessment district. The city of Bakersfield took its initial step to make the improvements in August, 1924, by passing a resolution of intention, No. 499, for the paving of M street for the full length of four blocks. A protest was filed, and the city abandoned the proceedings without making any express finding as to whether or not the protest filed was by the owners of a majority of the area of the land within the proposed assessment district. Thereafter, the city council on October 27th passed a new resolution of intention concerning the work. This resolution was numbered 503. The work and the district was substantially different and distinct from that provided in and by the resolution of intention, No. 499. A protest was again filed, against the latter resolution. The city council found that it was not a protest of the owners of more than one-half of the area of the property to be assessed. The work was thereafter performed, no attempt being made to enjoin it. After completion of the work, an assessment was filed and a hearing was had upon it. Protests were filed by the owners of certain lands affected thereby on the ground that the assessment was so excessive as to be confiscatory. The protests were overruled by the city council, and the present action followed. After trial, the court found, in accordance with the contentions of plaintiffs, that the city council had no power to initiate the proceedings whereby the improvements were made and assessments levied, by reason of the prohibitory clause of the Improvement Act which abated the proceedings for a period of six months under the protests filed to the original resolution of intention. It further found that a full hearing had been denied plaintiffs, and also that the assessment as to certain parcels of land was arbitrary and confiscatory. Judgment went in favor of plaintiffs, and the court issued a permanent restraining order against defendants, enjoining them from issuing any bonds in payment of the assessments on the property of plaintiffs, and from levying or collecting any part of such assessments, or from asserting any claim by reason of the proceedings taken under and following resolution of intention, No. 503. A reassessment was denied defendants on the ground that the city council had no jurisdiction to order the work by reason of the protest to the original resolution of intention.

It is respondents' contention that the judgment must be affirmed for the reason, as the trial court found, that the protest to the original resolution was regular, and, as further proceedings could not be instituted for a period of six months thereafter by reason of section 6 of the Improvement Act (as amended by St. 1915, p. 1465, § 3), the council was without jurisdiction to order the work at the time it did. They further claim that the assessment, being confiscatory, is therefore void.
